STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

MISSISSAUGA TRAIN FIRE

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of this government and, I know, every member of this Legislature to say thank you to the residents of Mississauga and all those who played supportive roles during the events of last week.

Courage, forbearance, grace and compassion, these and a host of other words can be used to describe those involved in the largest evacuation in our country's history. With the eyes of the world on Mississauga last week, the actions of those people did the rest of us proud. All through that hectic week we received some incredulous phone calls from officials in other countries questioning how an evacuation of 240,000 people could proceed so well with so few incidents.

There were those prior to the evacuation who would have said it was impossible. But those residents, aided by courageous police and firemen, the Canadian Red Cross, St. John Ambulance, the Salvation Army, Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, humane societies, many other organizations and a vast army of volunteers, did it.

These people have written a new, and for a change, inspiring chapter in the melancholy history of disasters. I think it is also important to note, with many parts of the world in chaos and with some degree of divisiveness here at home, the residents of Mississauga have taught us that we as Canadians can surmount any difficulty when we pull together in a common cause. They have taught us what we can accomplish with compassion and plain, old-fashioned good neighbourliness.

The residents of Mississauga, Canada's ninth largest city, are a typical cross-section of people from all walks of life who make up the population of Canada. To the pessimists across this land I say, "Look to the people of Mississauga and those who helped them to see what we can accomplish in the face of adversity."

As for the accident itself, I want to assure the members of the Legislature, the residents of Mississauga and the other citizens of our province a full and complete investigation is under way and has been under way since the outset. As a government, we are determined to ensure such a potential catastrophe and large-scale inconvenience to our citizens does not happen again. As the investigation proceeds, we will be keeping the Legislature and the public informed of our findings.

At this point I had hoped to read into the record a list of the organizations, companies and other groups that played such a critical role in supporting local and provincial officials as they coped with the events of last week. That list is extensive and is still being compiled by Mississauga officials. As one who saw at first hand the efforts put out by so many, I can only repeat my thanks to all of them involved in the enormity of that effort.

In the gallery, I would like to commend to this House four people, representatives of all who played crucial and exemplary roles on behalf of the citizens of Mississauga and of all Ontario last week. One of them sprained her ankle during the course of the week, but still carried on as an inspiration to her citizens.

Another made the initial decision to evacuate. His coolness under an immense amount of pressure made a tremendous personal impression on everyone.

The third heads the Mississauga fire department. Words really are inadequate to describe the courage and dedication of those in the front line of this particular battle. At this time certainly our thoughts and our prayers go out to firefighter John Engel in the Queensway Hospital. We all wish his recovery. He is not forgotten.

The fourth is from the Canadian Red Cross, representing all the volunteers and agencies. One has only to ask any policeman or fireman what those volunteers meant to the operation and the evacuees.

Let this House salute Mississauga Mayor Hazel McCallion, Peel Regional Police Chief Douglas Burrows, Chief Gordon Bentley of the Mississauga fire department and Brigadier-General James F. Westhead of the Canadian Red Cross.

Applause.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: On a point of privilege, if I may for a moment, I would like to thank the Solicitor General for his kind remarks in regard to the people of Mississauga. I certainly would like to share in his remarks in giving credit to the four people sitting in the gallery. As a representative of that area, it makes one very proud to have them here after that having happened and to be able to express to them our good wishes and our congratulations. It is a pleasure for me to do so.

Mr. Sargent: I think this House should express its thanks to the Solicitor General too.

Mr. Kennedy: I too would identify myself with the tributes that have been paid in recognizing the service and duty, I think it can be fairly stated, above and beyond the normal call.

On reflection, I think we have a spirit not only of that recognition but of thankfulness that there were no casualties other than those the Attorney General mentioned, and we wish John Engel speedy recovery.

I add my tribute to Mayor McCallion, Chief of Police Doug Burrows, Fire Chief Gord Bentley, and of course Brigadier-General Westhead who represents the Red Cross, and to all those other volunteer agencies the Attorney General has referred to who will later be recognized.

Mr. Cassidy: I think the representatives of Mississauga who are here should know that for many years to come their work and the work of thousands of other people working with them or for them as volunteers in the evacuation and in the emergency in Mississauga will be studied and seen as a model throughout this continent and, as a matter of fact, throughout the world.

I want to join with other tributes that have been paid to the work all the people of Mississauga and the authorities of Mississauga carried out in assuring the emergency was handled without any loss of life.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Liberal Party, in this case, we would like to associate ourselves with those remarks made by the Solicitor General. I would say the people who have been recognized on an individual basis in the gallery today certainly showed true grit through this potentially very disastrous situation.

We want also to commend publicly the Solicitor General for the fine job he did under very trying circumstances.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it wouldn't be remiss if we also, because we do this even more rarely than commending the Solicitor General, commend the press for the most responsible job I believe they did in covering this. Of course, we all thank God the disaster wasn't any more serious than it in fact was.

ORAL QUESTIONS

MISSISSAUGA TRAIN FIRE

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have a question relating to the Mississauga problem. Can the Attorney General tell us in the House this afternoon whether he has advised either Mississauga or the residents of that area on how to approach the liabilities, the costs for what happened in this disaster? Could he also tell us whether the province of Ontario intends to sue Canadian Pacific for the costs involved, the extra OPP, the ambulance service and all the associated provincial costs related to this?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, so far as the cost to the government of Ontario is concerned for the OPP, ambulance, and Ministry of Health, which come immediately to mind, I have instructed the law officers of the crown to meet immediately to determine the appropriate action that might be commenced. Of course I think it is too early to state who might be sued in these circumstances, but certainly the odd name comes to mind. We will certainly pursue the appropriate legal avenues in this respect. I expect to have more to report back to the House on this in the relatively near future.

In so far as the citizens of Mississauga are concerned, I have instructed my law officers to render whatever assistance might again be appropriate to the solicitors employed by the city of Mississauga. Furthermore, the mayor of Mississauga and I have discussed what assistance might be given to individual citizens who have losses, either through their businesses or personally.

We have discussed with some of the Mississauga solicitors some vehicle which might provide citizens with helpful legal advice initially as to what they should consider, what they should contemplate, in so far as looking at reimbursement in relation to their losses is concerned. I understand there is a solicitor who is working on the possibility, for example, of establishing legal aid clinics for this initial advice.

Obviously, each citizen who has any significant loss may wish to consult his or her own solicitor as to what might be the most effective method to recover out-of-pocket expenses or any other loss but, certainly, we were addressing this question over the weekend and will continue to address it in the days ahead.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: Would the Attorney General perhaps answer a somewhat philosophical question? Would he not agree that the province should not get into compensating Mississauga for the loss and the over-budgetary expenses for this disaster, but that compensation for those funds should come from those who caused the accident—if you want them to remain nameless at the moment—or are responsible for it, and not from the taxpayers' dollars?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I agree entirely with that.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, the inquiry is to be made by the Canadian Transport Commission, a federal agency. In view of the fact that there are four levels of responsibility in an incident such as this—federal, provincial, regional and municipal—could the minister enlighten the House as to the liaison that might take place or the role the province will play in this inquiry? Are we to be a partner in this or will the province be giving testimony? Could he enlighten us on that, sir?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I will attempt to do that. The Canadian Transport Commission has announced the commencement of an inquiry, I think on December 4. I am not sure of the state of that inquiry at this time because I had a discussion about this with the federal Minister of Transport at the end of last week, the Honourable Donald Mazankowski, and indicated to him that I felt there should be a much broader inquiry than the type that would be contemplated by the legislation that requires the Canadian Transport Commission to have its own inquiry. The federal Minister of Transport certainly indicated his agreement with that and the federal government is presently considering the nature of the inquiry that should be held.

The federal minister has assured me that no decision will be made in relation to that broader inquiry until the province of Ontario has had an opportunity to make representations with respect to the scope of the inquiry, the terms of reference, of course, and, indeed, who is going to conduct it. I have also been assured the city of Mississauga would be consulted before any final decision is made and I have given the mayor of Mississauga my personal assurance I will do everything within my power to see that she and her colleagues are consulted.

I expect to be meeting with the federal Minister of Transport within the next few days, after meeting with my own colleagues in the provincial government, to discuss the details of this inquiry. We certainly don't want to drag our feet as far as the commencement of the inquiry is concerned; on the other hand, we want to be assured that the inquiry is structured properly and has the appropriate terms of reference.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Has the Attorney General or any of his officials had discussions with Canadian Pacific, and have they at any point indicated acceptance of any liability for the accident, one way or the other?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, they have not. The furthest they have gone at the present time is to express a willingness to make some gratuitous, voluntary payments to assist citizens who can establish losses. Obviously, I hesitate to offer legal advice beyond my mandate as Attorney General, but it seems to me that CP will have some difficulty in convincing me and anyone else it doesn't have to share a major portion of the liability.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: We should conclude from the answer given by the Attorney General that he is advising people not to sign any waiver form when they are reimbursed for "reasonable expenses." Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Again, my mandate does not go so far as to advise the individual citizen, but I think I can say on this occasion for any citizen to execute or sign a total release of all his or her claims before becoming aware of what the claims are and what his or her rights are obviously would be very unwise.

I am trying to get hold of a copy of the form CP apparently is using, to determine whether or not it represents simply an acknowledgement of payment for some out-of-pocket expenses or whether it purports to be a general and total release of all claims. Obviously citizens would be unwise to execute any such total release until they are absolutely confident as to the extent of their loss and the extent of their individual legal rights.

Mr. Peterson: I want to compliment the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere. It was an excellent supplementary and very much what I wanted to ask the Attorney General.

It seems to me the question is quite a serious one of people signing waivers under misconceptions about their legal rights. I am wondering whether the Attorney General would enter into discussions immediately with CP and any other possibly culpable parties to make sure they do not present those types of waiver forms for release. Failing that, if they do continue to use that, would he bring his good offices to bear to do something about that so that people are fully apprised of all their legal rights before they sign any kind of waiver?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have made my views known already to CP but I will again make them known, that they should not invite anybody to sign a final release until they are totally satisfied the individual is aware of the nature of his loss and his rights.

I cannot prevent individual citizens who are satisfied they know exactly what their losses are and want to settle their claims. It would obviously be an improper interference with their rights for me to say: "Look, you know what your losses are and you want to get paid immediately. Far be it from me to say that in those circumstances you shouldn't sign a release." But certainly, to CP and any others who may be involved, I will not hesitate to suggest to them their responsibilities as outlined by the member opposite.

GAS AND OIL PRICES

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have a question for the Premier in relation to his upcoming dinner on Thursday night. The Premier is scheduled to introduce Mr. Clark at the Conservative Party fund-raising dinner in Toronto this week.

An hon. member: Wednesday.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Wednesday, is it? Perhaps Joe will show up on Thursday.

Can the Premier tell us whether he intends to heap the same type of praise on Mr. Clark now, or on Wednesday night, as he did during the election campaign, in spite of the recent discussions on the oil prices?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is Wednesday night, and all members opposite are welcome if they're willing to pay the modest honorarium that is requested, for which I assume there is some reasonable tax deduction. Thursday night I think I'm working for the University of Ottawa—I'm not sure what I'm up to—but Wednesday night is the fund-raising dinner for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Martel: You're going to try to kick a football.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can only answer the member by saying I intend to be there. I'm never sure what my introductory remarks may be, but I can assure the honourable member, if he wants to check on them, the best way is to be there to hear whatever it is I may decide to say.

I know the member opposite might feel I shouldn't attend that dinner, as he and his leader avoided the Liberal Party of Canada's Ontario branch annual meeting over the weekend. I assume if the Liberal leader was there—his absence was noted certainly in the press.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, no, I know he was there. I guess the former Prime Minister of Canada said, "Member for Hamilton West where were you when I needed you in May?"

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: Since the Premier was there when Joe Clark needed him in May and look what he's done to him in Ontario, doesn't the Premier consider—since he won't come out publicly and say it—that if he boycotted that dinner Wednesday night he might tell them the Premier, the Conservative Party and the people of Ontario are just a little upset with the way he's been handling the negotiations on the oil costs and what it's going to do to this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think we made our position very clear on oil pricing, distribution of money, et cetera, a week ago today. The present government is faced with many difficult problems—this being one of them—which are the direct legacy of an incompetent government that preceded it.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since I have none of these problems and intend to open the New Democratic Party's federal convention in this city on Thursday morning with no hesitation at all in endorsing the federal leadership of Ed Broadbent, I would like to ask the Premier what the voters of Ontario are to read into his presence at this dinner on Wednesday evening, given all the indications that the Premier intends to spend the next provincial election campaign fighting against Joe Clark just as cheerfully as he used to fight federal and provincial elections campaigning against Pierre Trudeau?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what the leader of the New Democratic Party may read into my attendance there Wednesday evening other than to have what probably will be a very good meal. He's never been reluctant to accept a good meal, I've noticed.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I didn't say anything about it being free.

Mr. Makarchuk: For 150 bucks it ought to be good.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can't comment on the price structure. It's modest by some standards. It's certainly high for those of us who come from Brampton; we're not used to those higher figures.

The leader of the New Democratic Party is free to read into my attendance there anything beyond what would be normal. But in response to the general question, I am attending. Unlike the Liberal Party of Ontario, which is directly associated with the Liberal Party of Canada, I've never sensed that one should boycott a particular meeting where one might still have some message to take to the Prime Minister of Canada, or that one should neglect that opportunity. That's one reason we intend to be there.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, recognizing that the Premier has rejected the proposition put by my colleague from Rainy River, and recognizing that the weekend seemed to indicate the Prime Minister's position on the oil pricing agreement is increasingly fluid, what supplementary action does this government intend to take with respect to driving home once again its message to the Prime Minister of Canada in this intervening period until such time as an agreement is struck? What specific supplementary initiative does this government intend to take in these intervening days?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The views of the government of Ontario are still there before the government of Canada and the other Premiers of this country. We don't propose any new suggestions. I think they are there in essence and are very clearly understood. The process now is very simply for the government of Canada to make a decision, either unilaterally or in conjunction with the producing provinces.

I understand the member for Renfrew North was at the meetings over the weekend. I am sure he shares the point of view expressed by his national leader and former Prime Minister of Canada about the position taken by the Prime Minister or the Premier of this province, and he would totally agree with what he said.

MISSISSAUGA TRAIN FIRE

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Attorney General arising out of the Canadian Pacific Limited waiver forms now being requested in Mississauga.

Is the Attorney General aware CP has chosen a very restrictive form of waiver, which asks people receiving funds for out-of-pocket expenses to say explicitly, "I release all claims against Canadian Pacific Limited in any way connected with the derailment of CP train 54 in Mississauga at approximately midnight between November 10 and November 11, 1979"?

Since the minister's statements just now indicated he doesn't believe anybody should sign that kind of release form, and since, therefore, thousands of people should not be collecting out-of-pocket expenses because of what they give away in legal rights, will the Attorney General negotiate with CP so people can receive those out-of-pocket expenses without limiting the liability of CP to pay any other losses those people may have incurred?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I certainly will do that. The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere just moments ago sent me over a copy of the release form. I will immediately communicate with CP and suggest it does not use such a total and absolute release form. I will do that.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the Attorney General has taken that step, in light of the fact CP is refusing to compensate the residents of Mississauga and workers in Mississauga who lost a week's wages last week because of the evacuation, and because of the very large numbers involved and the very costly and lengthy legal processes that will ensue if those claims for lost income have to go through the courts, will the Attorney General also undertake to negotiate a mechanism with CP whereby residents or workers can be reimbursed for the lost income during the period of the evacuation?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I certainly will do what I can in that respect. As the member knows, my authority is obviously somewhat restricted when it comes to civil claims between individual citizens and individual companies, but in this particular case, I will not hesitate to pursue that path.

I was led to believe by CP they were going to attempt to expedite the settlement of claims for out-of-pocket expenses. From what I am hearing now this may not be the case; if so, I will express my personal concern to CP.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: We have here the potential for a great deal of litigation involving claims against various bodies, which could tie up our entire system, the minister's staff and all the lawyers in town for years. Has the minister investigated the possibility of people subrogating their rights to the province so the province can establish liability so the minister could work with the various individuals in order to avoid legal bills and all the other complications that might ensue? By subrogating such rights, his department could expedite the payment of such claims.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We are exploring and will continue to explore all reasonable avenues to avoid the problem referred to by the member for London Centre. I appreciate his concerns and I share his concerns. We will explore all possible avenues to prevent that situation developing.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since Canadian Pacific had profits of $368 million in the first nine months of this year and since its resources, obviously, far exceed the resources of any of the individuals who were affected by the evacuation, will the Attorney General undertake to negotiate, on behalf of the thousands of people affected, to have CP compensate people and workers in Mississauga not just for their out-of-pocket expenses but also for the very substantial sums that were involved in lost wages and income over the period of the evacuation?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think I have said everything I can usefully say on this subject at this time.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: Surely there must be a firm position the government can take, in view of the fact that these giant corporations have multi-billion-dollar liability policies. I have no sympathy whatsoever for the insurance companies and I don't think the Attorney General should have on the part of the province of Ontario, because we must teach these giant corporations a lesson that this can't happen again. The way to hit them is in their pocketbooks.

For the Attorney General not to take a strong position and say he's going to look into it, I think he must have a policy that everybody will be compensated.

Mr. Speaker: A new question. The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask him what he is going to do about this.

Mr. Speaker: You didn't ask a question.

Mr. Sargent: I'll ask the question now then.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Sargent: Just a minute, Mr. Speaker. This is more important than you think. It is important to the people.

Mr. Speaker: Order. You were given ample opportunity to put a question. You got up and made a statement.

Mr. Sargent: I'll ask the question again.

ENERGY POLICY

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier, on the basis of his speech to the Niagara Institute in Chicago last week.

Can the Premier say why he was so anxious to support the campaigns of such American spokesmen as Senators Byrd and Kennedy, Governor Brown and former Governors Reagan and Connally in their efforts to get the development of a North American common market in energy? Specifically, could the Premier say what are the common opportunities in energy he would like to see developed with the United States and Mexico? What would be the advantages for Canada and for Ontario and what studies has Ontario done on these common opportunities?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm delighted both the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party have read my prepared text for delivery in Chicago. Just to give a little bit of background, this was one of three or four seminars the Niagara Institute is conducting in the United States—one in Los Angeles, one in Chicago and I believe there is to be one in Atlanta. I'm not invited to the one in Atlanta; Jim Gillies got to go to Los Angeles; I was stuck with the midwest.

Mr. Peterson: You usually pick the warm one.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I wasn't asked.

Mr. T. P. Reid: After this speech, I know why.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have to tell the member it was very well received in Chicago.

Mr. Speaker: That wasn't the question that was asked either.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The audience there was representative of some union leaders from this country, some business leaders and people from the business and investment community in the midwestern United States, primarily Chicago, but also from the surrounding communities in Illinois and farther west.

The topic of my participation was Canada: The Perspective from a Provincial Premier. Besides that, what I was attempting to create at that meeting was an indication that in economic terms and in many respects Canada had much to offer. But I went one step further, which was contained in the speech, but which I really amplified at some greater length, when I pointed out that the traditional relationship between our two countries had been one primarily of a business communication, whether in terms of specific industries, such as the automotive industry, or in terms of state-provincial relationships. Take the area, for instance, of environmental concerns—water quality control agreements between the states and the provinces—or such things as the government of Canada through its participation in the International Joint Commission.

What I was endeavouring to create with our American neighbours was some consideration from them and ourselves that we have many things in common in terms of economic growth and development. We have many things in common with respect to the potential in the field of energy conservation, in terms of substitution of certain traditional energy sources, where a great deal of experimentation and development of technology is going on in both countries.

Quite frankly, I feel it's not the major issue in front of us, but when you have two nations such as the United States and Canada dealing basically in a common economic climate, there would be great merit in that instead of individual companies, or perhaps governments, dealing with problems, there should be some form of mechanism whereby we can explore certain economic policies that would be of mutual advantage to both nations. It is something that is happening in other parts of the world and we should not isolate ourselves from this possibility. I tried to convey that impression to our American neighbours in a very positive sense.

On Friday, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) was trying to suggest we were discussing the possible joint development of certain energy sources in this province. We don't have any. I am in no position to entertain that sort of concept. But surely we're in a position in this country to say that if certain things are happening in the conservation field, in the solar energy field, or certain things in this area are happening in the United States we should be in a position to explore them along with our neighbours. It was an attempt on my part to say something that I think is very fundamental.

The European community has found certain common objectives. I don't believe in a common market—I don't think that is politically or economically in the cards—but I believe in some approach in terms of common economic problems or opportunities with the nation to the south of us. I think we'd be very foolish not to explore these. That was really what the intent was in those two paragraphs.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the Premier not aware that his statements are very likely to be interpreted, and have been interpreted as meaning something approaching a common market in energy? Also, will the Premier explain how we get away from that impression when the Ontario government has already supported new export commitments for natural gas, which would have the effect of sending cheap natural gas into the United States, while we have to use expensive frontier gas some time in the future? Is the Premier saying we should be sending cheap energy to the United States now, in return for American investment that would increase still further their control of our petroleum industry here in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't know who is interpreting what I said in what way. I can tell the member the people who listened to it did not interpret it that way. I don't interpret it that way. I don't think any reasonable person who knows what the history of this is would interpret it in that fashion.

Of course, I'm not in favour of the export of a cheap commodity that has to be replaced by an expensive commodity within a short time frame.

Mr. Cassidy: What is the Premier's position?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would make it abundantly clear that we were talking to a group of people who have an interest in Canada, some of whom have companies doing business here now, who are considering potential future investment. While the member may not want to see the economy of this province continue to grow, I do.

I must tell the member, there was somebody on the panel from the great province of Quebec. He was offering people in the state of Illinois cheap power from Baie James. I took it upon myself to say that Ontario Hydro could compete with any export in the short term. Not only could we compete, but also we could do it more effectively, because we happen to be several hundred miles closer to the state of Illinois than the power is at Baie James.

In any event, the reality is the state of Illinois won't import power from either Ontario or Quebec, with the present transmission situation the way it is. I must confess to the member I said to the people there that if they were going to buy power, to buy it from Ontario and not from Baie James, which would cost more.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: Are we free to assume from the Premier's remarks that one of the areas of concern that he addressed in that speech would be the potential export of firm power from Ontario, especially with regard to remarks made earlier this month by Joseph M. Hendrie, chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in the United States, when he suggested it is possible some nuclear plants near large cities in the United States may have to be shut down because they haven't found a satisfactory way to evacuate people in case of some emergency? Is the Premier looking forward to the export of firm power?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The export of firm power was not mentioned either in the course of my visit with the people who were attending the seminar hosted by the Niagara Institute. That was not the purpose, as I said to the leader of the New Democratic Party. The only reason I—as sort of an added comment—just observed about our own surplus situation was because there was a gentleman there from Montreal who was talking about the potential of Baie James power. There was no discussion of firm export whatsoever, as I said.

Actually I think our markets are in Michigan, Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania. I would doubt, at this precise moment, as to the potential in crossing Michigan to get into the state of Illinois, going through the state of Indiana en route. So, to make a very short answer, it was not discussed.

I just point out to the honourable member, though, he will be interested to know that the state of Illinois now depends for its electrical supply about 38 per cent on nuclear energy.

Mr. Cassidy: Is it fair to infer from what the Premier has said about the common energy opportunities in areas such as conservation and solar energy that it is the desire of the Premier and of his government that these new areas of energy development in Ontario should be no more Canadian-owned than the petroleum industry is in Canada today?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I must confess I spoke for about 30 minutes and there were a lot of other issues I covered. I went back in history to sort out for them just who won the war of 1812. I mean, I took a lot of time leading up to this speech and I didn't get into all of these details. What did you say?

Mr. Nixon: That's a change.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What I really was trying to do was create the feeling that the United States and our nation, Canada, had a lot of things in common; that in the energy field, in economic developments we have more common areas we should be exploring than perhaps any other two nations of the world.

The honourable member may not like our American neighbours in a corporate sense, nor have the same feeling about the need for Canada to sit down with others to explore certain economic opportunities or objectives.

I just have to say it very simply—and I know the Leader of the Opposition mightn't agree with me if he were here—I just happen to think they are very good neighbours; they are important to us economically as we are to them. We can do some things together to our mutual advantage, and to isolate ourselves from the rest of the world, as the member would like us to do, would be very foolish indeed.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat concerned about the Premier's slide into continentalism here, because his speech on page 11 says, to quote the Premier, "In my opinion it would be valuable for us to structure a Canada-US commission of inquiry to pursue common energy and development opportunities." Further down on the page, to quote him again, he refers to "a common effort to develop common energy and developmental opportunity."

That is fairly radical, but my supplementary, Mr. Speaker is simply this: How can the Premier even consider sharing our depleting energy resources or opportunities to exploit them with the Americans when we can't even get an agreement on price and supply within Canada?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the answer to that is very simple and I am sure the member opposite knew the answer before he asked the question. I do not contemplate sharing depleting resources from this province with the United States. We don't have any depleting resources we can share with the United States in terms of oil or natural gas. I cannot speak for anyone other than the—

Mr. T. P. Reid: What about the economic opportunities you are talking about?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, no; I know the concept upsets the honourable members because they didn't think of it first. I understand that, but I would say to the honourable member, who, more than some over there, should have some understanding of what is happening in the United States—he doesn't want to isolate us from the tourist industry a bit; of course he doesn't—that I think we should be making a greater effort to involve ourselves with our neighbours in terms of common economic, energy conservation and energy technology matters.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It is not what this speech said.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Of course it is. I delivered the speech, I know what it said and I know what I said, and I just want to say to the honourable member that what I said makes a lot of sense. He can disagree with it; if they want to isolate themselves, the isolationist party of Canada, be my guest, but that is not where the long term future lies.

WCB MEDICAL SERVICES

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour. The Minister of Health also may have to reply to some part of it.

Has the minister or the Workmen's Compensation Board received many requests from doctors throughout the province who are considering opting out of Workmen's Compensation Board cases only? Is the minister aware that among the reasons for contemplating this action the doctors cite a great increase in the number of letters, phone calls and so forth from board personnel? These include requests for back-dated reports of several years ago with multiple questions for details concerning medical attention and procedures done for the board without a fee.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I asked the director of medical services this very question about a month and a half ago and he advised me there was no increase in the number of physicians who were indicating they would prefer not to deal with workmen's compensation problems.

As a physician I am well aware of the fact many doctors do find extra work involved in looking after compensation problems. The extra amount of work is troublesome and the board has recognized this in the past by paying a premium for those services. I may tell the member now, if it is of any reassurance, that the present fee-schedule negotiations going on between the Ontario Medical Association and the Ministry of Health will be followed by negotiations between the OMA and the WCB to work out a schedule of fees which will again recognize there is a certain amount of extra work involved in looking after patients with compensation problems.

Mr. B. Newman: The minister is aware there will always be some doctors who will still wish to opt out. Is he making any type of arrangements for the transferral of records to the board from those doctors who wish to opt out or to some other doctor if another individual wishes to take over that case?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The patient-physician relationship usually is such that a physician would endeavour to help a patient find a new doctor. Should the physician not be willing to do that—and I frankly find that unusual; I have never known anyone who wouldn't take part in that process—if the person would contact the board, the board would certainly endeavour to help him find another physician in the area.

Mr. Breugh: A supplementary: I would like to ask the minister if in his negotiations, or by whatever technique he would like to do it, he would find some mechanism whereby those doctors who now wish to charge additional amounts for reports used by the WCB in processing compensation claims would be dealt with in such a manner that the board receives full value for its dollars; or at the very least, would he find some mechanism so that those individuals who are already under duress would not have further financial duress added to them in the form of a $50 charge? I have at least one case of a doctor wanting about $150 to provide medical information for the processing of a claim.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The negotiations which should be forthcoming in the very near future will certainly take into account that matter of the extra fees payable to physicians for the extra duties involved. They always have. That difference and that extra work have always been recognized in a different fee schedule and that will continue to be so.

Under the WCB Act, of course, the WCB account rendered for services given to the patient is the full amount that can be paid.

Mr. Cunningham: Supplementary: I would like to ask the minister if he is aware of a situation where it requires longer than 50 days in some situations for the practitioner to receive payments from the compensation board. Would he take it upon himself to see that the age of accounts payable from the compensation board is reduced so people would get their money a little faster?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It has been my experience that accounts have usually been paid promptly, but I will certainly be glad to remind the board of some inconveniences some doctors are reporting.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. My concern is about the interim period between now and the report that will ultimately be made by the Canadian Transport Commission about the Mississauga spill and the implementation of the recommendations that will undoubtedly be contained in it.

Will the Premier assure the assembly that a single ministry of the government during this interim period will have available to it full information about the points of origin, routes and destinations of all movements of chlorine by any means within Ontario? Will he ensure it will have responsibility for monitoring those movements and for contingency plans en route and at destinations to minimize to the extent possible any likelihood of a second mishap?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will go far in terms of answering that question: The government will make every effort it can, within the limits of our area of responsibility, to see that this sort of thing does not happen again. Whether what the member for Riverdale is suggesting would in itself and by itself be sufficient I honestly don't know. I think it is a reasonable question. Whether that would provide us with the mechanism to see that it could not happen again, that kind of technical opinion I quite frankly can't venture. I can assure the honourable member we have steps in motion to see what we can do provincially to see that this sort of occurrence cannot happen again in any of our communities.

Mr. Renwick: By way of supplementary, since both CN and CP spokesmen indicated in the press that they do not intend to make any changes with respect to their transportation systems pending the result of the inquiry, and recognizing that chlorine is not the only hazardous substance which is being transported, is it possible for this government, given the divided jurisdiction, to ensure that any necessary changes are made in the method of transportation during the interim period so we do not persist in the same kind of transportation system that resulted in this particular accident?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I expressed the point of view last week that I don't think we need to wait for the results of any formal inquiry, whatever form it might take, to explore as a provincial government if there are any short-term alternatives that would assist the situation. I made that quite clear and we intend to continue with that sort of approach.

As the honourable member has pointed out, we are not talking about chlorine only; there are other substances, and I don't think any person is disputing the fact that these chemicals must of necessity be transported. There is no question that in some way they have to move from point A to point B. Our responsibility is to see in what ways we can be helpful in finding a better way of doing it. What that is I quite frankly don't know, but the ministries of this government will be looking at it in advance of any federal inquiry or in advance of any federal legislation.

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Is the minister aware of the fact that Olin Chemical Corporation, which is adjacent to the Hooker Chemical Corporation in Niagara Falls, New York, may be spilling as much as 1.4 million gallons of untreated leachate into the Niagara River? Is his ministry aware of this condition? I wonder if it brings to mind the urgency I have about the dumping of effluents into the river that's adding to the pollution there?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I am not personally aware of this report. I'll check with my officials and advise tomorrow.

Mr. Kerrio: While the minister is doing that, would he consider some kind of involvement with his counterpart in the state of New York so he might be more aware and in a better time frame to address himself to these kinds of problems? They seem to be developing and we are the last people to know on this side.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I said I would check on this report. I don't know whether it is well founded or unfounded. I am not able to report more than that today. I have talked and answered questions in the House on the other aspect many times, we have had debates in the estimates and I really have nothing more to add to those comments.

WORK INCENTIVES FOR FBA RECIPIENTS

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. When the minister meets with the family benefit work group tomorrow about his work incentives program, will he continue to commit himself to beginning the program in January 1980, even though no regulations have yet been developed or staff hired? Will he inform that group what he is doing to assist those individuals who took jobs after September 19 because of his commitment, and I quote, "that any recipient will be eligible, effective immediately"?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I fully intend to maintain all of the commitments I have made. The honourable member may not be aware but the field staff in my ministry has now been in receipt, for a matter of a couple of weeks at least, of detailed guidelines for the administration of the program. It is our intention to continue to proceed, effective January 1, with the retroactive provisions I outlined earlier.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Supplementary: The information I have been getting from people who have been applying for help is they are getting no assistance at all and nobody knows when it is going to start or what are the regulations.

I would like to ask what kind of additional support the ministry will be providing to people like Helen Dee of Scarborough, who on September 26 took a minimum-wage job with the expectation assistance would be forthcoming to support her and her three children. She did not receive her phase-out moneys, which are under present legislation, until a month and a half afterwards, not until the middle of November. She is now considering quitting her job because her extra costs of baby-sitting, transportation and lunches are keeping her poorer than she was under full FBA recipient payments. What incentive will the minister give this woman to believe in the promises he has been talking about?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Obviously, to answer a question about specific applicants I would have to know more details of their levels of earnings and the numbers of dependants and so on.

Mr. Cassidy: If you are not set up, you are not set up.

Hon. Mr. Norton: If the honourable member wishes to refer that matter to me I would be quite happy to have that particular case reviewed and to report back to him. In response to the honourable leader of the third party, we are set up and we are ready to go.

Mr. Martel: When?

Mr. Cassidy: When?

ENVIRONMENTAL EMERGENCIES

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General, but in view of his absence, I would like to direct it to the Premier. In view of the recent events in Mississauga; in view of the fact that most other communities realize a similar situation could happen to them; and in view of the fact that many of these communities have air-raid warning systems but, as I understand it, do not have the ability to turn them on because they are entirely with the armed forces, would the Premier look into the possibility of having these systems made available for the purpose of warning the general public of local situations? They may not all go off with a big bang as they did in Mississauga.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think that's something that could be explored as part of this general inquiry. I must confess I haven't given it a great deal of thought up until this moment, but it's something that could be discussed before whatever inquiry is established.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: In respect to these areas, could I ask the Premier is the government aware if other municipalities do have contingency plans where chlorine and any other chemicals which would have the same results are being delivered in the event of such an occurrence in outlying communities and, if not, would the government move to ensure that is looked into?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We would be quite prepared to sit down with the municipal people to have them share the experience in terms of the organization of what went on in Mississauga. I think what we really have learned from the Mississauga experience is that the people working together in a co-operative sense—the heads of the various forces, the fire-fighters, the police and municipal officials—can deal with a situation, given some common direction.

I could be corrected, but I don't think the city of Mississauga had a contingency plan to deal with an evacuation of this size because of this particular situation. I think it's something that evolved in a very short period of time and for which the people of Mississauga deserve tremendous credit. It wasn't as though they had gone through this exercise. It wasn't as though they had it all laid down.

Certainly, anything we have learned there should be shared with other municipalities. There is no question about that.

AMBULANCE SERVICES

Mr. Sweeney: I have a question for the Minister of Health. Is it true if a community ambulance service is run either by the Ministry of Health or by a local hospital it is deemed to be an essential service and therefore it cannot be settled with a strike situation? On the other hand, if it is run by a private firm, it is not an essential service and can be settled by strike. Given that the service is the same, how is this so?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Depending upon who is the employer, it is quite true the employees and the operation, for that matter, are under different pieces of legislation and therefore different rules do apply. It is not a question of definition of essential service. That is a matter which has vexed governments for years in trying to come up with a definition.

In the case of the honourable member's particular community, when the service was operated by the Kitchener-Waterloo Hospital it operated under the terms of the Public Hospitals Act and under the Hospital Labour Disputes Arbitration Act and therefore the employees were not legally in a position to strike.

When the K-W hospital, a year or two ago—I forget now how long ago it was—gave up the service, or said they no longer wanted to run the service and it went to a private operator under the terms of a proposal call, that then put them into the private sector and in the position under the Labour Relations Act potentially to strike.

Mr. Sweeney: Given that the present stalemate in my community is based upon the inability of the employer to guarantee the settlement he is offering because he doesn't know the money that is going to come from the ministry, can the minister suggest how this stalemate can be broken, because understandably the employees can't accept his offer when he can't guarantee he is going to be able to pay it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With respect, that has not been a deterrent in other communities. In Mississauga, when the Halton-Mississauga service was on strike a number of months ago, in Thunder Bay, where they were facing the possibility of a cessation of work, that was not a deterrent.

The honourable member wouldn't want me to in effect say to the operator, "Here is a blank cheque; whatever is the settlement we will pay to the last penny," but of course in any situation we would review it in terms of what is needed to maintain an acceptable level of ambulance service.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Will the minister advise the House how many other communities are in this circumstance where contracted ambulance services do allow at least the opportunity for strike, if that should occur? And is the ministry giving any consideration as to changing the present circumstances so that even under a contracting circumstance it may be that the requirement for necessity as it existed in the earlier situation in Kitchener would be carried on, so the strike concerns would not arise in a community such as ours where this matter has now gone on for some 10 weeks?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the honourable member will know, there are a variety of circumstances under which an ambulance service will be operated. The member's colleague has enumerated several of them. There are also volunteer services. There are also municipal services. For instance, in Metropolitan Toronto the Department of Ambulance Services comes under the Metropolitan government, and as municipal employees—I guess they would be members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees—they would potentially have that right.

I want to be very careful that in the present context of the labour dispute in Waterloo I don't say anything here that would be inflammatory and potentially destroy the possibility of a settlement—

Mr. Breithaupt: As do we.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—but certainly this is a matter which is of concern to me, and when matters have returned to normal I think it is something which bears some examination.

Mr. Breaugh: I have a question for the Minister of Health. I would like to ask the minister if he has now prepared a more reasoned response to the allegations of Mr. Jerome Alexander, who is the past president of the Ontario Ambulance Operators Association, and his remarks at their convention that we are facing a disaster?

If I can quote him: "The funding formula for private operators is pitiful, unrealistic and ill-conceived and it is past time for a major investigation of all branch activities to begin. Certainly the Ministry of Health must look at its organization and until this is accomplished we will flounder in the mud of bureaucracy forever."

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am extremely pleased to deal with that, inasmuch as that particular ambulance service is one that has been of concern to us and has been under some investigation for a while. I mention that so as to put those remarks in some context.

Mr. Martel: Just to put it in proper perspective.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: At the same time that gentleman made some remarks about the ambulance vehicles. I am told by staff that by the end of this current fiscal year we will have put on the road about—I don't have the figures in front of me—205 new ambulances in the province. This is close to half of the provincial fleet.

Mr. Breaugh: On the matter of an investigation, the minister has a fraud squad investigation here in Metro, he has continuing allegations of unsafe ambulances on the road, he has a dispute in Kitchener, he has a dispatching argument in Welland and again in the Windsor area, he has police officers who are unsure of the rules and fill up the ambulances with three or four people, even at minor accidents, at $40 a crack. Surely all of this is grounds upon which the minister will continue to have an internal investigation, as he supposedly has, under way. But he also ought to have a more public type of investigation.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'm always pleased to deal with specific allegations. The ones the member brought up today have no substance whatsoever; in fact, they're questionable in their origin and motivation.

Mr. Breugh: The rest of the world is wrong and the minister is right? Why are you buying 200 new ambulances if there is nothing wrong with them?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Every year we do put a lot of ambulances on the road.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The honourable member really doesn't want an answer, he wants a soap box. There are lots of them available outside of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral question period has expired.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

On vote 801, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned the debate on Friday, I was the next speaker on the list, or I assume I was, and I appreciate being given the opportunity to start this afternoon.

In the discussions on Friday referring to assessment the minister mentioned that approximately $2,500 worth of construction, addition, modification and renovation would not be added to the assessment for that given year. The assumption was—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I wonder if we might have a little more order in the chamber so we can hear the questions and statements being made by the honourable member?

Mr. B. Newman: The impression left by the minister was that any renovation of a particular structure would necessarily add to its value and would consequently increase the assessment. That isn't necessarily so. One could have changes in the structure of a house, especially if it was being modified for a handicapped individual, for the single purpose of accommodating that one person. Even though the structural changes to the house could cost in the many thousands of dollars, maybe $10,000 for widening doors, improving fixtures, lowering wash basins, adjusting telephones and so on, they wouldn't necessarily add to the value of the home.

For that reason, although $2,500 is allowed, I think there should be some leeway so that when the changes are made for a handicapped individual the sky should almost be the limit. That would simply allow a handicapped person to live almost as well as an individual who is not handicapped. I know we can't say the sky is the limit, but we should have some figure that is substantially higher, if need be, so the handicapped individual, having such changes put into his or her home, does not have an increased assessment.

I hope that will be taken into consideration by the assessors when it comes to the particular problem I have mentioned. I have other questions, but I would like this one answered.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Perhaps my statements of last Friday were a little far-reaching. I mentioned $2,500 could be spent on a house without its being picked up by the assessors. When a building permit for alterations to the value of $2,500 or over is applied for and received, the assessor knows a certain amount of money has been spent on the building but he doesn't take the amount of the building permit as an assessment value; he visits the property.

The member is quite right; there are many things that could be done to a property which may require a building permit but which would not necessarily increase the value of the property. But I believe also that when the assessor does visit he would take into consideration the kinds of things of which the member is speaking. I don't think a different limit necessarily has to be put on.

What the assessor is really interested in is whether or not that building has actually increased in value—not necessarily how much money has been spent on it, but has it increased in value by more than $2,500. That is the way the assessor would assess, rather than just saying $2,500 has been spent, therefore the assessment goes up $2,500. That isn't the way it is done.

Does that answer the member's question?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, that does clarify it a bit, Mr. Chairman.

I would assume the assessors in the various municipalities would be broad-minded enough to take something like this into consideration, even though it may increase the value of the house because certain structural changes have to be made that are of consequence to the home, regardless of whether a handicapped individual lives in that home or not.

The other question I was going to ask of the minister was the one he brought to our attention when he referred to me and to the city of Windsor. That is the grant structure that was given to the city.

The minister knows the history of it—that the city has been sort of short-changed by some $30 million over a number of years because of the resource equalization grant inequities. He made an adjustment just this past year and provided the community with some $3,097,600, if I am not mistaken.

The new equalization grants the ministry is going to put into effect this coming year are to be arrived at by simply adjusting the figure to a certain amount. He is not taking into consideration the additional grants he has given.

He really should have given approximately $10 million worth of grants each year over the number of years, had the resource equalization grant been fair. It was pointed out to his government by the then mayor of the city of Windsor back in 1973, 1974, or 1975 in the meeting in London, but our pleas from the city were falling on deaf ears. The ministry didn't believe the city was right when it presented its case.

After it got a series of other municipalities involved and after the honourable Treasurer of the day, Darcy McKeough, realized

Windsor was right and that Mr. Agnew, from the city, did present a good case, the amount the ministry would have to give to them to correct the inequity would have been approximately $10 million. I am subject to correction on that exact figure, but I understood it was so.

I can recall, Mr. Minister, pleading in this House at various times with the provincial Treasurer, trying to point out to him we were adversely affected. Other municipalities picked up the cudgel and as a result there were 15 or 20 or possibly even more municipalities throughout Ontario which found they were adversely affected. The minister accommodated them with a minor adjustment. The minister accommodated Windsor with a minor adjustment which was nowhere near what they expected to get. They appreciated the $3 million, even though they would have preferred the larger figure. Now the minister is going to shortchange us again next year because he's not including the $3 million as the grant and adjusting it percentage wise, including the $3 million. He is excluding that $3 million. The minister is not being fair.

I hope he takes that into consideration or today advises me the equalization grant to the city will include that higher figure so Windsor once again won't be shortchanged.

(Partial failure of sound system)

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Could I have some power?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I think you're about to get some power.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: These words of wisdom I want recorded forever in Hansard, so I have to wait for power.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Either you or somebody is causing a short circuit, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Pretend I'm the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) today, that's who I am.

Mr. B. Newman: Shift over one seat. Somebody blew a fuse.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Speak out loudly if you will, I seem to have lots of power in this microphone.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: How are my words of wisdom going to be registered, forever and ever?

Actually, I've said this before, Mr. Chairman, so perhaps it's already been registered from time to time. The question the member for Windsor-Walkerville poses is a question that should be directed not to me but to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells). He is the one who decides the amounts of grants which go to municipalities.

It's under his jurisdiction and not the Minister of Revenue's.

The Ministry of Revenue's position in this whole matter is to bring forth proper equalization factors based on 1978 assessment, and so on. Those factors are used by the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs and the Ministry of Education to decide what apportionments there will be, what shift there will be and how many grants will go to the municipalities.

I recall in my statement, when I introduced the legislation which would take the freeze from the equalization factors, a guarantee written into that statement that no municipality would get less in 1980 than in 1979 because of the new factors. I am sure the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs will take that into consideration when he is making a decision as to what the grants will be.

I know the policy announced by the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is that no municipality will receive more than 10 per cent in gains in 1980, if they happen to be one of those we might loosely call a winner in this equalization factor exercise. Of course, Windsor was not one of those. The question the member has asked of me should really be given to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs in whose jurisdiction it falls as to grants for municipalities.

Mr. B. Newman: I stand corrected. The only thing is unless I try to point it out to each of you people on that far side of the House we're going to continue to be taken advantage of in my community. It isn't fair to come along and deprive a community of a substantial amount of resource equalization grants and continue the short-shrifting of that community.

The minister is right. I possibly should not have asked that question of him. I do stand corrected. I hope I do have an opportunity at some time or other to go after whoever is really the culprit in the deal.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: There is one other item the member did mention that I thought I should also remark on. I think the $30-million figure may be slightly exaggerated.

Mr. B. Newman: It's the accumulated total.

Hon. Mr. Mack: Yes, I understand. I believe the $10 million might be a little exaggerated as well. Nevertheless, there is no question the city of Windsor was not receiving its fair share of grants over these past few years because of the freeze on equalization factors. It may take some time to make the proper adjustments because there is a bottom to the barrel as far as money is concerned.

Mr. B. Newman: But when there was a lot of money, it wasn't coming our way.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That's true, but we did increase grants this year between education and the municipalities in the neighbourhood of $50 million. There is another $50 million going into the pot this year in round figures. It could be a little less or a little bit more, but it's in that general vicinity. I think the province has dipped in about as far as it can dip this year. That's the reason there was a limit of 10 per cent put on the municipalities.

Mr. B. Newman: You didn't answer the other question. Are you going to consider that $3 million or so we received this past year? Will the additional 10 per cent go on and include that $3 million?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That is the part of the question I suggested should have been given to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs and not to my ministry. I did remind the member I made a statement in the House when I took off the freeze that no municipality would get less in 1980 because of the new equalization factors. I leave that with the member.

Mr. B. Newman: We will be getting less because we will not be getting the $3 million.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I'm not sure how the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs will interpret the statement I made, but I will discuss it with him.

Mr. Charlton: I wouldn't normally raise this under this vote, but since we've been discussing it I thought I would put a couple of comments on the record to try to clarify what the minister has said about additions to property of less than $2,500. I think the minister's statement is generally correct, but somewhat misleading in the way it's put out. What is happening in some assessment offices—and I can't swear this happens in every assessment office, but the policy is supposed to be uniform—is they keep track of items that are added that come to a value of less than $2,500.

If two are added, even if they happen to be three or four years apart, if the cumulative total is over $2,500 the assessor will add the additional value at that point. So people shouldn't have it in their mind they can add $2,500 here and $2,500 some time later and get away with it, because in most cases it won't happen.

The other thing is that in any area where section 86 is being put into effect for anybody who has added something in the past that was worth less than $2,500 in value, although that assessment wasn't added at the time, it is being added under section 86 because the market value assessment on which the section 86 equalization is based includes the value of that item, the garage, swimming pool, or whatever it happened to be. There are some municipalities in this province where, in a one-shot deal, those items are being added, although it is my understanding that once the section 86 equalization is done that assessment office will again resume the practice of not adding the items under $2,500.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any other questions on vote 801, item 1? The member for Etobicoke.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, I hope it is appropriate to bring it up under this vote, but it is a matter of policy and I would like to see if there is any change of direction by the minister on this.

I am wondering if the minister has received complaints from some of the small bottling companies concerning what they consider to be discrimination against them in the 50 cent sales tax exemption for beverages and confectioneries. A number of them have expressed concern to me, particularly some of those serving the Italian community. They tend to deliver large crates of drinks and their competitors are the local grocery stores where people tend to purchase soft drinks by the bottle. Since their system is one of selling in bulk, they feel that under the new regulations perhaps not only they but also Pop Shoppes and some of the other companies which specialize in selling returnable containers by the dozen or so are discriminated against and this works as a disadvantage to them and an advantage to some of the bigger companies such as Coca-Cola and Pepsi-Cola that tend to have their outlets through Becker's and Dominion Stores and the bigger chains which these people cannot get into.

They would like to know whether there is any contemplation of a change of policy or some way in which they can be on an equal competitive basis with these companies.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, I haven't had any letters from the small companies that came directly to my desk. I will check with my staff to see if any complaints have been coming into the retail sales tax branch. I will have some information on that in a moment.

I don't personally recall having received any letters from any small bottling companies with the complaint you have talked about. However, if it is acting as a sort of a penalty towards them, I would certainly be happy to look at it and see if there is a solution to it. Basically, all pop companies sell pop in bulk as well as in small quantities and the whole thrust behind this, as the member is well aware, was to accommodate not only pop but chocolate bars and small confectionery articles with a value up to 50 cents.

The member will probably recall that some time ago there was a concerted effort, not only by chocolate bar manufacturers but even by some consumers who were concerned about the fact that when chocolate bars went up to 25 cents the children had to pay sales tax on them. I suspect that is one of the reasons the Treasurer decided to go to the 50-cent limit instead of the 20. Basically, it is fair the way it is, except for those companies who may sell completely in bulk and only by the case.

Mr. Philip: Perhaps the minister or one of his senior people would be willing to meet with some of the companies concerned. I am sure I can arrange for that and they could discuss it with the minister or perhaps with one of his assistant deputies or somebody at that kind of level. I believe when it was first brought to my attention, which was several months ago, I did send that matter over to either the minister or one of his key executive people. I'm not sure who it was at that time—my assistant is presently pulling the file for me—but I think any meeting with them would be appreciated.

There is one company in the Weston area particularly concerned since 100 per cent of its sales are delivered by the case directly to homes.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would certainly be happy to arrange a meeting for any constituents or businesses having difficulty. I am prepared to listen to their submissions and see if there is something we can do to help them.

I have a note here now from the staff. They don't indicate to me whether there is a record of any letters from manufacturers such as you indicated, but they do give me this information.

The tax is based, of course, on a unit sale. The sales in bulk are usually at a lower price than the individual bottle price, so there is an evening-out effect to some extent. In other words, if you buy a small unit, you are going to pay more for it, not through tax, but through the cost of the product in bulk. So the ministry staff think there is a type of an evening-out effect because of that.

As an example, they say a 39-cent bottle is tax exempt; one case of 24 units includes tax but on the unit price it is approximately the same as the single price. In other words, if you buy a case, when you divide it by 24 and get the unit price you will find they are usually the same price or maybe even sometimes lower than if you buy one bottle, even if it is tax free, so it sort of evens out.

Mr. Philip: Just one last point on that, Mr. Minister. The point they previously were making was they had some competitive advantage in competing with the multinationals and all of their advertising campaigns and all of the accessibility of the corner stores. This, in simply making them competitive or equal, takes away that one advantage as small companies, and as Canadian-based and as Ontario-owned companies. I assured them I thought the minister would be interested in keeping this competitive advantage to the small Ontario businessman.

I appreciate the minister's comments and I am sure perhaps we can get together and hopefully do something about it.

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, analysis and planning:

Mr. Haggerty: This relates to the minister's announcement on October 16 of the formation of a consolidated revenue tax appeal service, a major step by his ministry towards simplifying the tax appeal process.

Is the only tax appeal office you have in Ontario located here in Toronto? Or are there others throughout Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, again this item doesn't come under this vote, but I am prepared to speak about it if there is no objection from the rest of the members of the committee.

This is the only office we have in the Ministry of Revenue. However, I did say in my statement that we would be prepared to send people around the province, if necessary, for instance to Thunder Bay or somewhere else. If it was necessary to have a tax appeal in an area, we can from time to time send staff from this office out to various places.

Mr. Haggerty: In other words, you are going to follow procedures established by the federal tax appeal system whereby they send out taxing officers or persons to hear appeals to different localities in Ontario, or throughout Canada in a sense. Instead of having one in Toronto, Hamilton, London, or St. Catharines, you will be doing this, will you? Everybody won't have to come to Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That's right. We will be doing that. We have been doing it prior to this time. What we have done has really changed our assessment office.

It used to be if you had an appeal in the retail sales tax branch, as an example, the appeal would be heard by people within that branch. Now we have set up a separate appeals office so that regardless of where you are having your problems within the ministry, they would hear that appeal.

They are no longer connected to any specific branch in the ministry. They are not connected with sales tax or cork tax or tobacco tax. They have their own separate little branch and all they do is hear appeals from all the various branches within the ministry. We have always had an appeal system within the ministry but we have now located it in one unit and it is not in any way connected to any of the other branches.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman I was trying to relate it to the additional costs of item 2. There is a substantial increase from $278,000 to $369,000—a $90,000 increase. Could the minister give me reasons why we have had a substantial increase in analysis and planning here? What are we contemplating in tax changes under this increase of about $90,000 in this vote?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The largest increase in this vote is in services I believe. That is because of the computerized resource management and forecasting systems that we have implemented. That is where the largest amount is. Is there any specific item the member wants to know about?

Mr. Haggerty: I am making reference to item 2, analysis and planning. There is a substantial increase there. I was looking also at information services there. Item 2 seems to be rather costly; almost everyone has a direct phone to your facilities in Toronto to deal with tax matters, Gains and a few other items that relate to revenue and revenue-sharing, I guess it would be.

I would like to know why there is about a $90,000 increase on that second item, analysis and planning. It seems either you are bringing in some new type of planning for taxing purposes or you have some study that we on the opposition side are not aware of—perhaps a study involving some of your forecasting.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The computerized system of cash management is one of the major items. If you go down the list you'll see there is an increase in salaries and wages. You are going to find this pretty well in every branch of every ministry in government because of the increase in salaries and benefits to all the civil service. Transportation and communications is up very little. As I said, services is the major single item.

Supplies and equipment are actually down as compared to the 1978-79 estimates.

I guess the biggest item is salaries and wages. They have increased that staff by one person. We had 10 civil servants in there in 1978-79 and for 1979-80 we will increase it to 11.

Mr. Haggerty: That is vote 801, item 5 you are talking about?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, I am talking about vote 801, item 2. There was an increase of one staff. There is the increase in salaries and wages which went right across the civil service. There is the computerized system I spoke about that has been brought into this branch. That accounts for most of the increase in that item.

Item 2 agreed to.

Items 3 and 4 agreed to.

On item 5, financial services:

Mr. Haggerty: There seems to be a substantial increase in financial services. That could indicate you have additional staff. What is actually done in this area of financial services?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The explanation for what we do is listed on the page in the member's estimates. However, I will read it into the record. "This activity, performed by the administrative and financial services branch, delivers financial support services to program managers concerning payroll and expenditure accounting and reporting and financial control and review. Resources for the management of the branch and for the executive director of the support services division are also included in the activity."

The reason for the increase in this one is that all of the branches up until this point had paid their share towards the Workmen's Compensation Board payments out of this one branch. You will see as we go through the book there will be less funding for that purpose in other votes. We have changed the system so that all of the Workmen's Compensation Board expenditures come from this vote instead of spreading it over the ministry.

Item 5 agreed to.

Items 6 to 10, inclusive, agreed to.

Vote 801 agreed to.

On vote 802, administration of taxes program:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does any member have any questions on vote 802? The member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Charlton: The matter I wanted to raise is under the last item, item 7.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any questions before item 7?

Mr. Haggerty: Item 3, Mr. Chairman.

Items 1 and 2 agreed to.

On item 3, revenue research.

Mr. Haggerty: Could the minister give us in more detail what revenue research includes? Are there any research studies on other areas of taxation the Legislature should be made aware of?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Earlier in the debate we talked about the Ministry of Revenue's providing information to the Treasury regarding tax matters, the administration of taxes and the effects taxes would have on certain situations that might arise. That's what this group does. They are a research group that reviews the operational practicality of proposed legislation. The Treasurer may come to our ministry and suggest he may want to implement a certain tax. He will ask for advice from us as to whether it's feasible or not. The research group will investigate and report to the Treasurer as well as to the minister on matters such as this.

Mr. Haggerty: The minister did touch on the matter of refunds on taxes. I was wondering if he could indicate to the House the policies as they relate to late filing of the retail sales tax and why there is a double penalty in it. Is there some way the minister can make it much easier for the person who has to carry accounts for 90 days or something like that? It's rather difficult for him to have the cash flow to contribute to the provincial coffers. Is there an easier way the minister can ease up on the double taxation? As a penalty, a person has to forfeit his part in collecting the tax in the first place and running that particular service. I think it runs to about 150 per cent or up to that per year, if you use the double taxation.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I have to impress upon the member that retail sales tax is money that is collected on behalf of the crown by people who are in the retail business. They collect the money and there is no reason why they shouldn't be able to submit these taxes after they have collected them. We give them 23 days. It is on the 23rd of each month they must submit the retail sales tax collected for the previous month, so after the end of the month they then have 23 days to submit the tax, or at least to get it in the mail. I believe there is a five-day grace period after that.

If we find they are late in filing, the first time they will get a letter from us suggesting they should be perhaps a little less tardy and get it in on time. If they persist in late filing, then we do have a penalty and I think that is only just and fair. I don't think our staff really harass any of our tax collectors, our vendors out there, but I think it has to be borne in mind that when they have 23 days to get their taxes in after the end of the month and then another five days before we consider imposing a penalty, we are being very lenient with them.

It is not as if we were asking them to send us some of their money. All we are asking them to do is to submit the taxes they collected on our behalf, so it is not the same thing as having to dip into their own pockets. In some cases I must admit they use our money they have collected instead of submitting it to us, to pay some of their other bills. We can't really go along with that sort of situation. We eventually have to collect the taxes owing the province.

I am told the tax penalty is not cumulative. The interest rate is nine per cent per annum; that is not an unreasonable amount when we realize if we go to the bank today we have to pay something like 16 or 16.5 per cent to borrow money.

Mr. Haggerty: Are all those who submit taxes to the Ministry of Revenue—all of the persons remitting, the businesses or enterprises that submit their taxes to the ministry—are they all treated on the same 23-day period or are there some staggered to give them up to six months, five months, three months or what? Are there variations given to certain industries or businessmen?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, there are variations. People who collect a very small amount may make arrangements with our district taxation office to pay every six months, or in some cases even only once a year if it is a very small amount. We are quite prepared to deal in a rational manner with anyone. We don't want them sending in a retail sales tax submission for a dollar a month or something like that, it is obviously not worth our while or their while; but in those kinds of situations they can make arrangements, through the district taxation office or by writing in to the ministry, to pay once a year, in some cases every six months and in some cases quarterly.

Mr. Haggerty: Again, the 23 days just doesn't hold water for everybody submitting retail sales tax. The minister is telling me that at his discretion he can vary that period of time from 23 days to six months or a year.

What is the volume, though? The honourable minister said $1, but surely you don't submit $1 at the end of the year. There must be some levels—$50,000 or $20,000 or $10,000 or $5,000 or $2,000; does it all relate to the 23-day period?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I will have my staff give me the amounts we are talking about. I am not sure of the amounts, I know we are talking about relatively small amounts.

What we are saying basically is this: If there is only a small amount the cost of mail alone is 17 cents, and if somebody—

Mr. Haggerty: One cent a day.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If somebody is only collecting a very small amount it is not reasonable to ask him to submit taxes every month, so they do it quarterly or semi-annually or annually, depending on the amount of money. I will try to get you the amounts, or a rough estimate at least of the amounts we are talking about here. There are some 15,000 people who are on this kind of a program. They are not paying every month so I think we are being very reasonable and lenient as far as the vendors are concerned.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Do we have to wait for a moment for that answer, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I'm told by staff that it is so. If it's $1,000 a year or less it is $500 every six months maximum for the extended filing; and that of course would be $1,000 a year. I'm told also there are about 25,000-plus vendors on the six-month program.

Items 3 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

On item 7; retail sales tax and other taxes:

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, I have a situation that's been brought to my attention, which I'd like to raise with the minister, dealing with the purchase of musical instruments.

It's my understanding—and the minister can correct me if I'm wrong—that if a board of education does bulk purchasing and sells musical instruments to its students at the bookstore or wherever they're not charged retail sales tax, but if a student is going to a school where the board of education doesn't happen to do the bulk purchasing, perhaps because it doesn't have enough in terms of numbers to be bothered getting involved in that kind of thing, the student then has to pay the retail sales tax.

First I'd like to know if that's correct; second, if that's true is there not some way that students could submit a note from the teacher or school and get a tax rebate on the retail sales tax?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I presume my staff is preparing a reply for me and I'll have it for the member very shortly. It's not something that has come to my attention personally but I do know that musical instruments purchased through the school would be tax exempt. I think that's right.

I also know, of course, that if I go to a music store to buy an instrument for my child I'm going to pay sales tax on it. The member's question was is there any way for my child to apply for a rebate on that sales tax, because if he had had the opportunity to buy from the school he wouldn't have had to pay it? I understand that's what the member is saying. He can understand the complications: every person who wanted to buy a musical instrument would say it was for their child. I don't know how we, as a ministry, would enforce that kind of a policy, although I'm sympathetic to it.

I suppose there would be ways and means, if a letter was received from the principal saying that the musical instrument was purchased for the use of the student in the school; something like that could probably be considered.

Mr. Philip: Would an analogous situation be that of buying special car seats for posture, which I believe are exempt if a chiropractor or medical practitioner of any kind has written a prescription for that particular device to be used by the driver? If on the other hand he simply goes in and says it would be good for his posture to have one of these posture seats he has to pay sales tax, as I understand it.

Surely there would be some way of the school saying that this particular instrument is required for use in school activities, which would be analogous to the chiropractor saying that this is part of the treatment or program that a patient is involved in.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I don't know whether there's an analogous situation there or not, but on this particular matter I'm told by staff that purchases by boards of education are tax exempt, but sales by schools to students apparently should not be tax exempt, we should be collecting tax; that means all students would be in the same boat. However, staff has asked for more details on this. If the member would give me additional information we could look into it in detail and find out the situation exactly.

Mr. Charlton: I will do that, Mr. Minister. I don't have the letter here because it wasn't sent to me personally. One of the members of our caucus received a letter I believe from an association of music teachers. I will get a copy of the letter for the minister so he can look into it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would appreciate that. I would have thought they would be exempt if they purchased from a school but I am told that is not the case. When I think about it, I guess when schools are selling soft drinks or other items in the school they must collect tax. I have had letters about it before.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You better be careful or they will all be paying sales tax. I gather the minister does not mean he is going to follow up this matter right now but at a later date.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, but I have one other note here from staff. Instruments have to remain the property of the school to be tax-exempt; instruments cannot be the personal property of the students. This means if the school purchases instruments, fine, it doesn't pay any tax; but the students just use the instruments, they don't buy them. If they bought them they would have to pay the tax. That puts those students in the same boat as a student who might buy an instrument from a music store. None would be exempt except the school board itself.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Perhaps the member for Hamilton Mountain won't want to produce that letter now.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I don't think it would be necessary.

Mr. Haggerty: Has the ministry or the cabinet given any consideration to removing the provincial sales tax on building materials for the construction of new homes? I am sure the minister is well aware of the high interest rates new home buyers are faced with today. They have been substantially increased in the last four or five years, from about eight or nine per cent to 15 or 16 per cent, and in some cases they may even be higher.

The minister is well aware that every time the American government increases its interest rates the Bank of Canada seems to follow suit. It does not seem right that purchasers of goods in Ontario have to borrow money at high interest rates as the result of poor management by the American government. That seems to be the crux of the whole matter of rising interest rates: the poor management of our friends to the south. We seem to follow the American practice: when their interest rate goes up we have to raise ours also. I think it is an injustice, particularly to those purchasing a home.

I think the Ontario government should find some relief in this area, and I suggest to the minister that removing sales tax on building materials for housing would be of help to home buyers and would without doubt assist the slowing economy now facing Ontario. I am told a great number of unsold houses will be sitting there for quite awhile. Builders in my area have gone seeking jobs in industry because they cannot sell existing houses on the market. People just cannot afford the high interest rate.

Perhaps this is an area the government should be looking at. Removing the sales tax on building materials would provide at least some break on the cost of new homes and in that sense subsidize the high interest rate. Has the ministry or the cabinet considered such a step?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The matter of removing sales tax on building materials has been discussed many times within the ministry, within Treasury, within the government, and I am sure in this House. In the last year or two we have been removing sales tax on building materials, we have been removing sales tax on insulating materials and so on. I think I agree, as has always been thought, that if the retail sales tax were removed on building materials there is no guarantee the benefit is going to be passed on to the person who is building the house. I would suspect that in most cases the seven per cent would suddenly appear in the price of the material. Instead of the province and the taxpayers getting some revenue, it might be going to some other group that would be selling the materials.

In other words, there's no way of guaranteeing that when you remove a tax that tax saving is going to be passed on to the person you are trying to help. I don't disagree with the member when he says the interest rates are high and that's the reason houses are not moving, but I might say also that I don't think that's the only reason they're not moving.

In most areas of the province there is now not the shortage of housing there was a few years ago. There are a lot of houses on the market. I don't think we need the stimulation we needed a few years ago when we talked quite a bit about removing the sales tax on building materials to stimulate housing construction. In this day, while we might need the stimulation for employment purposes, there are a lot of vacant homes sitting around this province and a lot of them were sitting around prior to the interest rates going up.

I'm not saying the interest rates aren't a deterrent to houses moving. But I really believe, if you look at the ads in the papers, at least in the area I come from there is quite an abundance of housing right now in Ontario. As I have said, I have two main objections: One is the fact that there's no guarantee it would be passed on; two, we could lose a tremendous amount of tax dollars. My staff estimate, roughly, that if we were to remove the sales tax on building materials it could come to anywhere between $150 million and $200 million a year, which is an awful pile of money to take out of the budget at one point.

Mr. Haggerty: Thank you for those comments, though I think you could well work it. You worked it here a few years ago with the first-time home buyer's grant. That's actually what it was. We almost figured out what the sales tax would be on the purchase or construction of a new home and it worked out to about $1,200 or $1,500 at that particular time.

You could work it with the same program you had for the home buyer's grant on the retail sales tax. Once the home is constructed and the person has moved in, then the retail sales tax could be rebated and go directly to the purchaser of the home.

I quite agree with the minister. It's just like the time they removed the sales tax on shoes up to $30 and you were taxed beyond that amount. All of a sudden shoes all went up to $29.95, even for two year-old tots. That is what happened, the price went up. I'm not sure whether the saving was passed on to the individual purchaser of the shoes. It was another way the retailers seemed to capitalize on the sales tax. I think the minister is aware of that.

That's another area that perhaps I should be looking at when I talk about the retail sales tax on shoes. There should be a break given to the person employed in industry. If you have to go out and buy a pair of safety shoes you're paying well over $30 for them, and they could go as high as $40 or $50.

Mr. B. Newman: You buy a regular pair for that.

Mr. Haggerty: They're pretty expensive. But when a person has to start paying a sales tax on that it is quite a story in itself.

I understand—and hope I'm correct on this—if certain industries supply their employees with the boots there is no sales tax. But the employees still pay it out of their weekly cheque. If the employee buys them individually he still has to pay the tax. I could be wrong on that, but there's an area in which the minister should be looking. You should give the guy who is keeping your business going the wage earner in Ontario, some breaks on some of these things. When he has to go out and buy a pair of coveralls, I don't have to tell you the price of those today. Coveralls or wearing apparel for special working conditions are expensive. Shoes are one of the most expensive articles there are, and some people go through about two or three pairs a year. It can be rather costly. In some particular areas that should be considered as a write-off, just as management has a certain amount of write-offs for the purchase of goods they have to use. Not because of necessity but because they are for their protection. You should be looking at that area to remove the sales tax on articles such as work boots.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It's not just work boots that are taxable. I have to pay sales tax on my shoes too. I don't think I can buy them for under $30 any more. They're usually over that, so I'm paying tax on them. It's the same with my clothes. We're all in the same boat. Under personal income tax, the federal government does have an allowance or exemption on working clothes of up to $300. I think there is a benefit there.

Mr. Haggerty: That should be even higher.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You can buy quite a few work clothes for $300; I think it's reasonable. I doubt very much whether they go through three pairs of those heavy shoes a year; but maybe they do, there might be certain jobs where they do.

Mr. Haggerty: If you're working around furnaces where there is hot metal you can go through them in no time.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: However, while I always have sympathy for the working man and would like to see us give him as many breaks as we can—

Mr. Haggerty: I can see the tears in your eyes.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: —I think we have to be realistic and realize we do have to collect a certain amount of revenue to run the province. You can come up with all kinds of things I can be sympathetic to from a personal viewpoint and on a personal basis, but the first thing I have to think about is how do they affect the revenue of the province. In order to run the other programs you may be in favour of we have to collect the money somewhere.

Mr. Haggerty: It has been about 45 per cent for about three years, or 15 per cent increase for one year.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If there is a real hardship in some of these areas I'm certainly prepared to look at it. With the personal income tax deduction of up to $300 for working shoes, clothes and so on, it isn't a bad break. It's not perhaps as good as some people would like, but at least it's a step in the right direction.

Mr. B. Newman: I wanted to raise an issue that is raised every year with the minister. It concerns some method of assisting the physically handicapped in the purchase of miscellaneous items. There are children wearing adult-size clothes, as a result they have to pay sales tax because these are over a certain size. The handicapped have to buy crutches, wheelchairs and miscellaneous equipment like that. I think there is a sales tax imposed on that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Has the member finished?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: He is waiting for an answer to that. Speaking now off the top of my head, I believe orthopaedic equipment and so on is tax free, although my staff is preparing a proper answer. I'll have it for the member in a minute. If he wants to continue with another item I'll get back to him.

Mr. B. Newman: Will you look into other types of assists for the handicapped and not just the few of which I made mention? It's bad enough being handicapped without having to pay a substantial sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: While we're waiting for that answer, my ministry does, from time to time, meet with the committee for the handicapped—I forget its official name—to get advice regarding tax matters. I'll probably get the proper name for it in a moment. Usually their advice to us has been they're not looking for a reduction in taxes. What they're looking for are better programs from the social policy field. They don't think taxes are the right way to go as far as looking after the handicapped is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I've had advice from them on such things as the retail sales tax exemptions on vehicles that have been converted for their particular use. I have had submissions from other people who, because they had a leg off or something, asked for a sales tax exemption on a regular car—well what I would call a regular car, one with an automatic transmission for example. There really is no change in the vehicle itself but they feel because of their condition they have to buy a car that is not standard, that does not have a standard shift with a clutch and brake and so on. I have taken that sort of a case to the committee, the members of which are handicapped people themselves, a lot of them, and they have said no, they would prefer to see the assistance come from a different direction rather than tax exemptions. They agree with the tax exemption as far as a modified vehicle is concerned because it requires special work to build that vehicle to accommodate them, they feel that is a legitimate tax exemption, but they don't think we should be going beyond that.

It is the same thing with assessment. We were talking about that a little earlier. A private member's bill was introduced very recently, in the last few days, requesting exemption from assessment if a house is modified for someone who is handicapped; yet that committee with which we deal from time to time has suggested that isn't the right way to go, if there is going to be assistance it should be in a different form. Rather than asking a property tax assessor or a tax man to make decisions of that kind there are qualified people who should make those decisions in the social fields. Their general thrust and their general outlook is not to do these things through the forgiveness of taxes but rather to implement the programs in another way, which would be through the Ministry of Community and Social Services or the Ministry of Health.

The exemption, according to the act, is an exemption for artificial limbs and orthopaedic appliances. There is an exemption for equipment designed solely for the use of blind persons, cripples or chronic invalids; that covers a fairly wide range of exemptions.

Mr. B. Newman: You mentioned certain groups and organizations which thought there would be a better way than the sales tax approach. It is kind of strange, because I have a letter from the Muscular Dystrophy Association that specifically indicates a sales tax exemption. They mention that some system of exempt cards, similar to senior citizens' cards, could be worked out. Naturally they would have to be authorized and signed by some official government agency or individual in government, because it is going to be a purchase for that individual who has the specific handicap.

I know it isn't a simple problem to resolve, but I think we in government have to set the example and do everything we possibly can to make life a little more comfortable for those who have any type of a handicap that limits their mobility. Just as we ask for specified parking areas in municipalities and at the service centres on 401 and so forth, we have to take a new approach to these people as far as government is concerned and bend over backwards, so to speak, in attempting to alleviate the problems they suffer.

I hope you could find an approach, or your officials; I would think they are intelligent and capable enough, bright-minded enough to come up with some type of answer. I would think some jurisdiction does have a partial answer to the solution.

For example, there are chairs which have electric lifts to assist an individual who has difficulty sitting up or getting up from an armchair. You just press the button and the seat elevates and puts the individual on their two feet. I understand that runs about $1,800 for the chair and by the time you finish paying sales tax on that it is a substantial amount of money. I know, Mr. Minister, you are just as concerned as anyone on any side of the House, but I would like to see a little more effort spent on the part of your officials to find something that is at least a partial answer and maybe a complete answer to assisting these people—you name the style of handicap—so that we can make life a little more comfortable for them.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: As the member has said, certainly I have every sympathy. I can give you the proper name of the people we consult with from time to time. It is the Ontario Advisory Council on the Physically Handicapped. If we have some doubt about a car that has been remodelled, for example, they make the final decision on it and give us advice as to whether or not it should be tax exempt.

Just as a matter of interest, to March 1978 there have been 256 claims that have been rebated to physically handicapped people in the amount of $100,222. To February 23, 1979 there have been 457 claims and the total amount of rebate is $168,216. Out of that amount, $29,343 was paid to nonprofit organizations, which are also exempt under certain circumstances.

Mr. B. Newman: One of the problems with that approach is that many people are a little backward and shy and don't want it known that a member of their family is handicapped, so they won't go to one of the national or provincial organizations.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: They don't have to go to them.

Mr. B. Newman: They would like to be able to go directly to a sales tax office.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: They can apply directly to us if they so desire, and most of them do. If there are any complications or if we need any advice on it, those are the people we go to for advice. I did give you a list of the items that are tax exempt, and we are open to suggestions all the time.

The suggestion you made about the new chair is something that staff should certainly look at to see whether that should be given a tax exemption; we are open to those kinds of suggestions. The only point I was trying to make was that we are tax collectors.

Mr. Haggerty: Of the worst kind; you have no heart over there at all.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We are really not in the social field. While we are prepared to cooperate, I think decisions should be made by someone who is perhaps a little better qualified to make those decisions than we would be as tax collectors.

Mr. B. Newman: You make a good point, Mr. Minister, but I would still like to see your officials look at it a little more seriously, because the numbers you have mentioned to us that have received tax exemptions really is just a drop in the bucket when you look at the number who are handicapped in our province. It is a start, it is a good thing, we commend them for doing it; but let's expand it as much as we can.

We are not asking anything for anyone other than those you have sympathy for, as I think everyone else in this House has and as have I. I don't think I am any more sympathetic to them than anyone else is here.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The point I was making when I gave you those figures is I was dealing only with automobiles that were converted for the use of the handicapped. I am dealing with no other item at all. I am not talking about artificial limbs or anything like that in that figure. I am talking only about vehicles.

For instance, some vehicles may have to have a much wider door than others, so it is a specially manufactured vehicle for that particular person. That is the type of thing I was referring to when I gave you the numbers. That isn't the total number of things we have done for the handicapped.

Mr. B. Newman: There are newer types of devices and equipment coming out every day and I hope your officials, as they get requests for tax exemption on these new pieces of equipment and so forth, look favourably on them.

Mr. Haggerty: I was just discussing this with my colleague, the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio), and he says the minister has a rather tough job over there to collect taxes. He said you can't keep up with your colleagues who are spending so fast over there.

The member for Windsor-Walkerville is making a strong plea. I suppose the minister should be looking at the good book, St. Mark, chapter 2, about how Levi, the tax collector for the Romans, was taking the taxpayers every way he could think of. Then one person came along and said, "Follow me," and he saw the light and there was a change in him. This is what the member for Windsor-Walkerville is trying to indicate to the minister. Let's have a change of heart for the handicapped persons throughout Ontario and really give them some assistance.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Levi worked on a percentage though.

Mr. Haggerty: Don't tell him that.

The minister, in a previous question I asked him about the retail sales tax, was almost crying that there wasn't enough revenue coming in, however if I look at the track record of the ministry's estimates over the last two or three years there has been an increase of almost 15 per cent in the last three years, and that's a substantial windfall.

Perhaps much of it can be derived from metric conversion, which the government so enthusiastically got on the bandwagon with. It is a great thing for the government. I remember last year during the estimates I raised a question related to the gasoline tax, and you said at that time the conversion would bring in about $4 million more.

I don't have to tell anyone that every time a person wants to get some work done on his automobile or get his oil changed in the car, instead of taking four quarts of oil it now takes five. If one looks at the revenue generated, the windfall profits from that alone, one would think some of it should be passed back to the consumer; but apparently even the plea from the member for Windsor-Walkerville isn't receiving too much attention today.

I bought some antifreeze the other day. I looked at the price of it and I thought it was just out of this world. I happened to look at the shelf and said, "You have some old stock there from last year." I bought the old gallon at that time and I compared it to the present metric conversion, and there is quite a difference in the quantity alone.

The consumer is buying a small quantity today but the price has increased substantially and has brought revenue to the ministry. I think this minister is part of the con game that has taken additional revenue from the consumers of Ontario and added to it the windfall profits from the large increase in the retail sales tax over the last two or three years. I think eventually there is going to be a breaking point on this and we are going to have to see a change on that side.

I don't think the public is going to stand for it much longer. They have been hoodwinked into metric conversion and it has been costly to the consumer. Almost everything he buys today in the grocery store or for his automobile has an increased price on it. You have been part of that inflationary cost that has spiralled in the last four or five years by going along with metric conversion.

It is not necessary in Ontario or even in Canada. Our greatest trading partners are the Americans and they aren't jumping on that metric conversion bandwagon. I suggest the government should take another good look at this thing. All it has brought is windfall profits to the ministry here and profits to the large corporations. I think it's time the government takes a second look at this thing. If they wanted to get into a study they could find out just what effect it has on the consumers. It's been costly and I think it's something that wasn't necessary at this time.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: There is no question we have an increase in revenue in retail sales tax over the last two or three years; but I think to be fair one also has to look at the other side of the ledger, we have to realize what the demand for dollars has been on the government as well. Inflation does feed us more taxes. If the price of something goes up we gain, there is no question about that; and inflation has been moving for some time. It is not that we have raised the rates of retail sales tax, we haven't raised them. It's seven per cent and has been—

Mr. Haggerty: You don't have to when one has to buy five for four.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: By the same token, our expenditures are going up too, because of inflation, the same as everyone else's. So while we may be showing a bigger revenue in retail sales tax, if you look at expenditures—

Mr. Haggerty: It's poor management.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It's only fair to compare our expenditures. You can't make the comparison just in this ministry, you must deal with the government situation in general; what it's costing us to operate now as compared to what it cost when we were taking in less in retail sales tax. I think everything is fairly relevant. We haven't added items to the retail sales tax over the last couple of years since I have been the minister.

Mr. Haggerty: It is not too many who want to—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: As a matter of fact we have eliminated things, we have taken some off; for example the energy package that we brought in in the last session, all of the insulating materials that have been given an exemption. Mind you, on the other side of the scale, before the member for Hamilton Mountain stands up, I admit we are collecting some retail sales tax on cable TV and other items like the rolling stock on railways; we have added those items, but the seven per cent has not changed over that period of time. Those are some of the reasons our revenue is up.

The cable TV thing is not going to show on the figures you have now because it was only implemented in March. We won't know what results that will produce until the next time around. There have been some items that have been added and some items that have been deleted, but as I recall the last budget that we brought in, overall, in all of the taxes that we dealt with, I think there was an increase of something like $80 million or in that neighbourhood projected overall in the entire budget.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Minister, the government apparently will be opening duty-free shops at all points of entry to the United States, that is all points of entry in Ontario to the United States. The federal authorities have already permitted that and it's just a matter of time before Ontario will be selling alcoholic beverages without a tax to our American friends. Have your officials estimated the loss in revenue as a result of these shops; I would assume that maybe from the duty-free shops at the airport you might have an idea as to what it will cost the citizens of Ontario in tax losses?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The only tax in which this particular ministry is involved with liquor is the sales tax. As the member has already indicated, Americans would be taking it out of the province. Sales tax is a consumer tax. It's not being consumed in this province so therefore it would be exempt from tax, the same as the program we announced. Foreigners can buy any goods exempt from sales tax in the province and take them out.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Minister, you really don't get what I am referring to. You have people now who will take advantage of this. They will cross from Detroit into Windsor. They will go into the store. They will buy the items that they wish to purchase and they will go right back over to the United States—

Mr. Haggerty: Forty-eight hours.

Mr. B. Newman: —without paying a sales tax. Normally they still would have come into Windsor, but they would have had to go into a regular liquor store, during certain specified hours, to be able to buy this. Now we are not going to get that revenue because they are not going to have to go into a liquor store. They will be able to go and bring it into the United States on that 24 or 48-hour exemption.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I am informed by staff that actually the province doesn't involve themselves in the duty-free shops, it's the federal government.

Mr. B. Newman: I know you don't, but that individual would have had to have gone to a liquor store to purchase the article, wouldn't he? He would have paid the sales tax, or it would have been built into the price of the bottle of alcoholic beverage. It is in there, you are not selling it to him for nothing; but when he goes into the duty-free shop he is no longer paying, let's say, $10 for the bottle, he is only paying $8 for the bottle. There is $2 of revenue lost to the province.

Mr. Haggerty: More than that.

Mr. B. Newman: I am being very conservative.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I am told by staff it is the federal customs people who should catch that situation, not us. I know what the honourable member is getting at. He is telling me when the duty-free stores are right at the border people don't have to go any further than that to do their shopping and go back over. They don't leave any money anywhere else at all, and they just—

Mr. B. Newman: Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Not necessarily. I don't know the answer to that. It is not a policy this ministry deals with at all, in any way, shape or form. I could pass your concerns on perhaps—I don't know which ministry it would be.

Mr. B. Newman: There is a loss of revenue to the ministry or to some government agency from the fact that the article is purchased at a cheaper price because no longer are taxes involved on the article. It is duty free, so the buyer is paying substantially less for the article going into that duty-free shop and bringing it across the river to Detroit rather than going into one of our regular stores in the city of Windsor and paying the regular price plus all sales taxes on it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: He doesn't have to pay sales tax if he buys it somewhere else. If he comes over from the United States he can buy it tax free. All he has to do is apply for the retail sales tax rebate. It doesn't matter whether the price is $3 at the border or $7 in downtown Windsor, the fact is there is no retail sales tax anyway.

The honourable member will recall the pamphlet I sent over when we announced that people out of province could purchase tax free, so that people in Detroit or wherever can come over to Ontario and buy. They can buy an automobile or anything else tax free. They either fill the application out at the time, or they take it with them and apply when they get home, but they can purchase it tax free.

Mr. B. Newman: I understand all of that, but that individual will come to Windsor on a Saturday afternoon, he will buy the article and he will go right back over to Detroit and he will simply make a declaration he had been in Windsor for 24 hours or 48 hours, the required length of time.

I know he can be travelling from Buffalo through to Windsor and take two days or a day, whatever is required, and buy it and declare it on the American side without paying any type of tax, but he is going to be buying it at a substantially reduced price in the duty-free shop.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: But he doesn't have to be here any length of time today. He doesn't have to be here 24 hours or 48 hours to buy goods free of retail sales tax. There is no reason for him to be here any more than 10 minutes. The honourable member and I will talk about it later. I think there is a misunderstanding.

Item 7 agreed to.

Vote 802 agreed to.

On vote 803, guaranteed income and the tax credit program:

Mr. Swart: I want to take a few minutes—not too long—on the issue of the administration of the property tax credits. I have expressed concern a number of times over the last two or three years about what is taking place in the property tax credit field, and I want to reiterate and re-emphasize the seriousness of it in these estimates.

We all recognize, as I'm sure the minister does, that the property tax credit was brought in to relieve the regressiveness of the property tax, which has been shown by studies made by Mr. White and many others to be a very regressive tax. It was introduced, I believe, in 1972. Then I guess it would be fair to say in 1974 the tax credit was very much enhanced and brought to a level which to a very substantial degree did almost to—tally relieve the regressiveness of the property tax. I give credit to the government for doing that. I think that was a good move that was followed to some extent by other jurisdictions in this nation.

Since 1974, the property tax credit has come to be a lesser and lesser part of the total taxes paid by the average person on low income in this province. The regressiveness which existed before has been now reoccurring to a very substantial degree. I'm hoping the minister will very seriously consider making recommendations, because I think this is what should be done in his case for changes in that property tax credit.

The minister probably knows mill rates in this province during the last four years, from 1974 to 1979, according to the figures from the government itself, went up by 61 per cent. Actually, the average residential property tax went up a bit more than that because, as we know, the average assessment per home has increased somewhat year by year because of new buildings and improvements in the homes. In fact, the average property tax has increased by about 65 per cent in the last five years. I think the minister's staff would bear out those figures.

The property tax credit during that period of time has only gone up from $387 million to $455 million for this year. That is an estimate from this year which was taken from the budget. That's an increase of about 18 per cent while taxes have gone up by 65 per cent.

The minister shakes his head. Let me pull out some of his own documents. Let me refer to Advance Notice of 1978 Provincial Transfers to Local Government, Municipal Spending and Mill Rate Performance, 1974 to 1977, turn to page 3 of that document where it states that during those three years, from 1974 to 1977 the total percentage increase in residential mill rates was 43.5 per cent.

According to the minister's figures in the following year it was 5.1 per cent; but this has to be compounded, and that's on top of the 43.5 per cent. This year it is estimated to be 6.9 per cent. If these figures are compounded on top of the 43.5 per cent, that brings it to 61 per cent.

I suggest that figure is correct. If you add in the increase in assessment per residence also, the increase which takes place and which is adjusted for the equalization factors about every other year, you will find it brings it up to 65 per cent. I say that statement is correct.

It's bad enough that the property tax credit has fallen relatively by that amount, which is a very substantial amount, but if the minister looks at his own figures he will find the property, the increase in the property tax credit to those on the lower incomes—those in the $5,000, $7,500 and even up to $10,000 range—has not increased by that average 18 per cent. It has increased by between 15 per cent and 16 per cent. Again, that is from the figures of the government of Ontario. Here we have a situation where people, particularly in the lower income bracket, may have received—and I am going to go into that in just a minute—about 60 per cent of their taxes being paid by the province in 1974 under the tax credit system. Now we find that has been dramatically reduced.

What it means is the increase in the property tax burden has fallen most heavily on those in the lower income groups since 1974; the net tax they have to pay has increased, percentagewise, far more than it has for those in the middle and high-income groups. We have a program of restraint, we hear predictions—and it is already taking place—that the standard of living is going to fall, the cost of living is increasing more rapidly than the average income.

Statistics Canada stated at the beginning of October or November that in the preceding year the cost of living rose nine per cent and the average income had only gone up by six per cent. That is something we, in this party, do not think should necessarily take place, because there is a solution to it. But you are the government, and there is the government in Ottawa; therefore, it has taken place. That's bad enough, but when you have the burden falling more heavily on those in the lower-income brackets—and property tax is a fairly substantial tax—you should take a new look at this and make recommendations.

Let me give you some figures taken from your own documents; I hope your staff will check them out afterwards. In 1974 on a standard property tax of $500, a person with an income of $5,000 that year—which is low, but there were many such at that time, including old-age pensioners, who had an income around that level—they had a tax credit on that $500 of $310. I am sure you are familiar with how that is worked out. If they were old-age pensioners they got that amount of tax credit. That left a net tax of $190.

The tax on the same house in 1979 at the average increase of 65 per cent would be $825. If those persons had the same income—and that is not normally the case; they would have had an increase in income; but if they did have the same income their taxes would be $472.50 as the net to be paid. The tax credit on the $825 would be $340, and the balance of $472.50 would have to be paid. This is up from $190 to $472.50. If their income had gone up during these five years in comparison with the guaranteed annual income, the tax credit would be even less. In fact, the amount they would have to pay would be a net tax of $512.50.

I am sure that if your staff goes into this they will concur, generally, with the figures I have given. These are old-age pensioners who paid a net tax of $190 in 1974 in property tax; on the same house this year, 1979, they would pay $512.50.

The contrast is not quite so great for someone in that income group who is not an old-age pensioner; that $110 would remain the same. After deducting $110, that person would pay $300 in 1974; that figure is rather easy to compute; but now they would have paid $582.50 with the same income, or $622.50 if their income had increased in line with a guaranteed annual income.

If you look at the percentages on those, the pensioner with his income going up is paying two and three quarters times as much in net taxes; the person who is not a pensioner would be paying 90 per cent more than in 1974.

To put it another way, in 1974 the government was paying more than 60 per cent of the tax and now it is paying less than 40 per cent. Conversely, the old-age pensioner was paying less than 40 per cent of the $500 in 1974; now he's paying more than 60 per cent of the $825.

Mr. Bradley: Remember Darcy said he was going to fix that all up in his budget?

Mr. Swart: I remember. I have that budget right here. He was going to bring in a whole new program for the senior citizens and relieve them of their taxes. That $110 was going to be raised to $400 and they were going to relieve them.

I'm not even asking for that here today. I'm asking the minister to take a look at it and at least keep up the same percentage they were paying back in 1974. Surely those on low incomes, and this applies to those up to $10,000 or so, in a decreasing proportion, should not have to bear the brunt of the restraint program of your government.

I'm asking the minister to make an adjustment on this so that those old-age pensioners and others on the very low income don't go on to suffer this kind of tax abuse which is being applied against them.

I hope when the minister gets up he will make some answer to this. I hope he will say whether he has any plans to make any adjustments in this field to enrich that, or to make any adjustments in any way to this so those people get a fair break.

What I'm really saying is that the property tax credit really should be indexed to the increases in property tax. I think that's not an unfair way to do it. I would like the ministry to consider that.

I know the minister doesn't have all the control. He's got to go to the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), he perhaps makes the final decision on that; but the minister does administer and I hope he will bring to the Treasurer's attention this hardship that is being applied against those on low incomes.

The second point I want to make with regard to the tax credit will be brief, I made it before. Although it is called a tax credit at the present time, it takes on the connotation more of a tax refund. The person has to pay the total tax, whether it's in July or whatever the time of year, and then wait until the next April until he gets either a credit, or often, with the low-income earners, a refund on those taxes.

There are two reasons I feel strongly, and my party feels strongly, that this tax credit, recognizing administrative problems involved in it, should be applied at the time the taxes are paid. They shouldn't have to pay this and then get it back at some later date. I think it is possible to find a way of avoiding that.

One reason I feel it is important, and I'm sure the minister would agree with me on this, is that if they get a tax credit at the time they pay the tax there is a realization on their part, if they went in to pay taxes of $800, and there was $300 deducted right at that time that it is a tax credit. Now they get it back later in the following year and many of them don't really relate it directly to taxes paid. I'm sure the minister would agree with me on that. It's desirable for people in a democracy, or whether you have a democracy or not really, to realize what is taking place. You have greater accountability if that is the case. It's important people know what is taking place. If they are getting a tax credit it is directly applicable to that amount of money they're paying and the government of this province is paying part of that tax for them. I think it's important for that reason, but a greater reason, which these people have already stated of course, is they now have to find the money.

Many of the people on lower incomes, as we're all aware, live from hand to mouth. They wait for their old-age pensions and the Gains cheques to come in at the end of the month. They hold off buying things. They don't have any reserve or any reservoir they can coast on. When they get a tax bill of some $500, $600 or $700, whatever the case may be, it is a real blow to them and they have real difficulty paying it. If there is some way of working out a tax credit so they didn't have to pay that, I think it would be extremely desirable.

I want to throw out two suggestions. One comes from my colleague from Hamilton Mountain, who is not in his seat right now but is coming in. One method might be, where there are wage earners at least, to have them declare this on the form they have to fill out yearly, or often yearly, if there is any change yearly with regard to their dependants, et cetera. That form could be filled out each year and they wouldn't have that deducted from their income tax.

Because so many of these people who get the main advantage of this, or should get the main advantage of this, are very low income earners, like senior citizens who don't get a weekly wage per se, I think it could be better worked out by having a credit at the time they go to pay their taxes.

I noticed administratively there can be problems with regard to that, but I suggest to you the government of this province, the government of this nation, and perhaps it's the federal government which has the prime responsibility, could devise a way where they would have a table sent to the local municipalities. Once a person has sent in his income tax form—and let's make no mistake about it, the senior citizens and those on low incomes and have some refunds coming are the first ones who send them in—they could send to that person a statement—it would only have to have his name on it and the amount—which says he fits into a certain category. That would entitle him to a certain percentage of tax rebate. When he went to the municipality he would take that with him, so the notice could go to the municipality. Those are details that can be worked out. I suggest to you, because most municipal taxes are not paid until July at least, the tax bills don't go out and are paid in the latter part of the year, and your income tax is sent in in the early part of the year, it would be possible for the government to do this. They would have a form stating the tax credit that person would be entitled to for that year, so they wouldn't have to find all of that money to pay that tax and then get it back a year later.

I want to reiterate I believe the property tax credit should be indexed to property tax increases, so those on the lower incomes don't keep on losing year by year, as has been the case since 1974.

I want to say the property tax credit should be applied at the time of payment of the taxes. There may be a percentage where this would not work and they would have to get it at the end of the year, but I think it could apply to the majority of the people.

Finally, I want to ask the minister a question. I'm not sure if this has been raised before, but first of all we on this side of the House feel very strongly that the property tax credit which is going to be given by the federal government should in no way be deducted from the property tax credit which is given by the provincial government. I believe this year it's going to be $62.50, and it's going to be increasing, to every person who lives in their own home. I'm hoping when the minister gets up he will have a flat commitment that it will not be deducted in any way from the property tax credits of the provincial government, because yours has been decreasing as a percentage quite dramatically year by year and when the federal government is going to give it, it should go to these people and in no way should be deducted from the provincial property tax credits.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my remarks. I just want to say that these suggestions, recommendations—however you want to take them—are given in good faith, in good part, to you. If my figures are correct—and I suggest they will be borne out; there has been that dramatic increase in net property taxes for those on lower income—you yourself in government will want to take a look at this and see if there is some way of adjusting this, of enriching the property tax credits. Give it the high priority it deserves, because those people on those low incomes find property tax a real burden.

I know, and I am sure the minister does too, after the tax bill goes out you have those people on lower incomes coming to you and saying, "I don't know how I am going to pay these taxes. They go up every year." The last two years they have not gone up as much on the average in Ontario as they have previously, but this year they went up significantly more than they did last year and I am afraid that is kind of a bad omen; that is due primarily to the government restraint program.

I hope the minister will have some comments to make on this and give some kind of a commitment that he will be reviewing this whole thing to see if we can find something more equitable and something that more nearly relates to what your government did back in 1974.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, certainly I will make a commitment to the member to look into the concerns he has registered and check into the figures he has given me. He sort of took me by surprise on those; they may have been my figures or they may have been Intergovernmental Affairs', I am not sure. And I am not sure whether the member is referring to residential property tax there or whether he is talking about property tax right across the board in the province. There is certainly a difference.

Anyway, we will examine very closely what you have said. I am certainly sympathetic to assisting the seniors and the low-income people as much as possible. I am sure you are aware that all I can do really is make recommendations to the Treasurer who would make the final decision in a matter such as this—and the government itself, I suppose.

The second item you raised—the matter of getting the cheques to the recipients in a proper manner and at the right time for them to assist in paying the taxes and so on. We have looked at that quite a few times. We realize there are some problems there. As you know, we are tied at this point in time to the federal government income tax system. Application is made when they file their income tax and then the cheque is mailed from Ottawa and if they happen to owe any income tax it is deducted and they get the balance, and so on.

There are two ways in which we might be able to do something to change that. One is for the province to assume responsibility completely and do it ourselves. Then we could do the kind of things that you are suggesting. But as long as we are working through the federal government I think those kinds of suggestions are impossible because we can only work within the framework we are given by the federal people.

One of the big problems we have had in trying to work this situation out is that we pay one per cent to the federal government to administer that program for us. As the member indicated, it will cost us $455 million this year. Within our ministry I had my staff project what it would cost for the province to assume full responsibility and do this program ourselves, from the ground up; in other words, asking the recipient to submit directly to the province and have it processed by the province and a cheque go out at the proper time when taxes are due, instead of coming in long after they have paid their taxes, which does give them some real problems. The estimate that I have on the cost to set up that kind of bureaucracy is around $30 million.

That is to set it up. That would include the computer service and all the other things we would need to do it. From then on the cost would probably reduce to maybe $20 million a year. I would then have to justify to the people of the province why I am spending $15 million a year extra to get the cheques out to these people, which would be very difficult to do. I would also have to justify to my colleagues and to you people across the House.

First of all I would like to see the province have total credit for the money being expended on this program, but mainly be able to get the cheques out at the time they need them, that is really important. In order to do that we would almost have to go to a complete provincial program.

There is a second way of doing it, but I don't know whether that could be arranged or not. It could be that perhaps, some day, we could have the computer tapes sent from the federal government giving the names, addresses and the amounts of the property tax rebate, property tax credit, property tax—whatever term you want to call it. If those tapes could be made available to us, then the cheques could be issued from the province directly. The problem there would be with the timing, whether we would have them in time to be able to assist in getting the cheques out before the taxes became due.

Right now, those who have been on the program for a few years I presume may have adjusted a certain amount as to the timing because they actually do get their cheques about the time the first property tax bills come in, but they are really getting them for the previous year, not for the year they are paying the taxes on. Whether that adjustment could be made while we are using the tapes from the federal government I am not sure. I doubt very much if we could change that timing unless we went directly to our own program with our own bureaucratic set-up.

I really hesitate to go into that, because the other thing that concerns me about that is we would be asking those people to file, in essence, almost a separate income tax to us, another form. They now have to fill out their income tax form and the information derived from that is transferred to another form which is sent in with their income tax form. If we were to go separately and do it all on our own, we would have to ask each one to individually submit an application to us. I don't know how that may be received. People are sort of fed up with bureaucratic red tape and forms that they have to fill out now. To ask them to fill out another may be a burden.

Another thing is senior citizens, particularly in my area, either have somebody in the local golden age club or in the senior citizens' club sit down and assist them with their income tax forms or they pay someone $5 to do it. There are some people who will do it for senior citizens for $5. Would it mean that those who are now paying $5 would have to pay $10 to have two forms filled out? All of those things can become rather complicated.

We are working actively trying to find a solution to some of the problems you have mentioned and we will continue to do so. Before too long we hope to be able to come up with something that is reasonable and that will be of assistance to those people, who I understand very well really need the money when their taxes are due and not six months later, that is really what the situation is now.

On the matter of the federal property tax credit system that the member talked about, I was asked about that in one of the earlier debates. I obviously cannot speak for the government at this point. The provincial government to the best of my knowledge has not taken a position. However, I have said that personally I am totally against that program affecting our Ontario tax credit program; that is a separate and distinct program. It really has nothing to do with the Ontario tax credit program, nor should it. It shouldn't in any way affect the program we have had in place.

That is another reason it may become a little more confusing to the seniors when these cheques start coming out from the federal government along with our Ontario tax credit program returns. I don't know how we are going to be able to explain to the seniors they are getting so much from here and so much from there. Maybe it is time we were sending out our own cheques, at the very least, rather than having them come from the federal government.

But I am speaking now as the Minister of Revenue. I can't speak for the government because it has not been discussed, to my knowledge, at this time. However, I personally am not in favour of taking into account any of the federal property tax credits and using them in any way to affect our program. That's my personal stand on it. I presume the government will take the same stand but I am not prepared to commit the government until discussions have taken place.

Mr. Swart: Just one further question of clarification. I understood the minister to say that he personally didn't feel he should take into account the funds which are being transferred from the federal government as a property tax credit directly to the individual. The minister will get strenuous opposition from this side of the House if there is any reduction made in the provincial property tax credit because the federal government is also getting into the field. However, there may be some places where adjustments might be made. The minister might be able to adjust his program so that those who have the greater need may get more from his program than in the flat rate from the federal program. We would not have any objection to some form of adjustment as long as the provincial government didn't use that to reduce or to prevent increases they otherwise would be giving in the property taxes.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, I understand the point the honourable member is making. I understand also that some kind of adjustments might be made. For instance, we all know very well the federal property tax credit program is only for home owners, while our Ontario tax credit program covers tenants and so on. I am sure that is what the honourable member has in mind when he is talking about adjustments. It is possible that some adjustments could be made in that regard, but it has not been considered at this point.

I only make the commitment on a personal basis. My personal viewpoint is that I will not, as the Minister of Revenue—subject of course to the government's final decision—use that money to make reductions in the total amount that is being spent on Ontario taxpayers.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to raise a different issue with the minister. That is the Gains program. In the first instance I'd like to commend his officials. Anytime a call is made by my office to the Gains office, it's always expedited with courtesy and that is really appreciated by my own office staff as well as by the individuals for whom we are appealing the case.

But Gains is not indexed. Is the ministry considering indexing it so that it could reflect more closely the cost of living as do the old-age security and the guaranteed income supplement on the federal levels?

One sees the tremendous increases in the price of energy presently in effect and how in the future they are going to be substantially higher. One reads American newspapers where various cities are passing legislation that will provide for energy supplements. The city of Detroit is in the process of passing legislation for this. The state of Michigan now has legislation that will provide energy supplements. The US Congress has a little over $2 billion that it is planning on passing on as energy supplements to people on fixed and low incomes.

I would think it would be fitting at this time to consider increasing the supplement, or at least tying the supplement in to the cost of living; and also to consider, if at all possible—I would like your input on that—an energy supplement so that the elderly and those on fixed incomes can after some fashion meet the high cost of energy in the forthcoming year.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: As the member knows I am sure, the guaranteed income supplement is tied to the cost-of-living index. It is brought up to date quarterly, if I am not mistaken. I think it's every three months.

Mr. B. Newman: I am referring to Gains.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I know you are. Gains is tied to the guaranteed supplement program.

Mr. B. Newman: It's indexed?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, but what I am suggesting to you is the guaranteed income supplement program is indexed and is adjusted according to the cost of living every three months. As the member is probably aware, we pass a regulation every three months to ensure that is passed on to the senior citizens. If we didn't, what would happen is the $38.88 you were referring to a little earlier would be reduced. So we must pass a regulation increasing our guaranteed annual income so that they get full benefit of whatever that increase is.

The Gains program itself is not tied to the cost of living index.

Mr. B. Newman: That's my whole argument.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: When we say $38.88 per month, we are talking about a single person.

Mr. B. Newman: I am referring to the maximum.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The maximum is $53.65.

Mr. B. Newman: For a single person?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Okay, $53.65 for married spouses. It's an intriguing thought, but as the member I am sure is aware we have not in this government, to the best of my knowledge, indexed to the cost of living any program I know of. I think if we do we really help to feed inflation. We have to be fair and try to make sure our seniors get a proper amount, and I think we have. They are now partially tied to an index through the guaranteed income supplement, which is passed on quarterly, so their income increases every three months. It has never been delayed. It has always been passed directly on.

I think the member will recall the $20-a-month increase that was a sort of special increase. It was not tied to the cost of living that was also passed on by us, and as a matter of fact we passed it on also to those whom we support fully in Gains, those ones that have been dropped by the federal government because of the change in the citizenship rules and whom we carried on with. I think it cost the province something like $600,000 extra to extend that $20 to those ones who are totally our responsibility within the Gains program.

I don't want the members to think that we are unresponsive to assisting, but we have not, to the best of my knowledge, tied any of our programs to the cost of living by indexing. I don't see this government moving in that direction at this time.

Mr. B. Newman: I think the minister is in error. There is one program—maybe not his program, but a government program—that may not be indexed but provides an eight per cent increase annually, so the next year's benefits are eight per cent more than they are this year and I assume the following year they will be another eight per cent more. So there is a precedent set already that is being practised by his government.

But on the $38.88 which is the amount that—and I am referring to the single individual, I know it is $53.65 for the couple; why doesn't the minister consider, if not indexing it to the cost of living, increasing it on an annual basis, maybe not necessarily to the cost of living?

A senior citizen having to live today on $364.87, unless he is in geared-to-income housing, government housing, has one heck of a time getting by. I can accept that the couple can get by a little easier on a total of $708 or $709; it is double the amount for a married couple; but for a single citizen, $364.87 is extremely hard.

Geared-to-income housing, government housing, does enable them to get a break, but think of the numbers that can't get into government geared-to-income housing who must go into the commercial market to get housing. They still have to live. They don't have their energy supplemented as would some who are living in geared-to-income housing. The senior citizen who doesn't have those advantages has it extremely difficult at $364.87, unless he is being assisted by members of his family and/or is getting assistance from some organization or even Community and Social Services.

The minister is not considering substantially increasing that $38.88, is he?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We review these things from time to time. It is not under review at the present time. I can certainly make sure it does go under review again, to have a look at it. It is again a case where it wouldn't be a decision made by the Minister of Revenue alone, it would be the Treasurer; but we can make recommendations to the Treasurer and certainly I will have my staff reviewer it again.

Mr. B. Newman: The reason I raise it this year is because of the tremendous increases these seniors are going to be confronted with in energy costs.

There is no use telling the honourable minister. He understands it all, as do his officials. But I certainly would appreciate it if they bent an ear to the advantage of the senior citizen in this instance, as I did with the handicapped earlier.

Mr. Charlton: I would like to jump back for just a few moments, if we could, to the property tax credit. In his statement my colleague, the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart), referred to the 1978 budget and the announcement in that budget by Mr. McKeough that the new proposed formula for the property tax credit was a rather significant formula in terms of enriching the property tax credit in this province, especially for seniors and low-income people. The hitch was that new formula would not be put in place until we had gone to full market-value assessment.

Now we have postponed indefinitely the implementation of full market-value assessment. The Ministry of Revenue is presently engaged in what is obviously going to be at least a two-year, perhaps a three-year program of equalizing assessments under section 86. This means it is very unlikely we are going to see market value for four or perhaps five years, if ever—at least for a fairly lengthy period.

Have there been any discussions going on between yourself and the Treasurer and whoever else might be involved—I guess perhaps the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells)—about implementing that proposed formula without market value, or perhaps at least enriching the present formula somewhat, going part way in the absence of market value?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: In the discussion dealing with the particular item in the 1978 budget, as I'm sure the member is very much aware, there are ongoing discussions regarding the results of the equalization factors. That has to do with grants to municipalities, which in turn has to do with the amount of taxes people pay.

To be specific, no, we have not been discussing that. I think it was $75 million or something which was going to be put in at that time, in the 1978 budget; I think that's the item the member is referring to, subject to property tax reform. We have not been discussing that, but we have been discussing the implementation of equalization factors for 1981.

As the member knows, we have a new program that only deals with 1980. That's a matter that has to be discussed and decided upon, because obviously it could be costly. I don't know what it will be. It depends on how it's done. Those finance doors are being left open until a decision is taken on that particular matter. I don't anticipate we'll be talking about other items until after a decision is taken on that.

Mr. Charlton: All right. I can understand what you are saying. You made a commitment in your response to the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) to at least have a look at the things which he brought to your attention.

I can't vouch for the exact accuracy of his figures, but I think it should be obvious to you that for the last several years, each year in succession the amount of the property tax credit any one individual has received as a percentage of their total taxes was reduced.

I recall, for example, during the 1975 election when seniors in the city of Hamilton—and I don't know how true this was here in Metro where taxes are somewhat higher—were getting fairly close to all of their property taxes back; at least that was the case for seniors who had no taxable income, who were just getting the straight OAS/GIS Gains cheque. Now they're getting approximately half or a little better than half back. There has been a substantial change and I would like the minister to look and think very seriously about what it's going to mean if we let that continue for another four or five years.

In effect, the good social-economic impact which the property tax credit initially had for seniors, people on fixed incomes and low incomes, will have disappeared virtually altogether. I think it's time, this year, you took a serious look, in conjunction with the Treasurer, at some kind of move to up the property tax credit.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We've already made the commitment to the member for Welland-Thorold that we would look at that, and I will look at it.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, in relation to the earlier discussion which took place with the member from Windsor, there's a point that concerns me regarding the Gains program as it applies to a situation where a husband would be 68 years old and the wife would be 58 years old. She's not entitled to the spouse allowance. I'm thinking of a particular case where the lady is disabled due to a polio attack which happened back in the 1940s. I think her last cheque last month was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $16 because of the adjustment in the last quarter of the old-age security pension. After I did some quick calculating I feel that this year, with the increase in the Canada Pension and another adjustment in the old-age security allowance, this woman in particular is going to be without any provincial benefits whatsoever.

I realize there is a combination of Community and Social Services and your ministry, but it seems to me that to cut them off is going beyond what we feel would meet the human needs of the family. It is not only a matter of losing income, there is also the fact that the individual loses the drug benefits she is now entitled to, even though she gets a small pension.

I have to agree with the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) that the whole system of the guaranteed annual income supplement program in conjunction with the benefits offered by the Ministry of Community and Social Services should be looked at. It is not every case, but where persons were married some years ago, or in present-day marriages where only one of the parties has reached pension age, I think it does present a hardship in a number of cases where this takes place.

Knowing your understanding of people in your area, I think it might be necessary to look into this to see if a more equitable adjustment can be made in providing assistance for these people.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, in the example the member has used, where the wife is 58, she would be dealing with the Ministry of Community and Social Services and not with my ministry. She would have to be 65 to come under the Gains program.

Mr. Worton: Her husband is 68 years of age.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, so he would be receiving Gains and would be dealing with my ministry. But his wife would be dealing with the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

I can understand what the member is saying. I have run into those kinds of situations myself and it is sometimes very difficult.

I would be happy to pass his concerns on to the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton); and perhaps our staff, when they are looking at the overall Gains A program, can take a look at that as well.

Vote 803 agreed to.

On vote 804, municipal assessment program; item 1, administration:

Mr. Charlton: I have a number of things I would like to raise under this vote, but today I just have a few questions in terms of direction.

The minister and I have discussed a number of times the section 86 program. On the last occasion I spoke to the minister about this he was looking at 107 municipalities which had applied to have a look at section 86 for next year. The discussion revolved around how many of those municipalities would opt for section 86 once they had seen the data.

I understand meetings have been going on. I would like to know from the minister how they are going and whether the municipalities are accepting section 86 or dropping their requests.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The impact studies of section 86 have now been presented, I think, to pretty well all of those municipalities that had requested it; that is, the final stages. They have the right after seeing the impact study to decide whether or not they want to proceed with the section 86 program.

You are right, there were 107 municipalities which applied for the impact study. I think as of this morning there were 14 municipalities that had passed resolutions asking us to proceed with section 86. Those municipalities were given roughly two weeks to respond. That two-week period is not up at this point, but I don't think there are that many days left to go. We should have results coming in fairly fast in these next few days. We gave them two weeks and we weren't too stringent with that either. As the member knows, with the procedure we have to go through in order to get the assessment roll out in time, there is a timetable we must keep.

At the present moment, as of this morning, there were 15 municipalities that we'll be proceeding with that have requested the implementation of section 86.

Mr. Charlton: Perhaps the minister can get just a little bit more specific. He has had 15 municipalities that have requested it. Has he had any councils inform him, as a result of studying the impact study they've decided not to go?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That wasn't the way the system was set up. The system was set up in this way. They got the impact study. If they want us to implement section 86, they must pass a resolution and get back to us within two weeks. If two weeks transpire and they don't get back to us, it's obvious they are not prepared to proceed with a section 86 program.

Mr. Charlton: You have no indications at this point of any that may have already decided not to go? Perhaps the minister could clarify with his staff just when that time will run out.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Approximately at the end of next week, I am told. There's some time to go yet.

Mr. Charlton: Perhaps the minister could get some kind of an indication from his staff. I think he will recall in the discussions we had a few weeks ago he expressed some concerns about how many of those 107 municipalities might go. Does he have any kind of an indication or feel from his staff, who have met with these municipalities and presented the impact studies, how many are likely to go?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It's a guesstimate, but the staff seems to feel it could be as high as 50 per cent or maybe higher. There's no way of knowing until they actually pass the resolution requesting it. It really isn't fair to put a figure on it because we really don't know. While the municipal treasurer or someone else may think it's a great thing, when it gets to the full council there may be a majority that says it doesn't want to do it. It's very difficult to get a handle on that.

Mr. Charlton: I guess it's not going to be very long before we know anyway how many of those 107 will go. The reason I raised the whole thing is, as the minister will recall, when he announced the section 86 program last year, we had a number of debates in the House that referred to that particular program and its voluntary nature. I guess we probably got into that discussion a bit as well last fall on the postponement bill. It seems to me, I don't have an exact number, there are over 800 municipalities in this province, but if I recall correctly we equalized 12 last year.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Fourteen.

Mr. Charlton: We had an additional 107 apply this year to have a look. The minister is saying to us we could have as many as half of them drop out. We don't know, but we will very shortly. Any way you look at it, we're still going to have a fairly substantial number, in the neighbourhood of 700 municipalities in this province, that have not gone.

Part of the criticism we raised with the minister last year was the voluntary nature of the program. The minister had expressed at that time the feeling he could get the vast majority of this province equalized under section 86 in two years. It seems to us that's not likely to happen now. Through a voluntary program, the minister may get the entire province, or virtually the entire province, equalized in four or five years at the rate it's going.

[That doesn't seem acceptable. We don't feel section 86 is the direction the government should be going. We admit there are some benefits and some improvements involved in section 86; however, if we've got a section 86 program which is totally voluntary and not likely to reach all corners of this province for some years to come, what are you going to propose to do if half drop out this year and you don't get a lot of applications next year and so on? At what point is your ministry going to take this whole thing in hand and see that it happens across the province? At what point are you going to say, "Okay, the voluntary nature of this program is not producing what we wanted across the province"?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It's a very difficult question to answer. We don't know how well the voluntary program is going to proceed. It's really a hypothetical question at this time for me to answer as to when we would be prepared to go across the province.

The member talked about 800 and some odd municipalities. That's true, but remember that between 1970 and 1975, 250 of them were reassessed. Those municipalities aren't too badly off as far as assessment is concerned compared to some of the other areas of the province.

I am more or less content to proceed on the basis we're proceeding because I know the municipalities that have the greatest inequities and the greatest problems are the ones that are going to request the section 86 program.

The ones that have a relevantly level assessment across the municipality are not going to be in a hurry to ask for section 86.

I was reading in the paper this morning that the city of Burlington had started movements toward the section 86 program. They've had a look, not at the impact study but the first information that we produced for a municipality; they're satisfied there aren't that many inequities so they've decided not to go. My staff informs me there aren't that many inequities in the city of Burlington. I'm not saying there aren't some but there aren't as many glaring ones as there are in the Cambridges of this world, or a few other municipalities.

So I'm saying the section 86 program, on a voluntary basis, will take place in those municipalities that are having a great amount of problems with their assessment, losing appeals and with inequities within the classes and so on. I think those requests are going to come on a basis whereby they will ask for it when they feel they need it. I don't think there is too much wrong with that kind of a program.

Certainly it would be helpful to my ministry if every municipality in the province wanted to have a section 86 program, but I think the member realizes that even if everyone agreed, or if I brought in a policy that said everybody is going to be reassessed under section 86, I don't think the ministry personnel could do it all within two years anyway. If I said that last year it was probably before we had an opportunity to see how much work is really involved in the section 86 program in each municipality. Even if there was a policy whereby we said we were going to do every municipality whether they wanted it or not, I don't think the staff I have could complete the program in two years.

Mr. Charlton: A number of things seem to be changing here in attitude and approach. I understand the point the minister made about a number of municipalities. I have forgotten the number the minister mentioned, 250 between 1970 and 1975.

On the other hand, though, in the last few months I have talked to municipal politicians from all over southern Ontario and even a number that have been referred to me by several of our members from northern Ontario. It would seem to me that in the first year, last year, it was true that the municipalities that were applying were those with the greatest inequities. I am not sure because I don't have information on all of the councils in this province, but I have a sense that the trend will be somewhat the opposite this year; that the municipalities with the greatest inequities are going to be the ones that back away once they see the impact studies. Some of those that don't see any great political problems in the impact studies because there aren't any excessive inequities may opt for the section 86 equalization because they want to see those who have been paying slightly too much get a reduction and those who are somewhat underassessed getting an increase and equalizing the whole thing; that is theoretically what the whole process is supposed to be about as long as it doesn't get too offensive in anybody's ward, or whatever the case happens to be.

My sense from talking to people in Haldimand and a few from Burlington, and a number from the north and from other areas in southern Ontario, is that you are likely to see quite the opposite this year in terms of those which choose to go; and that, in itself, will be counter to what you set out to do. It is going to shift the responsibility to find a solution to those inequities back to you, which is where it started out and has been ever since 1970.

The solution may very well be for you to impose a section 86 assessment. You could be right, I am not sure; I haven't been in any of the assessment offices for any of the section 86 programs that have been done in the last few years. I don't have a sense in terms of the amount of overall work load. You may be right that your present staff in the assessment division couldn't handle the whole province in two years, but if, for example you were to find that this year out of the 107 that have applied 50 per cent of them drop out and you are not getting the applications for next year you should be getting, there would be nothing wrong with you imposing section 86 and prioritizing the way you handle it, starting with the worst and working to the best. I don't see any serious problem, if you can't handle them all in one year, of at least dealing with the ones the politicians have been afraid to deal with.

Of course we are politicians too, aren't we, and I suppose that creates a problem. I think you know what I am getting at.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It is a little premature to make a commitment as to what will happen. You could very well be right, it could be that those which accept the section 86 program may be the ones which have not the most serious problems. We will know that by the time this exercise is over this year. But it is premature for me to make a decision as to whether I would decide to implement section 86 with or without the municipalities' consent. I suspect at this point in time I would not do something like that. However, that remains to be seen; and as I said before it is a sort of hypothetical question until we know which municipalities really go ahead with section 86 and which ones don't. We won't know that for another week or two until the results come in from the impact studies that have been released.

Mr. Charlton: I suppose, Mr. Minister, the main reason I got into all that really brings up the main point of the whole discussion. I am trying to get a sense of where we are heading with property tax reform, because I don't have one right now. I don't think anybody in this House does, except perhaps you—I am not even sure that you do, or the Treasurer, or the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. I am trying to get a sense of where we are heading, because we don't have it on this side at least and I just have a feeling there is no one on that side of the House who really has either.

We have shelved market value; albeit it is said it is shelved temporarily, but indefinitely temporarily—whatever. We haven't given up on it; you stated that quite clearly in response to my opening statement.

Who is doing what? What discussions are going on right now between yourself and your staff in the assessment division and the Treasurer and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs? What is happening right now in finding the ways that have excluded us in implementing the bigger package? Is there anything going on right now or has everybody shelved it and said, "Let's let our heads clear for a couple of years and maybe we will be able to come up with something fresh once we have forgotten about it"?

I am just trying to get a sense of what direction we are heading in the whole property tax area. I am trying to get a sense of whether or not anything is happening, whether there are any intentions there, or whether we are just trying to forget about it for a while.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We are not trying to forget about it because I am sure if anyone in this House realizes it the member for Hamilton Mountain realizes the introduction of the new equalization factors has put us in a position where we must come up with some sort of a program. What that program is going to be at this time I can't tell the member.

We developed a temporary program, as you are aware—the five per cent apportionment thing and the 10 per cent grant thing developed by the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs and Ministry of Education, and so on. That is for 1980. We must come up with some solutions to these problems as quickly as possible before 1981. The municipalities are entitled to know what they can expect in the future.

I am sure the member reads the newspapers as well as I do. The municipalities are very upset with this government because we have only announced the program for 1980. They don't know where they are going to move beyond that. They don't know what is going to happen. They don't know what the government has in store for them as far as grants, apportionments or anything else is concerned.

So there are ongoing meetings, particularly in the ministries of Treasury and Intergovernmental Affairs, to deal with the problem we are going to have to face, and it has to be faced relatively shortly.

My own staff will also be working on that. I can't tell the member what direction it is going to take at this point because I don't know the direction it is going to take. We are discussing various ways and means. There are several options open. What the final option is going to be it is too early for me to tell the member. All I can tell him is that various ministries are working on it, probably right now—well not at this time of night, it's five minutes to six, but they are working on it.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Minister, I do read the newspapers and I am here discussing this with you; and I was in the Intergovernmental Affairs estimates and discussed it with the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. Next week I will be in the Treasury estimates to discuss it with the Treasurer and I will know for sure by then—

Mr. Ruston: Don't count on it.

Mr. Charlton: —if there is any sense of direction over there. You don't have it—

Mr. Ruston: Don't count on that.

Mr. Charlton: —the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs doesn't have it. I suppose next week I am going to find out whether or not the Treasurer has any real sense of where we are going.

What I am really afraid of, because I do read the papers and I have talked to quite a number of municipal people—I haven't talked to all of them in the province, but I have talked to quite a few—and what I am really afraid of is, if there is no real sense of direction, if what is really going on over there is how the hell do we get ourselves out of this mess, we will end up next year announcing another one-year program and the following year announcing another one-year program and phasing in a shift over five or eight or whatever years; we'll never get set on a clear course to property tax reform again. That is the feeling I am getting and that is why I am raising the whole thing.

I think on Friday I would like to get into a somewhat extended discussion of some of these things and some of the aspects of what's happened in the last several years and where, in some respects, I think we should be going. Obviously I don't have time to get into all of that this evening. I am just getting the sense that there isn't any real direction at this point; in fact although the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs stated quite clearly the government had to find some solutions and this was only a one-year program, he said the same thing; "I have absolutely no idea what those solutions will be, not even where to go and look for them." I am getting the same response from you, and that just frightens me somewhat.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I didn't say that.

Mr. Charlton: There doesn't seem to be anybody over there who really knows where we have to go to look for the answers. It concerns me somewhat, because I've seen it happen with the reassessment program. When we first postponed it in 1974 it was a temporary postponement for two years, and ever since we've had a one-year postponement every year. We really don't seem to have come any closer to finding the solutions. One can't really blame me for getting the same kind of gut queasiness about what is happening now with section 86 programs, and with the equalization factors and the one-year program to try and alleviate the problems there. There have been no real positive statements on the part of the government that they're going to be making an announcement. They aren't saying, "We know where we are going, we're going to be making an announcement in six months or eight months, as soon as we have the details worked out, but we are going to be making an announcement about what's going to happen thereafter." We are not getting that kind of positive sense at all. I don't think I can be blamed for being somewhat sceptical at this point in terms of what is actually happening in relation to what we set out to do 10 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman. I didn't indicate to the member for Hamilton Mountain that I didn't know where we were going. What I said was there were several avenues for us to explore. Whether I said it in those exact words or not I am not sure, but that was the point I was trying to make. They are being explored at this particular point in time. We realize a program has to be in place, and soon, so municipalities can plan for 1981. I think they have a right to know what direction this government is heading as far as grants are concerned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Maeck, the committee of supply reported certain resolutions.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

FUNDING OF HOSPITALS

328. Mr. Breaugh: Would the Minister of Health indicate, for the last three fiscal years, which hospitals have appealed for additional funds; what were the reasons for such appeals; how much was requested; how long did it take the ministry to consider the appeal; and how much did the ministry give in each specific case? (Tabled October 25, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Hospital appeals for additional funds include: deficits as a result of a shortfall in operating costs; unpredictable growth in programs such as renal dialysis, pacemaker, hyperalimentation and other life support programs; as well as general areas of impact such as negotiated wage settlements. The time required to verify, confirm and develop appropriate responses varies according to the complexity of each appeal and the information provided by the hospital. Each appeal is addressed on an individual basis.

The information requested is maintained on an individual basis and kept with each hospital's budget information. In order to answer this question it would be necessary to manually search each hospital's file for the years indicated, to locate the components of the appeal and develop a summary compilation of this information. This data is not maintained routinely in a compiled form and therefore would require considerable and prohibitive man-hours to collect. It is therefore not possible in these circumstances to reply in the format requested without additional staff and funds.

Total payments made to individual hospitals are listed annually in public accounts, volume three.

OMB HEARINGS

346. Mr. Isaacs: How many applications against decisions of the Ontario Municipal Board resulted in court hearings in each of the years 1977 and 1978? What was the nature of each application? In how many of these cases did the court rule in favour of the applicant and against the Ontario Municipal Board? (Tabled November 5, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Neither the Ontario Municipal Board nor the Ministry of the Attorney General keeps a record of all applications against decisions of the Ontario Municipal Board which result in court hearings. The Ministry of the Attorney General does have copies of all written decisions of the divisional court involving the Ontario Municipal Board. Attached hereto are copies of the 1977 and 1978 decisions. (See sessional paper 257.)

The attached decisions would constitute the majority of court decisions affecting the Ontario Municipal Board.

Court decisions on which the ministry does not have any information would be cases which may have been heard by a single judge or matters which were commenced in 1977 or 1978 but not completed, or matters in which there were no written reasons given. It should be noted that in the majority of court cases involving the Ontario Municipal Board, the board is not represented by counsel.

HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

348. Mr. McClellan: Will the Minister of Community and Social Services inform the House: 1. How many children under 18 are resident in schedule I facilities; how many in schedule II facilities? How many children in, (a) schedule I facilities, and (b) schedule II facilities, are deaf, blind, or deaf-blind; and of these how many children in, (a) schedule I, and (b) schedule II facilities, have been registered by the CNIB? 2. How many children in, (a) schedule I and, (b) schedule II facilities, are being provided special programs for the blind, deaf, or deaf-blind? 3. How many professional staff are there, in addition to nurses, in each of the schedule II facilities; what is their area of expertise? How many staff are there in each schedule II facility who are qualified to work with blind, deaf and deaf-blind residents? 4. How many of the blind, deaf or deaf-blind children in, (a) schedule I facilities, and (b) schedule II facilities, are capable of benefiting from specialized community programs, for example, at Brantford, Milton? 5. How many staff consultants in programs for blind, deaf or deaf-blind children are employed by the ministry? On how many and which specific occasions have these consultants visited schedule II facilities in the past year to advise on and/or monitor the progress of children in special programs? 6. Will the ministry identify the schedule II facilities with special programs for multi-sensory handicapped? How many schedule II facilities are planning to introduce such programs in 1980? (Tabled November 5, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Norton: 1. As at March 31, 1979 there were 1,074 children in schedule I facilities and 657 in schedule II facilities.

In schedule I facilities there are 18 deaf, 27 blind and eight multisensory handicapped children. In schedule II facilities there are 10 deaf, 64 blind and 12 multisensory handicapped children. These figures include only those children with severe or profound hearing loss and children with no vision or legally blind.

While the number of clients registered with the CNIB is growing steadily, we do not have statistics showing the number currently registered. Normally, the CNIB only register blind persons when the application is signed by an ophthalmologist. Recently, we have been successful in obtaining registration upon application by qualified professionals other than ophthalmologists. Registration with the CNIB does provide access for the individual to services of the CNIB, however, all CNIB services are not fully available in all areas of the province in which facilities are located. Therefore, registration with CNIB does not guarantee additional services/benefits for the individual.

2. Special units for blind, deaf and deaf-blind children have not been established in schedule II facilities as yet. However, sensory stimulation programs do exist; blind and deaf children are attending special education classes; and in some cases hearing-impaired children have been placed in special approved homes where their unique needs are being met.

In schedule I facilities eight special units for deaf, blind and deaf-blind residents have been established and two more, for a total of 10, will be operational by the fiscal year end. One of the new units will be for children only, accommodating 16.

The existing eight programs are essentially oriented to the adult population, although there are four sensory-impaired children in the special units at Southwestern Regional Centre and nine children in the special units at Huronia Regional Centre, and one visually-impaired child in the special unit at Rideau Regional Centre. In addition, CPRI has a special day program for six disturbed, hearing-impaired children.

There are several other programs in schedule I facilities that provide for the unique needs of the blind, deaf and deaf-blind clients which are not designated as special programs. At Huronia Regional Centre there is a program for deaf adults, as well as one for blind adults. At Prince Edward Heights, Picton, there is a house program for 34 deaf adults. At Rideau Regional Centre there is a program for blind adults that includes three children and a communications training centre for children that includes four hearing-impaired clients.

These various programs do not represent the full extent of services to deaf, blind and deaf-blind (multisensory handicapped) clients in facilities. There are available a wide variety of professional and paraprofessional staff whose knowledge and skills are of direct benefit to the sensory handicapped residents. They represent such services as speech pathology, audiology, orientation and mobility, occupational therapy, special education, recreation and vocational services.

While it is extremely important to provide programs and services that meet special needs, it is also important that residents be integrated as much as possible into regular programs and activities of the facilities, thus equipping them to the fullest extent possible to participate in conventional community/home activities.

3. There are professional staff in each of the schedule II facilities as follows: Bethesda Home, 20; Brantwood, 12; Christopher Robin Home for Children, 7; Cochrane-Timiskaming Resource Centre, 18; Walter P. Hogarth Memorial Hospital, 11; Oaklands Regional Centre, 29; Ongwanada Hospital, 35; Plainfield Children's Home, 4; Rygiel Home, 12; and Sunbeam Home, 10.

In addition to these 158 developmental program staff there are over 800 direct care staff, made up of nurses and residential counsellors, who provide programs for the residents as well as meeting their personal care and health needs.

The professional staff represents such diverse areas of expertise as communications, kinesiology, occupational therapy, physiotherapy, psychology, recreation, school teachers (aids), social work, speech therapy and vocational services.

In addition, increasing numbers of children in schedule II facilities are attending special education classes in community schools or in classes held in the facility and funded through local school boards and the Ministry of Education.

It is difficult to answer the question: How many staff are there in each schedule II facility who are qualified to work with the blind, deaf and deaf-blind residents? Depending upon the definition of "qualified," all or none of the staff may be qualified. All of the staff are oriented to the needs of the mentally retarded and all are aware of the additional sensory handicap of blindness or hearing loss. In addition, special training has been provided to limited numbers of staff through CNIB, the Blissymbolics Communications Institute and others. Literature on the subject is scarce. Consequently, a major project was undertaken to prepare and make widely available to both facilities and community agencies a publication titled Their Special Needs (August 1977), which is an action guide to working with blind residents of mental retardation facilities. The ministry has received requests for this publication from North America and Europe. It includes such topics as sensory awareness, hand development, physical activity, social behaviour, hints for self care, and preparation for community life. A companion publication published in March 1979, titled Perspectives and Prospects in the Education of the World's Blind Children has been distributed to facilities and community agencies to assist them in their work as well. As a further educational aid a two-day conference of staff working with the blind and deaf in facilities and in the community has been an annual event for the past four years.

4. While this subject is at present under review, we do know there are significant numbers ready for community placements as soon as the highly specialized services required are available.

5. At present the facility services division of the ministry employs two consultants, one for the visually impaired and one for the hearing impaired. During the past year the focus of attention of these individuals has been to assist in the establishment of the special units and programs in the schedule I facilities and involvement with individual clients in special cases where advice and assistance has been required. It is anticipated that the consultants will have visited all schedule II facilities by the end of the fiscal year. The consultants have also aided the facilities by facilitating contact with agencies such as the W. Ross Macdonald School in Brantford. The consultants also take a major responsibility for the organization of the annual inter-facility conference of people from facilities and the community working with the sensory handicapped, mentally retarded to share program information and learn from the experience of others.

6. As yet no special units have been established in schedule II facilities. The ministry initially set out to establish 10 special units for the blind, deaf and deaf-blind in schedule I facilities. By March 1980, all 10 units should be operational. Alternately, we have been looking at a mechanism whereby residents now in schedule II facilities who can benefit from the specialized services of these units may be transferred as opportunities occur.

It should be noted that children in schedule II facilities are not being deprived of programs. Many are involved in sensory stimulation programs (Rygiel Home, Hamilton). Others are in approved homes in the community that are equipped to meet their special needs (Oaklands Regional Centre and Cochrane-Timiskaming Resource Centre). Many others attend school or day care. For many, medical and personal care needs are of first priority and attention to these needs requires a great deal of the time available.

This particular area is, as well, under full review at the present time and when that is completed we will be in a better position to know what additional steps must be taken in order to ensure that we are doing our best to fully meet the needs of these clients with special needs, including the establishment of special units.

There are a number of additional initiatives that have been taken by the facilities to meet the special needs of deaf, blind and deaf-blind residents such as expanded and intensified vision and hearing screening services, involving the school of optometry at the University of Waterloo and the mobile hearing clinic of The Hospital for Sick Children; expanded participation at the Lake Joseph Holiday Centre and in the summer intervention program for children, both operated by the CNIB. My ministry's commitment to meet the special needs of these children will continue.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

HANSARD OPERATIONS

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I want to rise on a point of order. I want to rise to object to the actions of the Board of Internal Economy last evening. You will recall that I voted against the two motions which were presented, one to do away with the interjectionists' track, which has been in operation since 1976, and a motion to put the interjectionists back on the floor.

We are not referring to what formerly was here by that action last night, we are going much beyond what was here. We are now turning off the mikes, which will prevent all interjections, basically, from being picked up. Interjections by someone on this side of the House very seldom are picked up by a speaker on the government side of the House. Certainly it can't be anticipated that the interjectionists will pick up all of the remarks.

I realize the concern of members with respect to private conversations. These private conversations, however, do not appear in Hansard because Hansard records only those things which are part of the debate that is going on in the House. The interjections, therefore, have to be relevant with the proceedings. The rest of the material, as I understand it, is ignored, and in most instances the interjections are inaudible anyway. If you do pick them up, you usually pick up a short clip.

All of this concern with respect to interjections came as a result of the interjections from the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot). The Speaker that evening didn't hear those interjections. It was my colleague, the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) and several other of my colleagues who picked them up. The Speaker could not hear them.

Hon. Mr. Wells: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We are already on a point of order. I will hear what you have to say.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I just want to object to him bringing this matter before the House. It has nothing to do with this House.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member may continue.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, the interjectionist in my opinion could never have picked up all the invective which was being hurled around that night. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the next day you were forced to make a decision regarding this matter. To the press, the member for Timiskaming indicated he had called the late show "the gong show." It was only by your listening to the tape, Mr. Speaker, that there was audible proof to you that the member for Timiskaming called it "the Wop show." Without those tapes, Mr. Speaker, you would not have been in a position to make that decision.

I suppose the upshot of all of this is that it seems that rather than deal with the invective we are going to cut off the source. What is more aggravating than anything else, I guess, is the fact this matter is before the members' services committee at the present time. I don't know why the government was so anxious to get rid of it. This Thursday the members' services committee—and there are people on that committee who were at that board meeting last night who knew it—was going to look at three items at least: How many interjections do we want picked up? Do we want the girls back in the Legislature?

Applause.

Mr. Cassidy: That's a vote of confidence.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I don't mind giving a vote of confidence to our interjectionists, but that isn't what I am here for, and I hope the members aren't.

The other point was that the members' services committee was going to test to determine at what level they could pick up private conversations. So anxious was the government to get rid of being able to pick that up that they flew in the face of a committee report and last night, at the Board of Internal Economy where they outnumber the opposition four to two, they moved to deal with it immediately and not even await a report.

I would suggest that this matter not only should be considered by the members' services committee, but also I think it should go to the procedural affairs committee as well. Until those recommendations are presented to the board, or better still to this Legislature where all members could speak to this, I don't think it's a decision that should be made by the board. It should come back to this House and this House should decide on how that would be handled, not a Tory-dominated Board of Internal Economy. I ask that you consider that, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Wells: First of all, I find it very interesting that the House leader for the New Democratic Party has decided to make his speech here, which he did not make at the members' services committee.

Mr. Martel: I don't think you should mislead the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am not going to mislead the House. We knew full well that the member was opposed to our motion. But the general tenor of the remarks that were made now did not come out at the meeting. Under your chairmanship, Mr. Speaker, the Board of Internal Economy discussed what has certainly been a very pressing matter for many members of this House.

I think I speak for most of the members of this House when I say we were rather shocked to learn that all these microphones, whether the light was on or not, as it is now on on my microphone, were kept on at low gain all the time in order to assist in picking up interjections. Of course as members know, the worry was that conversations which should have been privileged and private, between various members sitting in their seats, ran the risk of being picked up by these microphones.

I don't think any of us has any hesitation in saying that we believe that honest interjections, whether they hurt or harm us, should be included in the Hansard report of discussions in this House; I think that is quite proper. However, I think we can reach the point where there are too many interjections put in. After all, the work of this House is first and foremost to have the debate, and the words recorded of that person who has the floor.

I think of the hazards—and believe me, Mr. Speaker, we hear much today about our worries about the electronic age and the electronic devices encroaching upon our privacy; we all know we may be standing in a little group with someone taking our picture and a microphone miles away.

I just say it seemed to a number of us in this House, after we had a full discussion over the past few weeks—and certainly the caucus of which I am a member has fully discussed this—we felt, as I put forward and my colleagues put forward, that these microphones should be disconnected and that the interjectionists on the floor of this House could perform the services they have done for many years in equally as good a manner without the chance, albeit a small chance, of intruding upon the private conversations of the members of this House. I think it's incumbent upon us not to allow that to happen.

I think the member for Sudbury East is just grandstanding on an issue which I would think the members of the New Democratic Party, above all, should be against, namely, some kind of an electronic surveillance of the members of this House.

I want to say on the point of order that I feel, and this whole party feels, that the decision taken by the Board of Internal Economy was a right one. We welcome the return of the interjectionists to this House and we believe these microphones should stay disconnected unless the light comes on and the person who is talking understands and knows that his microphone is live and is picking up his words.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I really would like the direction of this House, because as a result of the actions taken last night as reported to me I withdrew from the agenda of the members' services committee the further discussion of the Hansard matter since it seemed to me the matter had been determined last night. It is a fact that it was on our agenda for next Thursday, but it seemed to me to bring Mr. Brannan back and to go through all this exercise was somewhat irrelevant in the light of that decision. So I would welcome some direction from the House if we are to continue with this debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask you a question? Is it within the jurisdiction of the Board of Internal Economy to make a decision with regard to rules of procedure in this House?

Mr. Speaker: It's not a matter of procedure. It's what kind of devices we are going to use to best carry on the business of this House. It is the responsibility, ultimately, of the Speaker to make such a decision on the advice of the editor of debates. I did that in good faith on the basis of information that was available to me before this session resumed.

With regard to the point of order raised by the member for Sudbury East, I will take it into consideration and report at a later date.

VISITORS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to your attention and to the attention of the members of the House the presence in the gallery under the press gallery of the former member for Kent-Elgin, Mr. Jack Spence.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in the same context, could I draw to your attention and the members of the House that we have six guests in the gallery from the real north, the Yukon? Among them is Tony Penikett, a member of the territorial council of an area that is now assuming responsible government and heading towards provincial status.

NEWSPAPER COMMENT

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege to take issue with a gratuitous remark published in today's Globe and Mail.

As politicians, I believe we grow somewhat thick-skinned over published and broadcast comments which affect us personally, sometimes in an unfortunate and often inaccurate way. However, in today's Globe and Mail, columnist Hugh Winsor brings discredit to all of the decent and law-abiding citizens of Mississauga when he casts aspirations on that great municipality—

Mr. S. Smith: Aspirations?

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Aspersions; those too.

Mr. Makarchuk: Who inspired the aspirations?

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mississaugans are inspired in their own right.

To suggest, as he did, that last week's outstanding evacuation measures were carried out so well because Mississaugans are, and I quote, "bland and boring," is not only gratuitous, it is terribly wrong and wilfully hurtful.

I submit to this House that in fact the people of our great municipality co-operated—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: The members opposite are wasting their time; the microphones aren't on.

I submit to this House that in fact the people of our great municipality co-operated in those emergency measures because they are law-abiding, conscientious, compassionate, and care a great deal about their families, their neighbours and their community.

I would further suggest that Mr. Winsor wields a rather wide brush, and I cannot let pass this opportunity to commend all Missis-saugans, on behalf of myself and my colleagues, the members for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones), Mississauga South (Mr. Kennedy) and Brampton (Mr. Davis), for our citizens' co-operation and the outstanding example they set in their efforts. While a member of the press gallery here calls our citizens bland and boring, other people around the globe have marvelled at the spirit and co-operation of the people involved in this mass evacuation effort.

I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to invite the columnist from the Globe and Mail to join with me and my colleagues in visiting our great municipality, where we have every confidence our citizens might one day forgive him for this bad judgement and prove to him beyond any doubt we are far from what he had apparently imagined. Thank you.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

ARSENIC EXPOSURE

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), reported on the public health situation resulting from arsenic levels in the Moira River and Moira Lake downstream from the disused Deloro smelting and refining site.

Today I would like to outline the measures my ministry has taken, as well as what we are continuing to do to reduce the levels of arsenic in these waters.

The source for this arsenic is the site of the old ore refinery formerly operated by Deloro Smelting and Refining Company Limited. Originally a mine, this facility was used to refine silver, nickel and cobalt ores, and produce arsenic-based pesticides, from 1905 to 1961.

Large quantities of ore wastes bearing arsenic were left on the site. Our monitoring since the early 1960s has shown that arsenic has been entering the Moira River system through runoff and leaching from the site.

A series of orders, first under the Ontario Water Resources Act and then under the Environmental Protection Act, required the owners of the site to improve the collection and treatment facilities so as to reduce arsenic discharges.

In February, Erikson Construction Company Limited, the current owner of the site, told the ministry it was abandoning operations of the collection and treatment system on the plant site as of March 31, 1979 on the grounds they could no longer afford to operate it.

We immediately took over operation of this system.

Since the early 1960s, agencies of the Ontario government have analysed samples for arsenic levels in this system. Ten years ago, we began continuous monitoring at six locations below the Deloro site and we have data from a variety of other locations collected on a special study basis.

In recent years, there have been only two locations where the annual arsenic levels have exceeded the drinking water criteria of 0.05 parts per million. They are in the river immediately below the refinery site and in Moira Lake itself.

In both locations, monitoring through 1975 indicated declining arsenic levels as a result of abatement measures. Lake levels of 0.06 which we measured were close to drinking water quality.

Our monitoring showed a slight increasing trend during 1977 and 1978, but our monitoring so far this year indicates that the water quality has improved since we began operating the treatment plant in April.

We have spent more than $100,000 improving and operating this system since April. We have repaired and replaced berms, pipes and equipment on site, cleaned out the settling lagoons and in general begun improving and expanding the system. In addition we have been erecting fencing and signs around the most hazardous parts of the site and this work should be completed shortly.

A consultant has been retained to identify any possible remaining problems and recommend permanent solutions.

We have served a writ on Erikson Construction Company Limited to recover our costs in operating the treatment system and we intend to recover, as fully as possible, the costs of solving this problem.

When our work at the plant site is complete I am confident the mean levels of arsenic throughout this system will be consistently within our drinking water criteria. I'd like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that all traces of arsenic will disappear from the system, but there is always the possibility that sediment in Moira Lake resulting from years of discharge may contribute—and I underline—trace levels for some time to come.

We have worked very closely with the Hastings and Prince Edward County Health Unit in dealing with this problem. The health unit has investigated thoroughly, as the Minister of Health advised last week. We can be assured that there are no residents using either the lake or the river as a steady source of drinking water, and therefore there is no health hazard.

With the co-operation of the local health officials we are ensuring that the residents affected are kept informed. We have provided full information to the public and to interested groups, and we are now planning a public meeting in co-operation with the ministries of Health and Labour and the local health unit. At this meeting we will provide citizens, cottagers' associations, and any other concerned parties, with complete information on this issue.

I also will undertake to keep the Legislature advised of our progress in dealing with this matter.

MISSISSAUGA TRAIN FIRE

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, now that the crisis in Mississauga appears to be receding, I would like to report to the House on the response of the health-care system to that disaster. It also provides an opportunity for us to acknowledge with appreciation the response of the health-care workers, institutions and patients within the affected area.

In less than 19 hours last Sunday and Monday three large active-treatment hospitals and six nursing homes—a total of almost 2,000 patients—were evacuated without a single untoward event. To do this we drew on the central resources of the provincial government, the facilities of approximately 25 hospitals and nursing homes, and ambulance and public transit services from another 25 communities outside the evacuated areas.

While my colleague the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry) has dealt with the other aspects of the disaster, I think it would be useful to provide the House with more specific detail about the hospital evacuation.

The decision to evacuate the Mississauga General Hospital, Mississauga Extencicare Nursing Home and Chelsey Park was made by Peel regional police, in consultation with the regional chairman, the mayor of Mississauga, the fire chief and the administrators of the facilities concerned shortly after 9 a.m. on Sunday.

There were at that point 450 patients in the hospital; 202 in Mississauga Extencicare and 237 in Chelsey Park I.

Of these numbers, 262 hospital patients and nine nursing-home patients were judged capable of being discharged immediately either to their homes or into the care of relatives.

Concurrently nearby hospitals were canvassed and 16 patients were transferred to Queensway General Hospital, 17 to Mount Sinai, two to West Park Lodge, 20 to the Toronto General, 13 to Toronto Western, 28 to Joseph Brant in Burlington, 46 to Oakville Trafalgar, 20 to St. Joseph's in Toronto, 12 to Toronto Sick Children's, five to Humber Memorial and nine to Etobicoke General.

The nursing-home patients were moved to the regional school for the deaf, West Park Lodge and the Talumore Nursing Home at Brampton.

The decision to evacuate the facilities was implemented at 9:25 in the morning and was completed by 1:15 p.m. Shortly afterwards, my colleague the Solicitor General in consultation with the civic and hospital officials decided it would be prudent to evacuate Queensway General Hospital. Of the 280 patients, 88 were discharged to their homes or into the care of relatives. Of the balance, eight were moved to St. Joseph's in Toronto, 10 to the Toronto General, 38 to North York General, 16 to Etobicoke General, 24 to York Finch, five to Toronto Western, 34 to Toronto Northwestern, two to Sick Children's, 20 to Queen Elizabeth, six to the Queen Street Mental Health Centre, two to the Hillcrest Convalescent Hospital, 24 to East General and three to Humber Memorial. This move took approximately four hours.

Immediately afterwards, the evacuation of Sheridan Villa, Pines and Tara Nursing Homes began. After 12 residents were discharged, 234 were moved to Peel Manor, 22 to North York Nursing Home, 16 to Fudger House, 18 to Castlevew-Witchwood and 19 to Cummerhouse in North York.

Finally, a decision was taken to evacuate Oakville-Trafalgar Memorial Hospital and Oakville Extencicare Nursing Home. It was a joint decision of the mayor of Oakville, the acting chief of the Oakville police department and the administrators of the two facilities. After 89 of the 293 patients were discharged the balance were all moved to Hamilton. Fifty-one of the hospital patients were accommodated in McMaster Medical Centre, 34 in the Hamilton General Hospital, 59 in St. Joseph's, 13 in Chedoke, 44 in Henderson and three in the Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital.

To accommodate the nursing-home patients, we were able to use some federal government emergency supplies which are in the custody of the province and part of which are stored at Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital. These supplies consist of beds and other medical facilities intended to be set up during emergencies in public buildings, such as schools. In this way 132 patients were accommodated, and 39 others were taken to Joseph Brant Hospital in Burlington.

At the peak of this massive transfer, we had 139 regular ambulances and 27 other support vehicles, such as the disaster bus operated by the Metro Toronto department of ambulances. Along with the nine based in Halton-Mississauga, we were able to draw 45 from Metro Toronto, 21 from the Ministry of Health ambulance supply base in Toronto and 10 from St. John Ambulance in Toronto and Peel-Halton. In addition, ambulances were brought in from Streetsville, Brampton, York, Georgetown, the two Hamilton services, Welland, Niagara Falls, Cambridge, Kitchener, Brant county, St. Catharines, Orangeville, London, St. Thomas, Tillsonburg, Woodstock, Grimsby, Bolton, Oshawa and Guelph. The Red Cross, the Toronto Transportation Commission, Mississauga and Oakville transit services also provided communications and support vehicles.

I have gone into considerably more detail than normal because I want to acknowledge publicly the co-operation and individual effort of a very large number of separately managed institutions and services to meet this emergency. In very short order and under the most pressing circumstances, they made available almost 1,300 institutional beds between Hamilton and the Don River without seriously jeopardizing the health of their own patients and the viability of their operations.

Many of the staff of the institutions and emergency health services worked without respite over the period of the emergency. In this regard, members of the Ontario Medical Association volunteered to work at the disaster scene and to be available as emergencies developed there. In every way, it was a magnificent performance, characteristic of the dedicated staff who provide us with the finest health-care system in the world. I know all members of this House representing the people of Ontario are grateful to them.

MANPOWER SURVEY

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, on June 22, 1979, I announced the formation of the Ontario Manpower Commission. In the course of my remarks, I made reference to a survey of manpower requirements and recruiting practices in the manufacturing industry that was being sponsored by a group of Ontario industrialists. This survey was designed by the labour market information bureau and analysis unit in my ministry and was distributed to members of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Ontario division of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

The purpose of the survey was to obtain information on current shortages and future skill requirements in the manufacturing industries of Ontario. In addition, it inquired into several related matters, including the degree of difficulty in recruiting for specified occupations and employer perceptions of the specific reasons for the difficulties noted.

The survey report has just become available. It sets out the results for the province as a whole, for 33 major urban centres, as well as for 19 community college areas.

Some of the major findings of the survey are that close to 50 per cent of the responding firms are currently experiencing difficulty in filling jobs. Shortages were reported in a wide range of occupations, particularly in the highly skilled industrial trades. The reporting employers expressed a number of concerns. Outstanding among these is that training in the industrial trades needs to be improved.

The government has already given a great deal of attention to the circumstances confirmed by the survey. Its results indicate that many of the measures we have taken, such as increasing the number of apprenticeable trades and the introduction of more flexible skills-training arrangements, are appropriate responses to the current skills supply situation.

The Ontario Manpower Commission is actively supporting these measures and considering others that may be required to meet the skill needs of the economy. It will make extensive use of the survey information in ensuring that provincial manpower policies and programs address the problems that are identified.

Mr. Speaker, the report is being distributed to each member of this Legislature, interested employers, unions, educators and government agencies.

MISSISSAUGA TRAIN FIRE

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Attorney General: Yesterday the Attorney General stated he would be speaking to Canadian Pacific Rail regarding the possibility of its withdrawing the waiver form it is at present forcing people to sign. Could the Attorney General tell us whether or not he spoke to Canadian Pacific and whether it is going to withdraw this waiver, or whether it basically thanks the Attorney General for his opinion and intends to carry on regardless?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I did speak to Mr. William Stinson, an executive vice-president of CP, who is in Montreal. I indicated to him that I was certainly dissatisfied with the form of waiver or release that was being used.

I suggested to him that in my own view it would be appropriate in the circumstances if they simply accepted an acknowledgement of payment for the amounts that were paid, in the form of a receipt, for the specific amounts that were paid over. I thought that would certainly afford them any protection they might wish to enjoy in the circumstances.

When he indicated CP's lawyers had advised them not to do that, I put it to him in very strong terms that I felt that given the sensitivity of the situation, given what the individuals from Mississauga had been through, anything more than a receipt or acknowledgement of payment I thought was unreasonable in the circumstances.

When he advised me that their lawyers were insistent that they had to have a form of release, I told him that the form of release was totally unsatisfactory as far as I was concerned, and that the one line that purported to be a release of all claims was at the bottom of the form—as some of the members know—and that it was not very noticeable. Obviously, it would probably not come to the attention of many of the people who would be signing it.

I indicated to him that if they insisted on proceeding with a form of release, at the very least they should use a form that had stamped on it "full and final release," in red and in inch-high letters, so the people would be aware of what they were being asked to sign.

He said he would take it up again with their lawyers, colleagues and others. The message I got back was still that they were not prepared to withdraw the form of release they were using. The only thing they were prepared to do was to reprint the form to put the release portion in more bold type.

This is a matter that has concerned us very deeply. The member for Mississauga East (Mr. Gregory), the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones) and the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Kennedy) have been very concerned about this issue, as they have been from the moment of the explosion. They have been very concerned about this form.

I want to make it clear to the Leader of the Opposition that the members from that area on this side of the House have been as concerned as myself or anyone else in this Legislature. So the bottom line at this moment is that the CP is unwilling to withdraw this form.

I had a solicitor from my ministry out there this morning speaking to a number of the claimants. A number of the claimants would appear to be happy with the ability to be able to make a quick settlement of their out-of-pocket expenses. However there is no question in our view that most of them probably are not addressing themselves to the issue—namely, that the claim form would purport to be a release from all other claims, including future claims that may arise that they simply don't know about at the moment. They might be health-related or other claims.

I repeat what I said to Mr. Stinson yesterday that in my view their attitude was unreasonable and the release form they were using was irresponsible. I regretted very much they were adopting this approach.

This is an issue that is, technically at least, theoretically between individuals and a private company. The mandate of the Attorney General gives him no authority to intervene and force the CPR to use a particular form of release. I've expressed my concern in the strongest terms. But we are going to watch the matter very closely.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: If the yappers over there would just cool it for a moment I'll finish.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. If the Attorney General would ignore those whom he refers to as yappers, I want to remind him that his lengthy answer has taken six and a half minutes. A supplementary?

Mr. S. Smith: It would appear the Attorney General has as much clout with CP as the Premier (Mr. Davis) has with the Prime Minister of the country.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the member have a supplementary?

Mr. S. Smith: The members keep interrupting me, sir.

Given the fact that this behaviour on the part of CP, a very important corporate citizen of this country, can only be described as despicable, is the Attorney General prepared simply to sit back and throw up his hands; or is he prepared, at the very least, to engage in a full-scale advertising and education campaign beginning today, using all media, so that everyone in Mississauga knows what he or she is being asked to sign? Will he arrange to have a duty counsel from legal aid there at the site where these claims are being processed, giving advice to each person as he or she comes in to present a claim to CP?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As I indicated yesterday in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition, I had discussed with the mayor of Mississauga the advisability of opening up a legal aid clinic in that area and had discussed it directly with the vice-president of the local bar association. I understand that is being done.

I don't have the final details, but certainly this issue has been brought to the attention in a very direct fashion by the media people who have been reporting on this issue very extensively, and it would be difficult to imagine anyone living in Mississauga who is not aware of this issue.

Given the lawyers who are rendering assistance, I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that if legitimate claims arise after this purported release is signed there are certain actions that can be taken to protect the rights of those citizens and those actions will be taken. I am not going to speculate at this moment on precisely what they are until we determine the dimension of the problem, but I can assure the member action will be taken.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Given the fact that for many Mississauga residents the major out-of-pocket loss they have suffered has been the loss of wages or salaries and not the expense of being away from Mississauga, did the Attorney General make representations to CP Rail about paying lost wages now, without waiting for a court case to be taken against them? What response did the Attorney General get from CP Rail, and what action is the government prepared to take in order to ensure that those citizens of Mississauga or workers in Mississauga can get immediate compensation up to a reasonable limit for lost wages or salaries suffered last week?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am advised they are now being compensated for loss of wages and any out-of-pocket expenses including loss of wages that are documented. For example, we have reported in this morning's paper that a woman was compensated for boarding her dogs and cats somewhere. That would indicate, on the other side of the coin, that CP claims people are taking a fairly reasonable view of the out-of-pocket expenses. My information at the moment is that they are paying these claims for loss of wages.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, in the last couple of moments my supplementary has really been answered, but I did want confirmation that we now have hundreds of people who have signed waivers. Would the Attorney General confirm they can now be told that if subsequent claims arise there are options open, to government and through government, to them to restate their claims against the CPR?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As I indicated earlier, if it turns out that individuals are signing this form and are not aware of certain rights they have in relation to losses of which they are not aware at the moment, such as health-related or other losses, then there are remedies open to protect those individuals with respect to any future claims. We are going to watch it very closely. Again I repeat, I am not going to speculate as to those remedies until we know the true dimension of the problem.

Mr. S. Smith: What remedies? As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: A new question. We have spent nearly 14 minutes on this subject.

Mr. S. Smith: Basically, I would be guided by your ruling, Mr. Speaker. Is this a new question or a final supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: A new question.

Mr. S. Smith: Then I will ask a question again of the Attorney General on the same matter.

Is the Attorney General aware that after his request that the material be in one-inch red type it would appear that CP has now made a claim report for out-of-pocket expenses where the claim at the bottom looks to be in approximately one-eighth-inch black type, hardly in keeping with the request of the Attorney General?

Can the Attorney General comment on that and, since the Attorney General said in his initial answer that the claimants were at the moment not directing their minds and their attention to the issues—I think those were his exact words—how can he refuse to have a lawyer on the site where they come for their claims to advise each person of what possible claims might occur that the person might not have thought of, apart even from wages and possible business expenses, unless he believes the legal aid clinic spoken of by the mayor is the one that will handle it?

May I draw his attention to Mayor McCallion's statement that the clinic she is speaking of would not be free legal aid? She said the lawyers who would be volunteering their services would not give advice and certainly would not be on the scene where the claims are being processed. Why does the minister not plant someone there to give advice to every person coming in so they truly know the real ramifications of what they are being asked to sign?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: My understanding is that there is free legal aid available. I can't give specifics about that. The issue is certainly well known in Mississauga, but I will explore all possible avenues, including those suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, to assure us that the citizens are aware of those rights. I will explore those immediately.

I just want to make this further remark in relation to the claim form the Leader of the Opposition has just referred to. Yes, I have seen that new claim form. Yes, I agree it is unsatisfactory. Yes, I state I am very disappointed, to put it mildly, in their attitude. I think it demonstrates an enormous insensitivity to the rights of the citizens of Mississauga. I want to emphasize that fact.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Can the Attorney General tell us what claims the Mississauga residents who have not signed waivers will have in terms of their jobs, where they apparently have lost their jobs as a result of having to move out during the incident in Mississauga?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Attorney General of any province is not in a position to give off-the-cuff legal advice on every possible ramification of this. I indicated, and again I repeat it, we are going to monitor this very closely. If any instances of injustices are brought to our attention, we will explore every possible remedy to right those injustices. I can give the House this assurance at this time.

Mr. Roy: In view of the magnitude of the potential problem, the large number of claims, and given the clearly intransigent approach of Canadian Pacific, which is a form of blackmail basically, in trying to give quick payment through signing a release, although the Attorney General of this province has limitations on his jurisdiction—something that sometimes has not bothered him before—has he advised CP that one of the possible alternatives for Ontario—which will surely have a claim against CP for a number of matters, I would think; police force, et cetera—would be that Ontario would process the claims and give some consideration to class action?

Is the Attorney General prepared to go one step further and advise CP that if he needs jurisdiction, we in this House will give the necessary jurisdiction by way of legislation?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the issue of class action, as the member for Ottawa East knows, is a very complex one and could delay the whole process considerably. I simply want to give him my assurance again that we will explore every possible avenue to expedite a fair and reasonable settlement of these claims in the most reasonable time possible. I will be very happy to discuss this outside the House as well as inside the House with the member for Ottawa East. I would be very pleased to have any of his suggestions in this regard.

Mr. S. Smith: Will the Attorney General please ask the Premier of Ontario to call the president of Canadian Pacific into his office and tell him in the clearest possible terms the viewpoint of Ontario in this regard and to demand a far more reasonable and far more just attitude on the part of that very important company?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Premier of Ontario has followed this dialogue yesterday and today with great interest. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition he will do what he thinks will be appropriate and effective in the circumstances.

[Later (2:55):]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I just want to advise this House that I was mistaken when I stated that the lost wages, as part of the out-of-pocket expenses, were being paid. They are allowing people to write in, with the exception of lost wages, on the reported basis, but because of insurance claims, unemployment insurance, they won't pay lost wages at this time. I don't think their explanation is a satisfactory one, and furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it would appear that they are now instructed not to make any exemption in the form of relief except for loss of wages. Obviously, and I speak on behalf of all members, we are simply saying we are bitterly disappointed in their attitude in this matter.

[Reverting (2:50):]

HEALTH SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Health. Since the Minister of Health has rejected legislative action to ensure one common fee schedule for doctors' services in Ontario or to ensure that the patients are not double-billed if they weren't informed in advance by their doctors who have opted out, is the government now prepared to seek binding agreement on these two issues from doctors as part of the current fee negotiations with the Ontario Medical Association?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I previously answered that question on a number of occasions. It has been asked in various ways and answered always consistently. In Ontario, as in other provinces, we have a system for physician compensation that does provide for cases where the physician decides to bill the patients directly. Other provinces such as Saskatchewan have similar schemes. We do not plan to change that system.

I misled the member last week when I gave him a figure. I had indicated that while less than 18 per cent of our doctors are non-participating, that is billing their patients directly, something like 11 or 12 per cent of the claims were opted out. I was wrong; it is only nine per cent.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Later in the session I'll be introducing petitions signed by more than 250,000 Ontario residents who oppose extra billing and are opposed to the government's health cutbacks. Can the minister say what it would take to persuade this Conservative government of Ontario that the people of Ontario want one-price medicine? What will it take for this government to give the people of Ontario one-price medicine?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I want to thank the member and his colleagues and I welcome the production today of the various lists. As I indicated a few weeks ago, I intend, and I have already set things in motion, to send a letter to every single person who has signed one of those petitions, where the name and address are legible.

I intend, while answering these petitions, to give the signee, if that is the proper term, the true facts about the health-care system. I am going to tell them that since 1973 the population of the province has gone up by six per cent but the number of doctors has gone up by 19 per cent. I am going to tell them that in that same period the use of the health-care system has gone up by 30 per cent. I am going to tell them that since 1972 the per capita spending on health care has gone up from $205 to $500; even when one allows for inflation that's a big increase in spending on health care in this province. I am going to give them the basic facts about the health-care system that members of the third party haven't done.

I made the suggestion to the honourable member that in all of this campaign of his to save his hide he had a perfect opportunity to speak to people about something we could all do in a very constructive way to help our health-care system and that's called giving blood. Right now the problems of blood supply in many areas, as is known, cause more problems, inconveniences more physicians, inconveniences more patients, than anything else.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: As one who has before resented the minister's government using taxpayers' funds in sending out letters for political gains—for example, the Premier (Mr. Davis) sending out letters of apology to the doctors some years ago at an expense of $9,000—would the minister promise this House that he will use no taxpayers' funds for this silly political letter campaign that he is going to carry on in this silly fight with the NDP?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think it is in the interests of public information and the democratic system that the people have the information. It will be done, I can assure members, in the least expensive way possible to keep the costs to a minimum.

Mr. Breugh: Mr. Speaker, the minister has made this promise twice now in this House to respond to each and every one of them. I wonder if I could ask him to dispense with that political exercise and instead use that funding to put back into the medicare system the proper funding that it requires.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting the number of visits I have had from representatives of various foreign countries, provinces and states, even as recently as 1:30 today, who have come here to visit with my officials and myself to examine our health-care system because it is known throughout the world, if not to that member, as the finest in the world.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the minister asked me to elaborate on some of the facts about the health-care system, will the minister not agree that the gentlemen's agreement with the Ontario Medical Association of last spring has failed, in fact failed so badly that the current president of the Ontario Medical Association, Dr. Douglas Caldwell, is himself not only an opted-out anaesthetist but in fact has admitted to the press he does not tell his patients in advance that he intends to double bill them?

If the government cannot even get the OMA president to abide by the gentlemen's agreement of last spring, will the minister not agree to ensure, either by negotiation or by legislation, that we get one-price medicine in this province and that every patient gets told in advance if the doctor intends to double-bill?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sure Dr. Caldwell can look after himself and he will reply to those allegations of the honourable member. I know as long as I have been around here, but particularly in the last three or four years, the member has had this idea that somehow he could waltz into power on the corpse of the medical profession of this province. We happen to think Ontario has been well served by its doctors. We do not intend to use the doctors as political whipping boys; never ever will we do that.

With respect, I think the question has been answered repeatedly before. The honourable member chooses to take a few incidents as compared to 38 million—I corrected that number too; I checked it—claims on the health plan since April 1. Since I made that statement, services have been provided to the people 38 million times. Unquestionably, the member has come up with examples and I have been provided with examples where it has not worked perfectly. There's a mechanism to resolve those differences. He doesn't choose to use it. In fact, he chooses to ignore it. It is in his political interests to ignore it and to try to show that it won't work. Well, it will work.

RENT INCREASES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations regarding rents in the city of Toronto. In view of the fact that rents for newly built apartments in Toronto have risen between 29 and 74 per cent between 1976 and 1978, does the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations not agree that tenants need protection against these excessive increases by landlords on recently built apartments? Therefore, will the minister introduce changes to the Residential Tenancies Act to bring all apartments under rent review so that landlords be required to justify all rent increases on the basis of cost and not profiteering?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I never break a commitment that was made by the Legislature of Ontario. The answer is no.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Given that the Legislature itself didn't make a commitment—perhaps it was made by the government—will the minister consider the fact that rents on three-bedroom apartments, for example, rose from $331 on apartments built in 1976 to $575 on apartments built in 1978, a 74 per cent increase? Will the minister at least introduce changes to the act in order to require landlords of buildings built since 1975 to file their notices of rent increases with the Residential Tenancies Commission? Then the government and the public can monitor what is happening in these buildings and come to the rescue of tenants who risk being exploited by landlords who are not now under rent review?

Hon. Mr. Drea: That matter was discussed at length during the very lengthy committee hearings on the Residential Tenancies Act. It was the will of the majority that it not be done.

Mr. MacDonald: The will of the Liberals and Tories.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Just a moment, I heard some rumblings over there from somebody.

The majority of the members of the Legislature of Ontario passed legislation that said no rental unit occupied after January 1, 1976, will be covered by any form of rent control. If the honourable member is saying that doesn't bind him, what he is saying is he doesn't believe in democracy; the only thing that ever binds him is when he wins.

On the second part of the honourable member's question, the answer again is no.

Mr. Cassidy: Final supplementary. Would the minister not agree that his answer indicates that nothing ever changes as far as the government is concerned when it comes to protecting tenants in this province; nor for the Liberal Party, as well? Will the minister not look at the facts of what is happening on rents on accommodation built since the beginning of 1976? Will he assure tenants in that accommodation there will be protection against excessive rent increases or against rent gouging by landlords?

Hon. Mr. Drea: That question makes as much sense to me as the city of Toronto non-profit housing authority subsidizing people with $45,000-a-year incomes.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

Mrs. Campbell: My question is to the Attorney General. A story appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail which refers to the research paper prepared by one Larry Fox for the Commission on Freedom of Information and Individual Privacy. His findings appear to be that many of Ontario's boards, tribunals, commissions and branches of ministries are operating under secret law in arriving at their decisions. Would the Attorney General, as a matter of the administration of justice, allocate some of his crown law officers to investigate that paper and to investigate the boards to which reference is made, to ensure that this practice is discontinued?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes. I haven't seen that background paper; I saw the reference in this morning's paper. Certainly, we will review the paper very carefully, and take what we consider to be the appropriate action—bearing in mind that we still are waiting for a report of the commission—to see that these tribunals act according to the best principles of natural justice, which appear to be relevant to the news report that we read this morning. Yes, I'll do that.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, supplementary: In view of the fact that some of those to which reference has been made have been ComSoc tribunals or review boards—a matter that has been of common knowledge to members of this Legislature—would the Attorney General like to begin there with his examination of these sacred criteria?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I understand that my colleague, the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope) has been reviewing this report. I have nothing to add to my previous answer. It may be that the question could be re-directed to the member for Cochrane South, if the member for St. George would like to do that.

Mrs. Campbell: I would just like to ask the Attorney General if he is not in fact the Attorney General, and if this is not a matter basically of the administration of justice?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I told the member for St. George that of course we were going to look into the matter; that was my earlier response. We were going to review the situation, and again, to ensure that these tribunals perform their functions according to law and the principles of natural justice. I had already said that. But in view of the fact that the member for Cochrane South indicated he had some information that might assist the member for St. George, I simply thought it might assist her, and the members of the Legislature, if he were given permission to respond. It was for that reason and that reason alone.

Hon. Mr. Pope: Mr. Speaker, just as a point of clarification, the member for St. George is referring to research publication No. 10, printed by the Commission on Freedom of Information and Individual Privacy. The specific part of that report to which the honourable member has referred is found on pages 202 to 218.

This report was mailed to all members of the House on November 16, so I would urge members who are concerned about this matter to review the report when it has arrived in their offices. I'd like to make one quote. It's found on the bottom of page 202:

"With a single exception, the administrative tribunals and boards surveyed do not rely on secret law for guidance."

Mr. Roy: That's taken out of context.

Hon. Mr. Pope: No, it isn't taken out of context. I've read this report.

Then it goes on to deal with some specific questions that deal with the provincial benefits branch, the vocational rehabilitation branch and the assessment review tribunal. These are research publications that are available to the commission, that will be taken into account by the commission when it makes its final report.

Any comments that any members of the House or members of the public may have with respect to some of the very important issues that are raised in these publications, and in the final report, we'd be glad to hear.

IRON ORE SUPPLIES

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Premier: Since Ontario now imports approximately 58 per cent of its iron ore requirements, much of it from the United States, and since the Caland Mine of Atikokan, which closed on Friday, and National Steel, which closed this past summer, were both closed on orders from the United States and both still contain recoverable ores, what action does the government propose to take to protect the Ontario miners and the communities in these one-industry towns?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member raised this with me a while ago—if memory serves me correctly—and the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), who is unfortunately under the weather at the moment, was going to answer. I have some of the information, which I will share with members, but I want to make it clear this is information that has been provided to me.

"Firstly, the world surplus of iron ore pellets still exists, although some improvements have taken place, primarily due to the high level of steel production in Canada and the US. Secondly, the high level of production is expected to drop in 1980, thus the strength in iron ore is only temporary." These are the views of people who are analysing the situation. I do not assume responsibility for their point of view.

"Thirdly, while the demand for iron ore is high in North America by standards of recent years, on a wider context supply has outstripped demand, leading to a situation where," in the words of the same report the member quoted—and I am going back to the report he quoted here in the House—"prices in world markets remain at a depressed level." That is in the document the member read to me some 10 days to two weeks ago.

Mr. Martel: It was four weeks.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Four weeks? Time goes so rapidly in this pleasant atmosphere.

The member did not perhaps have time to read two other crucial sentences, which read as follows: "Costs continue to increase faster than prices and, as a result, gross operating income from Hanna's domestic iron ore operations in the first six months of this year was down 10 per cent from the same period in 1978. This illustrates that market conditions are not sufficiently favourable to support high-cost operations."

That was really a partial answer to the question the member asked me. If he had read the total report, he could have answered the question himself. The member quoted the report correctly as having said "iron ore shipments from the company's Brazilian operation were up 10 per cent during the first six months of this year." That is an accurate quotation he made; he read it correctly.

The report went on to say—and I guess the member missed this part—"However, the cost increases at this facility outpaced price increases, thus operating income declined by 13 per cent, a further exemplification of the underlying weakness of the iron ore market."

That is information that really was available to the honourable member. It does not solve the problem and we acknowledge that. We are making every effort to see what can be done to alter the situation, but it cannot be done overnight. The member knows full well of the efforts of the Minister of Labour, the Premier and others to try to keep this facility viable, and we will not cease in our efforts to do so.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since Ontario imports only 58 per cent of its needs, since the Premier created a special cabinet committee in 1977 to come up with policies respecting the one-industry towns in northern Ontario and since four out of Ontario's nine iron ore mines have closed down in the past 12 months, when can we expect some policy from that heralded group of his in the cabinet, which has yet to meet, I suppose, and when can we expect some legislation which will protect the communities? I ask this particularly because, as mentioned, we are now bringing in 58 per cent of the needs of the steel mills in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The honourable member really is more aware of the complexities of the situation than his question would indicate. He knows full well that this particular mine, the viability of it, the kinds of pellet it produces—

Mr. Martel: I am talking about Caland.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This is the one the member asked about, and this is the one I am answering. The member knows full well the problems that exist with Caland.

Mr. Martel: You didn't listen to today's question at all.

Mr. Speaker: You are not listening to the answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martel: That is not the answer to the question I asked four weeks ago.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I supplied the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Given the fact we appreciate the complexities and the market requirements, would the Premier not agree that surely the time has come in Ontario that foreign-controlled operations, such as Caland, should not be allowed to come in, mine high-grade and then pull out of Ontario and Canada leaving minable ore there that is not in sufficient quantity to allow a domestic company to go in and set up a mining operation? Surely the foreign company has to take some of the bad with the good and at least complete the resource and keep those communities going as long as possible. Would the Premier not agree?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would agree it would be highly desirable if the result the honourable member referred to were to take place, there is no argument about that. The way of achieving this is something a little more difficult to develop in terms of policy. The problem is not simple. It would be very difficult to suggest to anyone, whether domestic or foreign-controlled, to produce a product or to try to market a product for which there is no market. That is the problem at the moment with Caland. It is as simple and unfortunate as that.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Does the Premier not realize there are 1.7 million tons of ore already available at Caland and Caland itself admits there are 16 million tons that are acceptable and minable that could keep the town of Atikokan going over the next six or seven years? What action did his government take when it was notified by Caland last week that it was closing its pelletizing operation five months earlier than previously announced? What steps did his cabinet committee take to preserve those 200 jobs?

Mr. Laughren: You didn't give a damn.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect to the member for Nickel Belt, I heard his interjection. I just hope that what the member said is noted in Hansard, after the fuss earlier today.

I would say to him in reply to his interjection, that if his party showed the same genuine concern in actually trying to accomplish something for the people of this province that this government does, he would be in a position to make that kind of criticism.

They think over there they've got a monopoly of all the concern. I just wish they would spend a little time trying to solve some of the problems in this province instead of just constantly talking about them.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Health has the answer to a question previously asked.

FRENCH HEALTH SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on November 15 the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) asked me why letters received in French at the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital are sent to Toronto for translation. Following that question, I had my staff check with the administrator of Brockville Psychiatric Hospital. To the best of his recollection, in the past two years there has been only one letter written to him in French, from a relative of a patient, requiring translation. The letter was translated by staff at the hospital. That occurred prior to the establishment of our office of the French-language services co-ordinator in the ministry.

In the last six months, he reports, there have been three letters which have required translation in Toronto. One was a Christmas letter which he is sending out to all patients and two others were form letters he is sending out to be used by the facility. In addition, two letters of a more straightforward nature were translated at the facility at Brockville Psychiatric Hospital.

PCB SPILLS

Mr. Hall: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment in connection with the spill of 50 to 75 gallons of PCBs in the Grimsby area last week by Chemical Waste Management Limited.

Can the minister explain why his ministry has continued to support requests to the Environmental Appeal Board to delay holding a hearing concerning 20 conditions applied by his ministry last December 14 on the operations of Chemical Waste Management Limited at Smithville, Ontario, which conditions, if applied, would have eliminated the possibility of the spill that occurred last week?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'm not persuaded it would have eliminated the possibility of the spill, but I do agree with the member that the negotiations have gone on long enough. Knowing of the member's prior concern I have already put in motion the formulation of a letter that will be sent to the appeal board asking it to get on with the appeal hearing.

Mr. Hall: Supplementary: The delay in having a hearing proceed, on the basis of negotiations with Chemical Waste Management Limited, seems to me rather unfair because of the fact the conditions were agreed to with the municipality of the township of West Lincoln, which is not a party to any changed negotiations. I don't think it is fair for two parties to negotiate a three-party arrangement without the knowledge of the municipality. That's my concern.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: As the member knows, we did consult extensively with the municipality on the conditions and they were well aware of them before they were placed. It sometimes avoids the delay of an appeal hearing if one can negotiate an agreed position. In this instance, because the municipality was involved in the first negotiation, I can assure the member it would have been involved before those conditions had been changed through negotiations. We would have involved them and they would have known. Therefore, although they were not present in the negotiation process, we would have given them the right to agree or disagree with any conditions that would be changed as a result of those negotiations. So in effect they were there.

PSYCHIATRIC SERVICES

Mr. Wildman: I have a question of the Minister of Health. Now that the minister is finally proceeding with the setting up of 36 psychiatric beds in Sault Ste. Marie, even though the Algoma District Health Council has stated there is a need for 42 beds, can he inform the House when he will be responding to the recent report of the Ontario Council of Health which identifies a serious shortage in psychiatrists and psychological services in Sault Ste. Marie and district?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I anticipate that as far as an overall response is concerned it will come early in the new year. We're still receiving some of the task force reports associated with the overall report.

We have, in the last year or year and a half, initiated a number of projects in northern Ontario with respect to psychiatric services, including the announcement which was made on my behalf by my colleague, the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Ramsay), to do with the Plummer Memorial Public Hospital.

Mr. Wildman: Why six beds short?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There's a physical limitation one has to take into account as well—the building to be converted.

We've recently initiated the travelling clinic from the Algoma Sanatorium, upgrading of services at the Lakehead Psychiatric Hospital and the like.

I can assure the member that one recommendation we are moving on right away is to reorganize our own ministry with respect to psychiatric services in order to bring it all under one umbrella.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: In the minister's studies, has he come up with any policy recommendations as yet on how he is going to attempt to attract more psychiatrists to the north, being aware, as he must be, the Ontario Council of Health has stated there is a need for 14 psychiatric specialists in Sault Ste. Marie and district where there are only two?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In some areas we're already using financial incentives. For instance we pay a 20 per cent bonus for psychiatrists to work at Lakehead Psychiatric Hospital and in that area. We are prepared to use the underserved area program with the physical incentive there. Obviously, I can't force them to go. We don't have conscription of the medical profession yet—the NDP is not in power.

We will have to find imaginative ways to come up with incentives to get them to practise there. We have difficulties in getting psychiatrists to go to many areas. We've had to come up with financial incentives to practise in various parts of the province. We will continue to use whatever means are available to us to convince psychiatrists and to influence them in making such decisions to go into other areas of the province than just around the teaching centres.

PEEL REGIONAL POLICE

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, on November 2 the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) asked me a question concerning the allegations of physical abuse involving the Peel Regional Police Force made by one William Nykyforchyn. I am now in a position to supply the House with a report.

The matter already had been investigated by the Metropolitan Toronto police, the Peel regional police and the Ontario Police Commission. All the investigations indicated Mr.

Nykyforchyn's allegations could not be corroborated or substantiated. The threats and assaults were denied by the police officers whom he accused. On July 12, 1978, Shaun MacGrath of the Ontario Police Commission wrote to Mr. Nykyforchyn saying the matter had been thoroughly investigated and reviewed and that his complaint was not substantiated. On July 13, 1978, the then Solicitor General, the member for Burlington South (Mr. Kerr), wrote to the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip), who had raised the matter during estimates, to the same effect.

William Nykyforchyn was a private investigator at the time of the events in question. During the early part of 1978 the Peel regional police, the Metropolitan Toronto police and the Ontario Provincial Police were involved in a joint forces investigation which led to charges against Daniel McGarry, John McGarry, Centaur Temporary Help, Centurion Investigations and William Nykyforchyn.

In the course of the investigation Mr. Nykyforchyn was interviewed and his allegations of threats and assaults arose from those procedures. Preliminary inquiries have been held on most of the charges and the trials are set to proceed during the February 18 sessions in Peel county.

On September 21, 1978, Mr. Nykyforchyn voluntarily attended at the Peel Regional Police Force and provided a statement to some of the very officers whom he had accused of threatening and assaulting him. The crown intends to introduce the statement at his trial.

It is our view this may afford Mr. Nykyforchyn an opportunity to discuss his allegations of mistreatment by the police on that occasion, if he so chooses.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Nykyforchyn did in fact attempt to lay charges before Justice of the Peace Robert Powers, but no process was issued. The justice of the peace, of course, had a judicial discretion in the matter. If Mr. Nykyforchyn wishes to dispute the court's failure to issue criminal process there are other avenues in law open to him, including the right to commence a civil action.

BROWNING-FERRIS INDUSTRIES

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Would the minister tell us the rationale for his government guaranteeing up to $100,000 to Browning-Ferris Industries in their proposal to put a liquid-waste solidification plant in Harwich township in Kent county; and would the minister comment on the justice of a system so weighted on behalf of a commercial company and so lacking towards the residents of the township who wish to research this project themselves? Would the minister tell us also the particular law he invoked in making this guarantee?

Mr. Bradley: Friends of big business.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I will come to that in a second.

I think there was a great rationale for what we did and I am very proud of what we did. The commitment we made in an attempt to address a problem the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) has brought to this House many times and which I believe is of great significance to this province—and that I am prepared to act on—was that we needed facilities in this province for the treatment of liquid waste.

We asked various companies to make proposals, but we also put a lot more on the record and I hope the honourable member is aware also of what we said. We said the eventual cost of a successful hearing would be borne by those who do business. We asked six companies to come forward and make proposals and said we would select two. That we have done. If they are unsuccessful, it would be at our request that they went forward with those proposals.

I think it is as logical and as defensible as possible to have that cost borne by this province in order to solve the problem of liquid industrial waste. We are moving on a very aggressive front and I am pleased about that.

The honourable member says we are not protecting the people. I tell him at the same time the announcement was made that no facility would go in without a full environmental assessment hearing at that site. There is no finer, fuller protection for the citizens in any jurisdiction than under our Environmental Assessment Act and they are given that full protection.

What really does disturb me a great deal is that having said we will do the fullest possible job of informing the public, of protecting the public, that somehow or other, long before the proposal is put forward, long before the hearing is held, the honourable member has said it must not happen. If that is the case, if everyone in this province took exactly that same approach, there would never be a solution to the liquid industrial waste problem. We would always be plagued with the problems of indiscriminate dumping, et cetera. We would never have a solution.

I tell the honourable member that he can't have it both ways. I am very proud that we are permitting in this province an opportunity to treat our waste. I am proud we are paying for that, if they are unsuccessful. I believe they will be successful and we will have a solution. I hope that the member will be more open minded than to say before he has heard any of the evidence, "It can't be done."

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I have been answered on the first half of my question but my second half is how does the minister see the justice of the system whereby people who don't have great faith in the system cannot defend themselves in this matter?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The whole point of an environmental assessment hearing is that they can be there, they can hear all of the evidence and they can object to it. I will tell you what, Mr. Speaker; I will go one step further and I am pleased to do so. I know the member opposite would like a meeting with his local officials in my office. I am prepared to do much more than that. I am more than prepared to go into the member's constituency and talk about the need for liquid industrial waste facilities and the logic of what we are doing. I am more than pleased to tell the members opposite we will be there at an open meeting, because I believe what we are doing is the right thing to treat this problem.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: How can the minister say the residents are protected before the environmental hearings when it is a David and Goliath situation if nobody pays the opponents' costs, except themselves out of their own pockets, and the government pays the cost of the proponent? How can he call that a fair hearing?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I believe it is fair for this very basic reason: I believe an environmental assessment hearing is there for the protection of the people of our province, not for the benefit of the proponent. The member has the cynical view that a hearing is white-wash. I don't. I believe in that process and I know the information will come forward. It is there for the protection of the people.

PETITIONS

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, today New Democrats are submitting petitions that have been signed by 274,856 residents of Ontario protesting the government's cutbacks on health care. This is the largest petition in the history of Ontario. Specifically, I wish to present, under rule 29(b), a petition signed by 239,942 Ontario residents which is adressed to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and which states:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the parliament of Ontario as follows: We protest the government's restraint program for health care. The quality of health care in Ontario is now threatened by deterioration of services in hospitals and lack of access to doctors billing at OHIP rates.

"We are opposed to any form of extra billing by doctors, to extra fees being charged to chronic and other patients, and to the unfair OHIP premiums. We already pay a lot in taxes and we insist that the government acts to provide needed hospitals and health services and to ensure that everyone has full health insurance coverage."

I have appended my name to this petition. Before bringing it up to the table I just wish to say thank you to some of the New Democrats who are here in the chamber today who have helped, with many thousands of others, to bring to the Legislature the opinions of more than a quarter of a million Ontario residents on the deterioration of health services.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which contains 10 pages of names, so it's somewhat more modest. It is directed to the Lieutenant Governor and the government of Ontario: "We, the undersigned, petition the government of Ontario to apply Wintario funds to support our hospitals and medicare throughout the province of Ontario." Mr. Speaker, I submit that petition.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 8,311 residents of north-eastern Ontario, addressed to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the parliament of Ontario as follows: We protest the government's restraint program for health care. The quality of health care in Ontario is now threatened by deterioration of services in hospitals and associated agencies. We request that northern Ontario be recognized as a unique region. We pay the same premiums as residents in the south yet do not receive the same services. In this respect, we insist the air ambulance services be reinstated for non-emergency referrals and greater assistance be given to specialists locating in isolated communities.

"We are opposed to extra fees being charged to chronic and other patients. We already pay a lot in taxes and we insist that the government act to provide needed hospitals and health services and to ensure that everyone has full health insurance coverage.”

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall), myself and all the people of Essex county, I would like to present a petition with the names of 26,603 people who care about our health-care system, unlike that government.

Interjections.

Mr. Cooke: You people are awfully upset about something today. The petition reads as follows: “We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the parliament of Ontario as follows: We protest the government’s restraint program for health care. The closing of beds in Windsor without the necessary alternative forms of care, such as chronic home care, adequate number of nursing home beds and the quality of regulated rest homes, has resulted in overcrowding of hospitals to the point where patients have been stacked up in hallways and emergency rooms, putting people’s lives at risk.

“We are opposed to any form of extra billing by doctors, to extra fees being charged to chronic and other patients and to the unfair OHIP premiums. We insist that the government act to provide the needed hospitals and health services to ensure that everyone has full health insurance coverage.” There are 26,000 names.

Applause.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure our visitors will be happy to know they are welcome here, but no outbursts or applause or anything of that nature is allowed within this chamber.

Mr. Cassidy: They worked hard, Mr. Speaker. They deserve it.

Mr. Speaker: It little behooves the leader of the New Democratic Party to encourage that kind of thing.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ENVIRONMENTAL RIGHTS ACT

Mr. S. Smith moved first reading of Bill 185, An Act respecting Environmental Rights in Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. S. Smith: The purpose of this bill is to provide for environmental rights in Ontario. The bill permits an action to be brought in the Supreme Court of Ontario by any person for the protection of the environment. The bill also provides for public notice and review of certain approvals, permits and other environment-related orders before the approvals, permits or orders come into force.

Other provisions of the bill provide for public access to information relating to environmental decisions and for regular review by the Environmental Assessment Board of all regulations affecting the environment.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Van Horne moved first reading of Bill 186, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to prohibit the employment or use of strikebreakers in the course of a lawful strike or lockout. It is hoped this type of legislation would preclude needless violence and deaths, such as that of Mr. Illingham in Simcoe, Ontario, this summer.

EDUCATION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Bounsall moved first reading of Bill 187, An Act to amend the Education Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require school boards in Ontario to develop definitive, orderly procedures and rational policies for determining in this period of declining enrolment whether or not schools should be closed. All procedures and policies must be approved by the Ministry of Education and a full moratorium on all school closings will be in effect until such approval is received. The bill contains requirements for full public hearings at all stages and the provision of all information by the board to affected citizens, including financial and social effects and a complete survey of alternate choices of education likely to be made by parents in the event of a community school closure.

Should a board decide to close a particular school, provision is made for an appeal to the Ontario Municipal Board, which shall consider all matters that were before the school board and the public hearings.

Although I have an excellent resolution standing in my name on the Order Paper requiring the government to bring in as amendments to the Human Rights Code the recommendations that are contained in the Ontario Human Rights Commission’s report, Life Together, I will proceed with the bill I have introduced today on December 6, when my slot for private members’ bills comes up for debate.

If I could just add one more thought—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has given us quite a clear and full explanation of the intent of the bill.

Mr. Bounsall: I would just like to say that I have plagiarized most of this from the minister's opening statement on pages 112 to 116 to the estimates committee a week ago.

Mr. Speaker: Your sources are your own business.

ORDERS OF THE DAY COMPULSORY AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 160, An Act to provide for Compulsory Automobile Insurance.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks. This is really an historic bill. It brings to an end the motor vehicle accident claims fund, or the unsatisfied judgement fund, as we know it.

I want to make a few remarks about that fund, because notwithstanding its present difficulties—I imagine there is going to be utter silence in the House when I tell the House what its present difficulties are—notwithstanding that, over the years, that fund increased substantially. Bear in mind, from 1958 to 1961 it was $5 for an uninsured vehicle, $20 from 1962 to 1966, $25 from 1966 to 1973, $40 in 1973, $60 in 1975, $100 in 1976, and $150 from December 1, 1979.

Over a period of years the fund was in receipt of over $200 million and paid out some $181 million, leaving a theoretical balance of $29 million with the Treasurer. In that period of time it did yeoman service in the province. It provided payments to those who otherwise would have had difficulty getting any payments. It brought in the concept of almost self-insurance by the driver in paying the annual supplement to his driver's licence fee to protect himself against stolen cars or the hit-and-run auto—a function, incidentally, that will continue—but obviously the MVAC, or the unsatisfied judgement fund, has outlived its usefulness.

Were it an insurance company being regulated by my ministry it would be declared insolvent; it would be declared bankrupt and we would begin wind-down procedures. The truth of the matter is that in this fiscal year, there will be better than $52 million direct operational losses. Had we operated this government fund as we insist that others do under insurance principles, the actual deficit as of July 30, 1979, was somewhat in excess of $21 million.

It is a matter of record that this fund no longer even serves as a deterrent. Realizing some of the financial difficulties of the fund, last year I raised the fee from $100 to $150. The response from those in this province who prefer not to have insurance was rather dramatic. From 74,000 who had paid the $100, we dropped down to 42,000 who were willing to pay out $150 as a penalty for not accepting their responsibility to carry public liability and property damage insurance.

In short, even if we are to raise the penalty fee to double, triple, or quadruple, the only thing that would occur is fewer and fewer would pay it. I doubt seriously if any of those who ducked out on the raise from $100 to $150 ever showed up with an insurance company. If we went to $500 or $600 or $700 a year—which indeed would be more than they would have to pay for an insurance premium—we would be getting very little money into the fund and we would still be having to pay out on a rather substantial basis, particularly when we have no idea of the coverage or payments we are liable to provide because we don't know the number of people who choose to totally ignore their responsibilities to themselves, their neighbours and the community by deliberately not having insurance.

I've given this report on motor vehicle accident claims because from time to time there is the comment that compulsory insurance cannot guarantee that on each and every moment of each and every day, all motorists in this province will be insured, and since the present system seems to be working, why change it?

The simple fact is the present system is not working. Were we not making a change, I would be before the members before the end of this session to ask for supplementary estimates in the range of $2.5 million.

Mr. Speaker, the budget of next year would hardly be dry before I would be back again to ask for more supplemental estimates and that pattern would continue. Bear in mind that many of the claims we are settling now are for 1977 and 1978. Bodily injury claims are not the cheapest; indeed, they are the most expensive. They take a considerable amount of time to finalize. I want to put to rest the comment that the present system is quite adequate and sufficient. It may have been at one time but it certainly isn't now in terms of motor vehicle accident claims.

As a matter of fact if all goes well, it will take two years of using the driver's licence contribution—that $1 a year—to stabilize that fund. With some good claims experience, with our reserve being a little more adequate than we would allow or would think about in the private sector and with the collection agencies beginning work early in the new year on somewhere between $40 million and $50 million worth of unpaid amounts into that fund, hopefully we will be able to put it into a solvent position operating on that $1 a year, the driver's licence contribution rather than the penalty, we should be able to provide protection to the people of Ontario against only the stolen car and the unidentified driver.

I believe this is historic legislation because it is a reaffirmation of a very fundamental principle in our society, that a person must be responsible if he or she is going to enjoy the privileges of our society. If one has enough money to buy or operate an automobile, then one has enough money to purchase insurance to cover the liability to those who will be the innocent victims of the operation of that motor vehicle.

Mr. Speaker, you hear people say, "I can't afford insurance. We shouldn't be forced into compulsory insurance." I have never heard a single person say to the bank, the finance company, the leasing company, "I can't afford to buy collision insurance to protect your chattel and mine." It's always on the other side.

Mr. Laughren: That's silly.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's not silly. Can the member show me one person who has ever said, "I will not borrow from your company because you make me buy collision insurance to protect the chattel"? Can he show me one? If that's the case he's not driving. He will protect his own chattel, he will protect the bank and not raise any objections but he will not accept his responsibilities to the rest of society.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That's a very gratuitous comment.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's a very accurate one.

It is a matter of responsibility. It is a matter of purchasing insurance to the minimum standards set by the province, which is $100,000. Indeed, in today's society it is not really very much, but it is something that is required more and more. It is something that one will be very easily able to do. I want to compliment the industry for the resources, including the financial resources but particularly the human resources they have devoted to the establishment of the Facility Association. This will provide a very accessible and very fair method of insurance purchase for motorists in this province, even for the worst of drivers, the highest risk motorists. Were it not for the industry, and the resources it has devoted to it, I think we would not have as good a system; certainly the taxpayer would have had to pay to have that system developed.

Secondly, I would like to compliment the agents of this province.

Mr. Laughren: I'm glad you're proud of them.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am very proud of the insurance industry of this province. I will take your Saskatchewan wand, or whatever is left of it, and I will compare it any day on a number of tests and we will find—

Mr. Laughren: Let's do that.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh! Yes, we will. We will test it for solvency. I would like to see their figures and so would the rest of Canada.

I make no bones about it, I am very proud of the 183 insurance companies of this province which offer coverage. I am also very proud of the agents in this province. They have devoted considerable time, notwithstanding the fact that at the very same time that we were bringing in compulsory insurance they were also developing a self-regulatory procedure for the future operation of their industry through RIBO, the Registered Insurance Brokers of Ontario.

The agents faced a very formidable task since the beginning of this year in taking themselves out of totally government regulation into self regulation. Notwithstanding that, notwithstanding the great energy and resources that had to be devoted to them, I commend them for taking a day-to-day interest in the evolution of this legislation, in holding the seminars and the information sessions for agents. So that indeed, for normal people in this province, and to motorists, this bill will show very little difference in the procedures that have gone on in the past.

I would like, in closing, to mention a couple of items, because I want to make them very clear. Anybody who has one of the quarterly plates has to renew a quarterly plate for the last part of the year; notwithstanding the fact they may have paid a penalty before for not having insurance, after December 1 they will have to have insurance in order to get that plate.

I assure members that I have some concerns about the practice of people with commercial plates; and I am not necessarily talking about private vans but of people who in the past were operating businesses using trucks with commercial plates and paying a penalty fee. That, I must admit, had escaped my knowledge; and I presume it also escaped the knowledge of most of the Legislature, because I notice in the very voluminous work that was done by the select committee in its two reports that this question of trucks—at least the lighter trucks, perhaps not the PCV—the arrangement under which they could merely pay a penalty fee, while at the same time operating a business or having it as part of a business, was not dealt with. I am glad that this, quite frankly, is coming to an end.

I have the utmost confidence in the ability of the industry to absorb the "question mark" number of motorists who will be buying insurance for the first time. I don't even think the select committee, with all its knowledge and all its actuarial attempts, nor the industry, nor anybody, really has a handle on how many motorists do not have insurance on any given day. We know at licence-plate time 95 per cent or 96 per cent do have it; there are varying suspicions as to what goes on after that. In any event, on a very conservative estimate, at least 250,000 drivers will be buying insurance for the first time.

I'm very confident about the ease with which they will be absorbed into the system and the ease with which they will accept their very fundamental responsibility to be in a financial position, as best they can be, to protect the innocent from whatever might happen as a result of their operating a vehicle, as well as to protect the people in the vehicle they are operating from whatever might happen in an accident. I think it will be handled very quickly, very efficiently and without any disturbance to the vast majority who have had car insurance as we know it for so many years.

Because of the length of question period today, and because I know others want to speak on it, I will just close with this. We have followed as much as possible—and I want to compliment them—the work of the select committee on company law. Without their guidelines, without their advice, without the work they did, the evolution of this legislation, which I concede is long overdue, would have taken even longer. Quite frankly, it is relatively easy as a minister to develop legislation when you have something put in front of you as straightforward, as clear and as incisive as the work of this select committee. I compliment them and, although they have gone on to other areas in the field of insurance, they will follow this model and that they will be as concise, as incisive, as efficient and as stimulating as they have been in the past.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, as the minister and many other members of the House are well aware, I'm delighted to speak on behalf of my party with respect to the second reading of Bill 160.

As the minister mentioned, the select committee on company law has had the study of insurance generally, and of automobile insurance particularly, before it during two years of sessions. The first report of that committee, under the chairmanship of the member for Wilson Heights at that time, Vernon Singer, was delivered to the House on March 28, 1977. That committee was organized in May of 1976 and there was a substantial amount of time spent on public hearings during the summer of 1976.

The report was written in January of 1977 and it focused on a number of particular subjects. The subjects dealt with were not only the standard automobile policy, premiums and claims, but also, which was very important from the point of view of the select committee, the report dealt with the subject of compulsory third party liability insurance.

I must say that many of the leaders of the insurance industry and its various groups are under the Speaker's gallery at the present time. As I look at these familiar faces watching this bill finally come into law, I think it is fair to say, from all members of the select committee, that the various component parts of the insurance industry were ready, willing and able to bring us all the information that was asked for. Indeed I'm sure many members of the committee found out more about automobile insurance than they really wanted to know.

In any event, in that report, I would refer briefly, for the interest of the members of the House, to chapter 24. There are only four pages, but they deal very well with the particular principle of compulsory third party liability insurance.

There is one quotation I would like to make from that chapter, dealing with the original recommendation which the committee made on page 173. It is as follows:

"The committee strongly recommends the enactment of legislation requiring that every person who owns a licensed automobile have a valid policy of automobile insurance providing third party liability coverage and accident benefits coverage. The principle on which compulsory automobile insurance is based is that every person who owns an automobile that is used on public roads has a moral obligation and ought to have a corresponding legal obligation to bear his fair share of the losses that are incurred on the roads, and should be entitled to benefit from the payment by other automobile operators of their fair share of such losses through their insurance premiums. This principle of reciprocal benefit and obligation is so axiomatic that it should hardly need argument or justification in order to be accepted."

That was the principle upon which the committee relied in dealing with this whole idea of compulsory automobile insurance. There were two particular groups that had to be referred to once that principle was accepted by the committee.

The first dealt with self-insurers, that is to say the very large companies, or sometimes agencies of government, which simply dealt with claims on an annual basis, paid them as they occurred and did not have insurance coverage as such for their various fleets of vehicles. Examples would be the railways or Bell Canada.

The second area of interest was that dealing with a very small group, almost the complete opposite of those large fleets; that was the small group of conscientious objectors from the Conservative Mennonite Churches of Ontario.

I must say that it is a pleasure to see that in the legislation we have before us we've had the opportunity to deal with both of those sides of the issue.

The matter of self-insurers is dealt with promptly in the bill, and I'll refer to that later, and of course the opportunity exists under the exemption portion of the bill to attend to this other small but meaningful group whose traditions in my opinion have earned them the opportunity to be dealt with in a somewhat separate way, but a way which will protect the public interest.

For the matter of conscientious objectors, as members might wish to refer to that chapter, the objection is really that the purchase of insurance was something they felt was a constraint upon their traditional point of view. A bond or guaranty is the kind of thing that they have been able to accommodate in other branches of the group, and in certain of the northern United States. Copies of that material were provided to the superintendent's office with the hopes that some similar type of arrangement, on a clearly known basis with the names of those persons who would particularly be involved, could accommodate this small, perhaps 100- or 150-driver population who were of this particular opinion.

We've had the opportunity, in the legislation, to therefore see these two particular themes attended to with the hopes of their being finally accommodated.

The matter of the first report, as I say, was brought to the House in March 1977. While there were comments that the principle of compulsory automobile insurance was a theme that the government was particularly prepared to consider, we on the select committee obviously had to take the next step, that is to consider how this kind of project could be enforced.

The members of the select committee spent the summer of 1977 reviewing the proposal further, and in preparing for their second report dealt with the subject of enforcement of compulsory insurance. This was the first year I had the privilege of chairing the committee. I was most pleased at the efforts made by all members of the committee to complete the report and substantially agree on a variety of the recommendations, particularly those dealing with the prospects of enforcement.

Having asked for compulsory insurance, it was now beholden on the members of the select committee to seriously and responsibly suggest how it could be accomplished intelligently. A major portion of the second report, which was tabled in the Legislature on June 22, 1978, deals with that particular theme.

The enforcement of compulsory insurance is particularly referred to on page 157, in the summary chapter of conclusions and recommendations. I would refer you, Mr. Speaker, and the members of the House, to three of the recommendations made in chapter one at that time.

The fifth recommendation was as follows: "The committee is convinced that the basic requirement of an effective compulsory insurance system is that all vehicles must be insured and remain insured for as long as they are licensed. This requirement can be fulfilled as follows: (a) All vehicles which require vehicle licences should be required to carry the minimum third party liability insurance and accident benefits coverage; (b) private corporations and government bodies whose activities are substantially commercial should not be excluded from the requirement to provide proof of insurance for their motor vehicles; (c) the present exemption for government should be reviewed so that only federal and provincial government ministries, departments and agencies not engaged in commerce would be considered to be exempt from compulsory insurance, municipalities should be required to provide proof of insurance; (d) exemption from the principle of compulsory automobile insurance should be granted to those religious groups able to demonstrate it is against their fundamental religious conviction to rely upon the automobile insurance system. This exemption is conditional upon the applicants establishing that the losses which they occasion will be paid as fully as though they were insured under all compulsory forms of insurance."

The seventh recommendation was this: "Regardless of the compliance procedures that are introduced, there will always be uninsured vehicles. Accordingly, provision should be made for significant minimum penalties for noncompliance. The penalty for not having insurance or falsifying insurance is suggested to be a minimum of not less than twice the approximate cost of the insurance and should include licence suspension."

The eighth recommendation was this: "The committee has concluded that there is value in setting out clearly in the Insurance Act specific authority of the police to stop a vehicle for the purpose of checking for compulsory insurance coverage and recommends that the minister make such changes to the act."

Those are three of the particular recommendations in the first chapter of the second report which suggested a framework in which enforcement of automobile insurance might be accommodated.

In the second chapter we looked into some of the implications of compliance with respect to the operations of companies within the province. In the third chapter we were more particularly interested in ensuring the availability of insurance to all the drivers in Ontario. In the fourth chapter we talked about the motor vehicle accident claims fund.

The minister has reviewed the background and framework of the claims fund. All members of the House are mindful of the necessity of keeping this fund going because of the problems that hit and run or stolen cars will occasion, and because of the requirements of those drivers who may be driving with suspended licences and no insurance in spite of the law that has been passed. So the enforcement of this program was something which the committee seriously considered.

In between the first and second reports we had the opening of the second session of our present 31st parliament. In the speech from the throne which Her Honour gave to the members of the House on February 21, 1978, the following paragraph occurred:

"My ministers have approved in principle the introduction of compulsory automobile insurance in Ontario with a view to implementation in December 1979. The program, to be developed by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, will take into account recommendations of the select committee on company law whose report on the enforcement aspects of such a plan is expected soon."

As I mentioned, this came in between the first and second reports, and indeed it was encouraging at that time to have the commitment of the government that a program was going to be considered, sorted out and implemented in deliberate course, recognizing that it would necessarily take some time to deal with the particular problems.

Mr. Roy: What was the date of that statement again?

Mr. Breithaupt: The date, for my colleague from Ottawa East, was February 21, 1978.

It was important, of course, for us to realize that the implementation of compulsory automobile insurance was something which was going to have to be thoroughly considered by the various ministries involved. A committee of deputy ministers was formed, including representatives not only from the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, but also from the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, and I believe also from the ministries of the Attorney General and the Solicitor General. These individuals have been meeting with support staff, and also with me as chairman of the select committee, so that we could be assured we were both proceeding at least generally along the same course. It would have been most inappropriate, I think, if the select committee had been going off in one direction on enforcement and if the interministerial committee had been looking at it from an entirely separate point of view.

It was indeed fortunate that the work which had been done by our committee was found to be of interest and of use to the interministerial committee, and I believe their deliberations took into account many of the other details that we may not have been entirely familiar with on the insurance basis and which had to be attended to.

The minister has mentioned the matter of the commercial vehicles on a short-term licence, which is a particular matter that has to be attended to; in addition, of course, the use of some sort of a sticker approach on the licence plate or on the windscreen, as has been done by a variety of states within the United States, was the kind of thing that had to be sorted out in a practical way. That was the function of the interministerial committee. Those decisions will eventually come forward in the form of regulations and will be dealt with and phased in during this next licence year.

We then had the commitment made by the government that this legislation would be coming forward. Of course, it had been hoped that perhaps early this spring we might have had the opportunity of having a draft bill before us so that the various component parts of the industry, as well as members of the House, would have had a chance, possibly over these past summer months, to consider this legislation in an almost final form; however, that was not possible. We then saw as our next opportunity that legislation might be in our hands as soon as we returned in October.

The legislation, as you will recall sir, was in fact introduced on November 2 and copies of the bill were available to interested persons and organizations in the insurance industry on November 6. On that date I sent out some 80 copies of the bill to a variety of interests, and I presume they had a chance to see copies earlier as well and were all involved.

Hon. Mr. Drea: As well as the Advocates' Society, the commercial section of the bar.

Mr. Breithaupt: Oh, yes. There were many groups, of course.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Prior to its being drafted.

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes, there were many groups involved and I am sure recommendations have come back. I recall speaking with the superintendent of insurance when we were both in Windsor a week ago attending a conference on insurance matters. He commented in his affable way that this was perhaps the 21st draft of the bill. I have no doubt a tremendous amount of work has gone into reviewing and refining the details with the hope that good legislation will result from the deliberations which the House is now undertaking.

Interest in compulsory automobile insurance has developed and was seen in a variety of editorial comments and other comments that were made once the bill was before the House. In the Hamilton Spectator on November 6, the comment was as follows: "Compulsory auto insurance won't put an end to reckless driving or to accidents, but will go a long way towards ensuring that the victims of motor vehicle accidents will receive fair compensation and that the most irresponsible drivers at least will be forced off the roads."

If I had to sum up the several volumes which were written on this subject by the members of the select committee, I could do no worse than copy a paragraph like that, because that's really what it's all about. We do want fair compensation, and in that respect I must suggest the policy limits of $100,000 in Ontario are, I believe, the highest in North America.

There are many states in the United States that are on the old basis of $5,000 and $10,000. There are some that have got up to $20,000. Indeed when one looks at the framework of insurance within Ontario, the commitment of the $100,000 basic figure is the best there is. I am not saying for one moment that it is perfect, and I don't think anyone in this House would think it is, because there is, unfortunately, the occasional exceptional accident which will leave a tremendous burden on an individual. But in the basics we've been able to accomplish within the system we have, or within the variety of systems that exist throughout Canada and the United States, I believe there is some commendation which can go to the ministry, not only for accepting the select committee's recommendation that that be the limit, but also for going ahead and doing it. I believe that credit should be given in that instance where it is clearly due, to the superintendent of insurance and those who are involved in his portion of the ministry, and as well to the leaders within the insurance operations within Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, you are probably wondering whether I am going to speak on the bill. I can assure you I am about to start just right about now. The estimate of the numbers of people who are going to be involved by the passage of this legislation was referred to in the second report of the select committee at page 6. The figures, as commented upon by the minister, were the best guesses we could make at the time. He is correct that other than the actual days when a person might choose to have insurance in force for the obtaining of a licence, no one really knows how many people are on the roads of this province without proper, thorough and consistent automobile insurance coverage.

As I say, at page 6 of that report, we looked over the 4.6 million drivers within the province and came to a conclusion that perhaps some 10 per cent of that figure certainly had periods of time during the year at which they were not insured. About three of those 10 were paying the $150 figure, in total some 140,000 drivers.

Another one and a half or two of those percentage points are certainly going to be picked up by this legislation. We recognize that as the fee for the motor vehicle accident claims fund increased not necessarily everyone took advantage of paying that fee or buying insurance. Obviously, a goodly number of people managed to avoid doing either, and there is no point in pretending otherwise. The falling number didn't necessarily mean that more people were being insured, although I would hope at least some were taking on that responsibility.

We are looking at the other, I suppose five per cent of those 10, the last five per cent of the drivers within this province who have not ordinarily paid insurance premiums, and indeed may attempt to avoid doing so. We have to deal with those people in a thorough and serious way by making sure the enforcement provisions in the legislation are not only standard and easily followed by the police authorities, but that the penalties occasioned by their abuse be enforced and get their attention.

The principle of compulsory insurance is dealt with quite simply, quite briefly, in section 2 of the act. We see that no owner of a motor vehicle shall operate the motor vehicle or cause or permit the motor vehicle to be operated on a highway unless the motor vehicle is insured under a contract of automobile insurance. Of course we have those two exemptions to which I referred earlier on; the matter of self-insurers, which is dealt with, and the matter of conscientious objectors who can be accommodated satisfactorily under subsection (a) of section 15.

It is my view that we have legislation before us which is basically quite good, but which obviously can still use a few improvements. Therefore I think, and I understand it's also the opinion of the members of the New Democratic Party, that this bill should go briefly to a standing committee, hopefully for a day, at which time the clause-by-clause discussion of the bill will allow a number of areas to be reviewed, and in my view some matters corrected.

We look at the first offence provisions. For example, in section 2(3)(b), and as well in section 3, I think something can be discussed in the committee stage on the idea of giving a certain period of time to provide the insurance coverage. These fines are substantial and it may well be that members of the committee, the standing committee on justice I would presume, may have questions to ask with respect to the possibility of a 24-hour rule or something like that. I don't know if this sort of grace period, as opposed to having to have the card with a person at all times is practical or whether it lends itself to some abuse. It is only a suggestion that I think is worthy of a bit of discussion.

In section 6 we deal with the penalty provisions, and I presume those penalty provisions referred to are the ones attended to in section 14.

In talking to the principle of the bill, I am concerned about the service of documents on the Facility Association. It seems to me the way section 8 has been developed, service on the directors or on officers, as opposed to some more clearly defined address which can be dealt with by regulation, is somewhat awkward. I am interested in looking at the approach which will allow the superintendent of insurance, in section 10, to set insurance rates. Certainly this is quite a change from those two sections of the insurance bill that have been referred to in earlier reports which have never been proclaimed.

The duty to set rates is going to be an important responsibility which the superintendent has. The committee might want to consider the whole opportunity of the allowance or disallowance of rates, based upon the approach which has been taken in a number of other provinces. It has an opportunity to look at the system the Alberta rating board has to approve or disapprove rates after discussions.

It may be that in this approach we are giving one person full control over all rates, if there are no insurance rates which are going to be higher than the Facility Association rates. I believe traditionally the Facility Association or the residual market rates have ordinarily been the highest rates. The setting of those highest-rate categories could impose a domino effect on the other rates which insurance companies may charge for their variety of coverages. It is an interesting theme which can be talked about, I am sure, at some length in another place.

The matter of self-certification is one which is referred to. Certainly the approach the people of Ontario have taken over the years has been to responsibly insure themselves to that level of 90 per cent or so. I think the approach to self-certification, in the framework which we have in the province, is going to be a balanced way of dealing with insurance coverage. Certainly the penalties there are substantial ones which should get the attention of any driver or insurance agent or company that gets mixed up in providing information in an improper or incorrect form.

There are two themes I think should be referred to at this point because I believe they may be errors in the act. I refer to section 16, the matter of amendments to the Insurance Act. Section 214 of the Insurance Act is said to be repealed by this section. I put it to you that the simple repeal of that section may not be what is wanted at all. Section 214 states:

"The insurer is not liable under a contract evidenced by a motor vehicle liability policy for any liability: (a) imposed by any workmen's compensation law upon any person insured by the contract; (b) resulting from bodily injury to or the death of any person insured by the contract; or (c) resulting from bodily injury to or the death of any employee or of any person insured by the contract while engaged in the operation or repair of the automobile."

That breaks down roughly into three themes. The first is workmen's compensation coverages; the second, the husband-and-wife situation; and, third, the matter of the mechanic in the garage driving your car around the block to test it out.

I suggest it would not be a good idea to repeal the subsection dealing with the Workmen's Compensation Board. I think it is satisfactory to deal with the husband-and-wife situation and it may be reasonable to repeal the garage mechanic idea, but it would be, at least in my opinion, an error to repeal the Workmen's Compensation Board subsection unless the matter is dealt with elsewhere. If it is, I am not aware of it.

A second possible error that may exist in the bill deals with the reprinting of section 230. Members will note, if they look at the bill, that this is a particularly involved section, but it would appear that a subparagraph on page 13 of the bill is one that should have been reprinted as well on page 12. This can be dealt with in committee because it's the subject which is referred to in the following terms: "Where such director or officer or employee or the spouse of such director or officer or employee is not the owner of an insured automobile."

This subparagraph appears under the numeral 2 of subsection 2(b)(iii)(c) in part of a section which I think should have been reprinted as well under the previous numeral 2. It's a detail which is perhaps difficult to explain, but one which the committee may be able to tidy up, if that is the case.

I do welcome the provision of this legislation. It is indeed a substantial step forward and the minister is to be commended for pursuing the topic, which has not been an easy one. This is a ministry that covers nearly everything under the sun, as I have found out in the last year or so as the critic for the ministry.

Mr. Ruston: If no one else wants it they give it to him.

Mr. Breithaupt: It's almost that way, because when one looks at the Order Paper the securities bill is there; there are some registry office bills; there's a condominium bill; and a variety of other things difficult always to put to one's mind. But in this bill we're dealing with a particular theme, one certainly whose time has come. The prospect of having more persons driving on the roads properly insured, properly paying a fair rate for the kinds of coverages which we in Ontario believe should exist, is one that I welcome.

Over these past three years it's been an important part of my life to have been involved with the work of the select committee and with the subject of automobile insurance, as well as the general coverages and, of course, the life insurance the committee is reviewing at the present time. The first two reports were seriously put together with the assistance of our consultants and counsel, as well as with the active involvement and interest of all members of the committee. I believe a very happy day will occur when again another series of recommendations is accepted, as this bill accepts them, and when legislation will be brought into place in Ontario.

I certainly have welcomed the opportunity of speaking in favour of this bill and I hope the minister will be able to accommodate not only speedy passage on second reading today, but perhaps a day in committee so the legislation will be in place by December 1.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I consider it an honour, a privilege and a treat to enter this debate right after the member for Kitchener, who serves in the capacity of chairman of the select committee on company law and who I hold personally responsible for many of the innovations with which the minister has finally moved ahead. I just want you to know, Mr. Speaker, that a bit later in the debate I intend also to quote from chairman Breithaupt's big red book on the auto insurance industry.

It's an interesting comparison today, on a day when we saw presented the largest petition in the history of the Legislature, over a quarter of a million names of people who are dissatisfied with the way government is handling health insurance. As a footnote, it would probably be equally easy to find in short order to sign petitions an equivalent number of people who are fed up and unhappy with the way this government is mollycoddling the auto insurance industry in this province.

The issue was raised by the member for Kitchener regarding the long time it has taken the government to move from a commitment that's almost two years old—February 21, 1978, through to introduction of the legislation on November 2. It's rather interesting to view that against the defects that still are visible in the bill, even after almost two years of circulating about, drafting and redrafting within the ministry. I realize the minister stated back in 1978 that he wanted to have it in place in December 1979. I'd heard at one point that he had set the date as December 1, 1979. That's correct, is it?

It's sort of interesting because I'm not exactly sure how it is we arrived at this 11th-hour position dealing with Bill 160. We have what I am sure the minister will admit is the most significant initiative of the fall session—probably of the last year—as far as the minister is concerned, in terms of legislation and certainly within the insurance industry.

The minister then puts us in a position where on November 20 we are just starting second reading of this bill. We have to go through second reading, through committee stage outside the House—which hopefully won't take too long—and come back for third reading and royal assent. All of these are necessary steps of legislation which would mean if he still intends to have it in place by December 1 this year, he has given the assembly a week and a half to deal with an important piece of legislation. I really can't understand why the minister would do that and why the minister would put such a rush on to the Legislature at the last minute for a bill that is clearly not good enough.

I know the professionals who work in that ministry and I know they couldn't be guilty of such poor planning and timing. I wonder what the reason is for this kind of manipulation of the Legislative Assembly.

I want to tell the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that it's nothing new. For years members of this assembly, organizations and individuals throughout the province have been arguing and building a very strong and convincing case for compulsory automobile insurance and the government has never acted on those requests over all that period of time. It was a case of continual footdragging on the part of the government in this area.

The member for Kitchener quoted from the first report on automobile insurance the select committee on company law had put out during the terms of his predecessor in the chair, Mr. Singer. He quoted from the top of page 173. There is an interesting quotation further down that page which pre-dates by some time the recommendation of the select committee and the quotation from the McWilliams report that was done for the ministry back in August 1972. It puts forward a similar argument to that put forward by the select committee. I quote:

"The time is past when anyone can seriously argue the proposition that all persons operating a motor vehicle should be covered by public liability insurance. From the frequency of requests from people who appeared before us throughout the province—and these were members of the public, agents, adjusters, solicitors and insurance representatives—we think that the people of Ontario would accept, if not demand, the requirement that all persons owning a motor vehicle in Ontario should be insured. There is no longer any justification for permitting a man the choice of insuring himself or paying a fee in lieu of into the motor vehicle accident claims fund."

That was in August 1972, some seven years ago, and there were many reports and arguments put before the government, but it just let it drag on and on. That was really the most unbelievable sort of negligence on the part of this government over the past decade and more.

The member for Kitchener talks about defects in the bill; there are numerous defects in the bill. Hopefully we will be able to repair some of those when we go to committee. I know it's not appropriate to get into sections of the bill during second reading but one of the broad areas that concerns me is the rather light level of penalties and fines imposed on insurance companies that are found to be violating this new legislation. That's one area in which the bill is defective and one area in which we're going to have to have amendments to have that area tightened up.

In this party we welcome the introduction of compulsory auto insurance and we're going to support the bill, but I've outlined three areas of criticism which I'll summarize.

The first criticism is that the ministry announced this initiative two years ago, and then waited until we were in a position when there was only a week and a half to deal with this important piece of legislation. I think that's shoddy.

The second area of criticism is that, given the obvious need for this kind of legislation over such a long period of time, I cannot understand why this government has tried to be the last state in the civilized world to introduce compulsory automobile insurance.

Mr. McClellan: Not tried—we are.

Mr. M. N. Davison: One wonders some days.

My other concern, which I think is a legitimate criticism, is that we're going to have to amend this bill in committee to make it at least passable in terms of being a good bill.

There's also another area of criticism I have. It concerns the blind and totally unjustified faith of this minister and indeed of all the members on that side of the House, as well as a couple of members to my right, in the private automobile insurance companies. Their faith in those companies is not justified. The minister should know that.

No matter which way the minister reads this legislation, no matter the kind of gloss he tries to put on it, consumers in the province are going to be paying more money to private auto insurance corporations' profits. That's what the minister is asking the consumers of the province to do: to give more profits to the private auto insurance corporations. When he does that, he puts consumers in the province at the mercy of private auto insurance corporations. When I think of those companies, when members on this side of the House think of those companies, and when the public thinks of those companies, mercy is not the first quality that jumps to mind. I understand that, and I think the minister should understand that.

Time and time again in this House and in the community we've seen examples of those auto insurance companies ripping off and gouging consumers in this province, and the minister is aware of that.

The minister will recall that we've had debates on the budget and in his estimates where it has been shown that those auto insurance companies ripped off the consumers of this country and of this province to the tune of millions and millions of dollars, with their ripoff techniques and their needless gouging of consumers.

The minister will remember that every year it was in operation the Anti-Inflation Board had to order those insurance companies to give back millions of dollars to the consumers. Does the minister remember when the AIB reported in 1977 that one insurance company—Allstate—had gouged consumers to the tune of $15 million all by itself, never mind the rest of the auto insurance companies?

The minister knows that, given a chance, those auto insurance companies will go after the consumers once again and gouge them. Boy, has the minister given them that chance by bringing in this bill; and, believe me, they're going to take him up on it. The minister is going to be responsible when consumers have to pay more for auto insurance that isn't even adequate.

The minister is obviously the only minister who has anything like the responsibility or an obligation in that government to protect consumers. There is not another minister on that front bench or in the second row who has any interest whatsoever in protecting consumers. We see that daily.

If there is any minister over there who is supposed to have the responsibility of protecting consumers, it's the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I suggest he pay some attention to that responsibility, the responsibility of protecting consumers, instead of to some desire to assist people in the auto insurance industry to engage in continuing the highway robbery they perform.

Time after time, whenever we come to an area of consumer protection against vested interests, the minister is over in the corporate corner playing water boy. That's wrong.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Me? In the corporate corner? The member has flipped his cork, he really has.

Mr. M. N. Davison: They're not my friends sitting in the gallery in the grey, three-piece suits.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You can't even say it with a straight face. You're breaking up yourself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I don't have any trouble saying that with a straight face. The minister is constantly an apologist for corporate greed, and that's got to stop. He is the minister in that government who should be speaking for the consumer interest. It's about time he started doing that. The consumers of Ontario deserve better than what they're getting from that government and from the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Hon. Mr. Drea: They like me.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Who does? The auto insurance industry? They love you. They think you're just a grand fellow. The consumers of Ontario, on the other hand, don't feel quite the same way, I'm sorry to say.

Hon. Mr. Drea: They like me and they have never heard of you.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If the minister will stop interrupting me, I will tell him—if he can control his emotions—

Hon. Mr. Drea: I don't have any.

Mr. M. N. Davison: —it's okay because, fortunately, after the next election there will be a minister sitting over there who is interested in consumer protection and a new government that's interested in consumer protection. It will be a government that's not interested in further padding the profits of private corporations. It will be a fine day. I suggest you call the election as quickly as it can be arranged.

Interjections.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Does the minister want to talk some more about inability to protect consumers? I'd be happy to engage further in that discussion. I've got a few more examples if he'd like to hear them.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. Another member and I were discussing his victory margin.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The consumers in Ontario are going to have neither adequate nor affordable automobile insurance with Bill 160 alone, nor with Bill 160 just added to the rest of the legislation in Ontario. It seems to me to be very clear, and it's very clear to my party and it's very clear to a large number of people in Ontario, that if consumers are going to have adequate and affordable auto insurance, we're going to have to move to public auto insurance in Ontario. If we don't do that, because of this bill we're going to have yet one more scandalous ripoff of the auto insurance consumer in Ontario. I wish the minister wasn't so dogmatic about it, and so rigid ideologically about moving to accept such a good plan and a good idea.

I'm sure the minister would be interested to know—I'm sure he does know—that even the jurisdiction of Tasmania has public auto insurance. Surely this province that is second to no jurisdiction in the world, as the Premier (Mr. Davis) is always telling us—Did you ask where Tasmania is?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'm telling the minister that all kinds of jurisdictions, countries and states in this world have provided adequate and affordable car insurance for their consumers through public auto insurance plans. Those jurisdictions, which are so less well off than Ontario, have these plans. Surely we shouldn't be lagging behind even Third World countries that are providing that benefit.

Even Third World countries are providing those benefits to their citizenry. My goodness, we have to worry about Ontario becoming a have-not province in Canada; we may soon have to wonder if, under the stewardship of the Conservative government, we're not becoming a have-not province throughout the world. Maybe the government should be writing to the United Nations for some sort of aid if things are that bad.

The idea of compulsory auto insurance provided through private companies is unacceptable to me. The only way we can properly provide and institute compulsory auto insurance is through a non-profit plan. The minister should think about this. It seems to me there is something that offends me morally about any company or individual or group of people engaging in business to make a profit out of somebody else's suffering. That is wrong. It is wrong by my standards and it is wrong by the standards of most people in this province. I think that is an element here that should be considered.

Mr. Laughren: It is doctrinaire and sectarian.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That's right. There is something wrong with an idea that has one seeking to make money from somebody else's injury. I think that should be considered, especially as we move to compulsory auto insurance in Ontario.

Without a public auto insurance plan, bringing in compulsory auto insurance is simply forcing consumers in Ontario to contribute further to the profits of private auto insurance companies. It is just wrong. In Saskatchewan, in Manitoba and in British Columbia in this country, there is functioning, good, adequate, appropriate auto insurance provided to those citizens. Those plans are public auto insurance plans and they are working.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: What happened to the one in BC?

Mr. Laughren: It's still there. They had a surplus last year.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I am being asked, Mr. Speaker, to explain this further, and I intend to do that in just a moment at the request of the fine member for Mississauga East, the minister and his buddies sitting to his right. I will do that in just a moment.

Mr. Rotenberg: We don't need your explanations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would remind the member for Wilson Heights he is not in his own seat.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I want to say these programs are so good and so popular with the people in those provinces that even when the NDP has been temporarily out of power in those provinces, the governments that have taken over in those short periods of time haven't had the nerve to take them away, no matter what their capitalist ideology or no matter what dogmatic theories they believe in in the market place.

Mr. McClellan: Even a man like Lyon has had to keep it on.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That's right. When the Liberals were in in Saskatchewan, they didn't remove public auto insurance. The Conservatives, who are in government now in Manitoba, didn't remove it, and one can't find any more right-wing Conservative than Sterling Lyon. In British Columbia with the Social Credit, which is a mixture of Tory, Liberals and used car dealers, that crazy coalition didn't have the nerve to do away with the plan, because the plan is a good one and people in those provinces liked those plans and liked the service they were getting from them.

When the select committee on company law issued its second report on automobile insurance it included a study by that incredible, left-leaning financial organization, Woods Gordon and Company. That corporate source may be a bit radical for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and other members across, but that company in its report said the institution of a public auto insurance plan would save consumers in the province $50 million. That figure is low, when one considers that was some time ago and the effect of further ripoffs that will result from this new bill. So it is millions and millions of dollars the consumers in the province could be saving if this government would just give up this dogmatic position and accept a reasonable approach to the provision of auto insurance in Ontario.

I would refer the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations to this totally objective study done by Woods Gordon and Company. He should look on page 445 of that report. He should read it every night before he goes to bed. Maybe it will get through on one of those occasions, from repetition. It sets out in detail the advantages to people in this province if we were to adopt one of those plans. It is in point form; it is very easy to read: "Benefits to motorists: reduced premiums." That is quite a benefit for you.

Let's stop just for a second before we talk about some of the other benefits we could have. The minister will also notice on page 406 of that report there is a chart, table five, which is a recent premium comparison by cities on liability of $200,000 inclusive, collision $100 deductible, comprehensive $50 deductible. It compares two cars—a 1976 Ford Grenada and a 1966 Chev stationwagon —in the cities of Toronto, Ottawa, Vancouver, Winnipeg and Regina at that time. The comparisons are rather interesting; I am sure the minister has these burned into his memory from reading them so frequently.

For other members of the assembly who don't read that table as frequently as the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, for an accident-free driver of a car that was driven for pleasure but not driven to work, the rates in those five cities for the 1976 Grenada were Toronto $321, Ottawa $305, Vancouver $270, Winnipeg $192, Regina $224.

But look what happens when one moves along from those differentials, which are not negligible, to the end of that column where they talk about an accident-free, under-the-age-of-25, male driver. Talk about private insurance companies being out of line; for that driver of the same car in the province of Ontario, Toronto $784, Ottawa $738. Even out in BC it was down to $650. In Winnipeg $234, Regina $260. How do they justify that? There is no justification for that.

Consider what you do to the poor person who has had an accident. We can feel sorry for that person in an accident if he happens to be male and under the age of 25, because when one moves along to the final chart on that page: Toronto $1,360, Ottawa $1,271, Vancouver $1,156, Winnipeg $234, Regina $273.

Look at the startling comparisons for the person who is driving a 1966 Chev stationwagon during that time. In Toronto that person who was an accident-free, under-the-age-of-25 male was paying $1,056; in Regina $173. It shows the premium ripoff and it shows the clear advantage there could be to consumers in Ontario in terms of the reduction of premiums.

There are a lot of other benefits that come with the public auto insurance plan as opposed to the kind of plan this minister and his government continually want to have existing in this province. Saving after saving to the consumers of this province are listed throughout this report. There are all kinds of arguments in favour of public auto insurance, which I have repeated at length in this assembly on other occasions. I know every member of this assembly has read those speeches so I won't go through them all again.

I know that members of the assembly have read the select report of the committee and I know that other members will be wanting to talk about it.

Mr. Rotenberg: Why don't you read the disadvantages?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Does the member want me to read the entire report? Maybe I could put it in some perspective for him. I am sure he has read it himself, though.

Mr. Rotenberg: Of course I have. Just don't give one side of the question.

Mr. M. N. Davison: When he has a chance to speak, he's free to read whatever he likes from the report; whatever he thinks is appropriate to put on the record of the assembly. I don't think there is anything in that select committee report he could read that would make up for the ripoff that is taking place now, that is going to continue to take place and that will be even worse in Ontario because of the government's failure to bring about a public auto insurance plan here.

In conclusion, I want to say again that while we'll support the introduction of compulsory auto insurance in Ontario, by itself it is an inappropriate step. The plan is not the best solution for consumers in Ontario. It is unfortunate that once again the government has let go a chance to bring in a good plan in Ontario. It is unfortunate that we have to open the consumers of Ontario to further gouging by auto insurance companies. There is a real need for something more than Bill 160 at this time.

The alternative system is a publicly operated automobile insurance plan. That is the system the Ontario New Democratic Party favours, and that is the system Ontario will get after the next election, when the people across the way are no longer the government.

Mr. Kerrio: Ho, ho, ho!

Mr. Bradley: The member for Niagara Falls, of course, is no doubt directing his laughter at the previous speaker's remarks and not at those I will be making.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to indicate considerable support for this particular bill. It is something for which I think many members of this Legislature have been striving for a number of years.

The select committee on company law has deliberated long on this subject, and I congratulate all members of that committee, and most particularly the chairman, on the exhaustive study they have undertaken and the determinations they have made, the main thrust being that there is a need for a compulsory form of automobile insurance in this particular province.

Most people in Ontario recognize that they have a moral obligation to assume financial responsibility for those who are placed in a disadvantageous position as a result of an automobile accident. Most people in this province have lived up to that obligation over the years, but some have not and hence the need for compulsory automobile insurance.

There are many who make the argument in 1979, and I am sure into the 1980s, that government intervenes far too often in the private sector and in the individual lives of the citizens of this province. However, when it is required, when there is a necessity for it, it is my view that government must step in and make compulsory something that should be done on a voluntary basis but is not because of some who wish to dodge what would be a perfect moral system.

We recognize there are two categories of people who have been hurt over the years by the lack of compulsory automobile insurance.

The first group is the victims of accidents; those who have been in an accident—usually an accident that is not their fault—and who find that the person who was at fault in the accident is not insured sufficiently, is not insured at all, or is insured only with the previous fund, which proved to be rather unsatisfactory. As a result, many of the victims of accidents have found themselves in almost a penniless situation, having to assume heavy medical bills, perhaps property damage bills, and being unable to assist themselves in terms of being able to carry out their employment obligations.

If we look at a third party that is affected by this, I suppose it is the public, who have had to pay out some forms of social assistance to some of these victims, which assistance comes ultimately from the taxpayers of this province.

However the other group I had in mind is those people who, for various reasons, perhaps lack of foresight, perhaps lack of a feeling of moral obligation to do so, have not obtained sufficient automobile insurance to cover all eventualities should an accident occur. Those people, even if they paid into the unsatisfied judgement fund, are still likely to be financially ruined because they have to pay back the sums of money paid out and many of them are obligated for a lifetime to those against whom they have committed, I suppose if it's not too strong a word to use, the crime of perpetrating an accident. This situation cries out for compulsory automobile insurance in this province, although some of us are a little reluctant many times to use that word.

If everyone in this province is compelled to be insured, and I recognize that enforcement isn't 100 per cent although the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) did address himself to enforcement, it might well inspire better driving habits. People will recognize they are going to be hit very hard if they have poor driving records or accident records and have accumulated many points under the Ontario system. They will recognize through compulsory automobile insurance that they must upgrade their driving ability to avoid being placed in those categories where the premiums are very high. This might well be a positive side benefit to this particular legislation.

We also look at the issue of the penalty for those who do not comply. It is necessary, of course, to have penalties which are stiff enough to persuade people to become involved in the insurance plan. The member for Kitchener mentioned that fines would be substantial, that perhaps the person's licence would be suspended and that licensed drivers in this province would be required to subject themselves—and once again I say this with a little bit of reluctance—to spot checks from time to time by members of the police force to determine whether or not they have automobile insurance. Many of us are reluctant to have citizens stopped without what might be called necessity and interrogated by the police force, so it is difficult for us to accept the fact that the police should be able to check to see if people have insurance. Certainly this is done in any event at the present time when there is a violation of a traffic law. It is necessary to have these fines and other penalties to ensure that people do comply.

Also, I noted the recommendation of the committee that there be a contingency fund to cover those cases which would fall outside the insurance industry, for instance the hit and run situation. People who are victims of a hit and run accident should have some financial recourse and I think the committee was very wise in recommending that.

Looking at the price of automobile insurance to the consumer, one often is very concerned about the rates which people have to pay and how those rates can be brought down. One suggestion made by the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison) is that a non-profit plan, similar to those in existence in a couple of other provinces and certain other jurisdictions, would provide the answer to the high cost of automobile insurance. It is one solution that this Legislature has to keep in mind; as an ultimate or last resort in the minds of some, as a first resort in the minds of others, particularly the members to our left.

However, I think it is incumbent upon the provincial government to monitor the situation in terms of the competition that exists within the industry itself. If that competition exists, and if the rates being charged can be determined to be fair, then the present system can be allowed to exist.

If, on the other hand, the provincial government is able to determine there is not the kind of competition that produces the lowest rates and the best coverage, then the Legislature has to at least have a look, with some seriousness, at some alternative form of insuring the motorists in Ontario.

We recognize as well that the bringing down of the rates involves not only the possibility of elimination of profits—that is one way that has been suggested—but also it deals with the safety conditions that exist on our roads; so it is incumbent upon the Minister of Transportation and Communications to ensure as much as possible that the road conditions are such they work against the possibility of accidents.

It is incumbent upon the Solicitor General of the province to ensure the police forces enforce the rules of the road to such an extent that we can eliminate many of the accidents that now happen. Of course it is incumbent upon the entire government and members of this Legislature to ensure there are rules and regulations governing driving and driving habits which can have a major effect on lowering the number of accidents, and therefore the reasons insurance companies can advance for charging the premiums they do.

As I say, I rise in favour of this particular bill. It may not meet all of the suggestions that were made by the select committee on company law—many of those suggestions were excellent—but it does go a long way towards ensuring those people who have in the past been victims of automobile accidents, and the financial consequences of those automobile accidents when there is no automobile insurance in place, will have that situation rectified.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on the debate on Bill 160, a bill that is bringing compulsory automobile insurance to Ontario at long last. It is the last jurisdiction in Canada, by the way, that hasn't arrived at this conclusion, which only proves this government is determined to be the last in Canada to do the right thing.

Like other members in the House, like the first speaker from the Liberal Party, I have served long and hard on the select committee on company law, that very prestigious committee. We spent the past three years in the trenches of the board rooms, and it has been tough slugging all along. I am pleased to see the minister recognize the hard and good work we did, and I am quite proud of our report. I must say that out of dozens and dozens of recommendations which the committee saw fit to make, the ministry and the government, and this minister, have been very reluctant to come forward with all of those things which we saw as necessary in order to put the insurance of automobiles, third party liability, on the right track.

I have great faith in this minister. He fought long and hard with those right-wingers in his cabinet, because he is a very progressive minister. I am sure if he had his druthers he would be in here today with a bill to bring public automobile insurance into Ontario. I can hear this minister fighting and clawing in that cabinet office for the rights of the consumer of this province. He knows in his heart of hearts that is where he will eventually be successful and he knows that is the only way he is going to be able to protect the consumers in Ontario.

Despite the weakness in the bill, I know, and I think the minister understands, this is but the first small step to a publicly operated automobile insurance system. The compulsory part of public auto is the basic step in bringing in a universal plan so the people of Ontario can reap the benefits, as indicated by the member from Hamilton, from a public automobile insurance plan.

Despite the minister's failure in the cabinet, the government of Ontario has certainly climbed down from its marble pedestal. How often have I heard this government, from the Premier on down, saying "We don't want to interfere with the lives of people. We believe in the free enterprise system where people are free to do or not to do as they see fit." At long last, and quite belatedly, they have abandoned that principle because it just doesn't work; and it hasn't worked, despite all of their efforts, over the past—who knows, 20, 25 years?

Their first attempt at compulsion was thinly veiled under a system known as the unsatisfied judgement fund. The minister himself admitted in his opening remarks this was not a fund to protect people who were injured by uninsured motorists. He referred to it as a deterrent fee. By this thinly veiled threat of penalizing them—making them pay a fine before the event—it was felt in some way or other that that would force them to go to the private market to buy insurance. Despite all the raises in the amount of the contribution over the years to the present $150, he admits the system has failed.

The system was properly titled; it was indeed the unsatisfied judgement fund because everybody was unsatisfied: the victim, the person who didn't have the coverage, and the government of Ontario. Everybody was unsatisfied so they changed the name. They came up with the motor vehicle accident claims fund. The change of name, of course, didn't accomplish anything the unsatisfied judgement title hadn't done. It was still an unsatisfactory system because people were just not deterred by paying this penalty prior to the event.

So here we are with compulsion. While I'm not a basic free-enterpriser, the word "compulsion" implies I am going to be forced to do something that I might not otherwise want to do; and in fact it is doing that to me, because what the government is saying to me tonight is that I must contribute to private profit. That is the bottom-line figure, and I'm opposed to being told that I must contribute to private profit.

Once a government imposes compulsion on its citizens, it has a responsibility to supply the service it compels them to take, in this case third party liability. The government still doesn't supply that product; instead it is forcing me to go and do business with yet another insurance company, which in this bill is called the Facility.

We already have approximately 181 insurers—

Hon. Mr. Drea: One hundred and eighty-three.

Mr. Germa: One hundred and eighty-three; we've gained two more companies. We have 183 companies functioning in the province selling automobile insurance. I think we have 33,000 insurance agents on the highway selling the product, and still the privateers are not meeting the market demand, the government still has to intervene. Yet this government still insists the private market can meet the needs for automobile insurance.

Those figures alone tell me that by adding one more insurance company known as the Facility—and while he says it is not an insurance company it is that in fact, it is an insurance company of last resort, when the 183 other companies don't want to have anything to do with this person then the Facility will have to do with the person as it pleases. I see a great weakness there, despite the fact the superintendent has the right in the bill to approve or disapprove rates of the Facility Association.

The committee, as I said, dealt long and diligently with the subject of compulsory insurance and they laid down certain requirements that would be necessary if, in fact, the government saw fit to bring in a compulsory plan. Could I just put them on the record and test to see if this bill meets the requirements as indicated by the select committee?

The committee said: "This could be accomplished"—compulsory auto insurance—"by: retaining the procedure whereby motorists certify on their licence plate renewal application form that they have valid insurance in force; eliminating the option for motorists to pay a $150 fee to the motor vehicle accident claims fund in lieu of carrying insurance coverage; eliminating the alternative available to certain self-insurers of providing their own commitments or of depositing securities or posting a bond with the registrar of motor vehicles that then permits them to depart from the requirements to obtain insurance coverage; relying on the law enforcement agencies to aid in the apprehension of uninsured motorists when investigating traffic violations and accidents or while conducting spot checks; increasing substantially the minimum penalties for owners of uninsured vehicles using the roads; and retaining the motor vehicle accident claims fund to be financed by a portion of the driver's licence fees at least for the time being."

The enforcement of compulsory automobile insurance is, I think, one of the major problems the government is going to face. As I said earlier, we are not the first—in fact we are the last—jurisdiction in Canada to introduce compulsory automobile insurance. Many states in the United States have had it for many years, and they have met with limited success, I must say, in some particular states.

In the state of Florida, for instance, page seven of the committee's second report tells me, 17.8 per cent of the drivers do not have insurance, despite the fact that it is compulsory. California has a 16.2 per cent delinquency rate, and Massachusetts has a 15.3 per cent rate. Bringing in a bill which says it is now compulsory does not necessarily mean that everyone is going to have third party liability.

The cost to the province of Ontario, which in fact is a subsidy to the insurance industry, is not estimable. The minister has brought in no figures to estimate the cost to the taxpayers of Ontario of enforcing compulsory automobile insurance.

The government has been delinquent, in part causing the problem, in not ensuring that drivers who should have been taken off the road were taken off the road. They relied on the insurance industry. While I'm not a defender of the insurance industry, time after time it cited that the government was weak in not ensuring that certain drivers are not capable of driving and should be removed from the road. The bill does not deal with that problem.

Perhaps I would just put on the record one driver's record that the committee pulled from its sources. It is on page 317 of the first report of the committee and perhaps I could just read part of the citation. It starts on the ninth day of the fourth month of 1973. He was convicted of speeding at 40 miles per hour in a 30 miles per hour zone; on the 12th day of the sixth month, speeding, 40 miles per hour in a 30 miles per hour zone; on the 12th day of the 12 month of 1973, speeding, 40 miles per hour in a 30 miles per hour zone; on the second day of the fourth month of 1974, speeding, 54 miles per hour in a 35 miles per hour zone; on the second day of the fifth month of 1974, speeding, 40 miles per hour in a 30 miles per hour zone; on the seventh day of the 12th month of 1974, speeding, 50 miles per hour in a 30 miles per hour zone.

It goes on and on and on. Despite this horrendous driving record, the government of Ontario has no facility for removing that kind of a driver from the road. This contributes to the high accident rate and the high payouts required in the insurance industry.

The Facility Association, which is cited in the legislation, is put in place to form a pool for those drivers whose risks are so high no independent insurer wants to accept the risk. If there were one insurance company in the province of Ontario, the risk pool would be large enough to accommodate all of the drivers. It would be on a preselection basis; there would be no option for the insurance company to avoid taking that risk, it would be a case of taking all comers. But the 181 companies functioning have a tendency, because their motivations are to increase the bottom-line figure, the profit figure, to cream the market. There's just no way to cure them of this habit. It's a weakness in the system. When they decide this person is not beneficial to their profit picture, he is rejected and is going to be put into the Facility Association.

This type of a hand-off system has been in place for many years under different names. There's a slight variation in how they function. They've called them the insurance exchange in some jurisdictions, the assigned risk plan in other jurisdictions and the re-insurance facility in some other places. But the basic principle surrounding this is that it is the insurer of last resort.

The driver whose record is such that the private insurer, the individual insurance company, doesn't want him, will have to go into the Facility Association.

It is to be hoped when the superintendent reviews these rates, he will ensure the rates are commensurate with the risk which is being accepted. We are putting a great onus on the superintendent to protect from exorbitant rates those people who are, through one method or another, put into the Facility Association.

If I could get back to the motor vehicle accident claims fund, the government has also been delinquent in that area in allowing a deficit position to build up to the extent of $40 million or $50 million. The minister tells us next spring he is going to get the collection agencies active and is going to bring in that money.

The minister also made comment on the concept of insurance agents becoming a self-licensing, self-governing, self-policing body. The committee dealt with that at great length. I'm not aware we came to the conclusion this organization had reached a state of maturity that it could be trusted with its own affairs.

Hon. Mr. Drea: But I did.

Mr. Germa: I'm glad we've got the minister on the record.

Let the minister then take responsibility for what's going to happen when he lifts the responsibility from the superintendent's office. The superintendent now is responsible for policing and examining these people. I have great faith that is the only thing that kept it reasonably clean. Despite his intervention, we know that all is not well in the insurance agencies. I, as a person, do not believe they have arrived at a state of maturity to allow them to become a self-licensing, self-governing, self-policing body.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: The member doesn't know what he is talking about.

Mr. Germa: Yes, I do. I know a lot of insurance agents. There are some in this House.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, there are.

Mr. Germa: That is probably why I made that statement, because I know them personally.

I question the minister's wisdom when he proudly says this is one of the progressive moves which is forthcoming from his ministry. But, despite the various criticisms that I have made regarding compulsion, I know that it is the first step to a system that I think should be brought into Ontario, a system similar to Tasmania, I understand; Tasmania, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Drea: How many times has the member driven in Tasmania?

Mr. Germa: If the minister doesn't like Tasmania he should go and take a look at Manitoba. The figures were put on the record, as well as those from Saskatchewan and British Columbia. The evidence is in that this would be a better prospect for the people of Ontario than what we have now. I think it is the first step and, at the earliest possible moment, I know the minister will be bringing in another bill, Mr. Speaker, which will bring public automobile insurance to Ontario.

Mr. McKessock: I rise to support this bill. I feel this legislation is long overdue. I've had experience with some of my constituents on both sides of the present system where you pay a fee, if you wish, instead of obtaining car insurance. I feel it's a mess no matter which side you're on, whether you're the victim who has been hit by a driver participating in the motor vehicle accident claims fund or you're trying to get money from the fund, because there have been great delays in getting your benefits if you've been hit by such a driver and also there are limits put on the fund.

Also, if you are participating in the fund it is a hardship if you have to pay back the money to the fund. I feel participating in the motor vehicle accident claim fund is like playing the futures market where 70 per cent of the participants lose. They lose by spending the rest of their life, perhaps, paying back into the fund or maybe by losing their licence forever.

I remember discussing this issue of compulsory insurance with the director of the motor vehicle accident claims fund a year or two ago when I met him concerning a problem I had in my riding. I felt at that time that compulsory insurance was at least part of the answer. I'm pleased to see it's coming forward now.

One concern that has been brought to my attention about the bill is it doesn't indicate that a person might be allowed 24 hours to produce his certificate of insurance if for some reason or other it hasn't been left in the vehicle or in his billfold—similar to the way the police allow you 24 hours to present your licence, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's the same discretion.

Mr. McKessock: It's at the policeman's discretion?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's at the policeman's discretion.

Mr. McKessock: Can I take it from that remark that it will be a similar situation—

Hon. Mr. Drea: It will be identical.

Mr. McKessock: I understand the minister to say it is identical to the driver's licence, and one probably will have 24 hours to produce it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Or more.

Mr. McKessock: At the discretion of the police?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. McKessock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to see that this bill is proceeding.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Sudbury East—I'm sorry; the member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Laughren: You have no idea of the explanations I would have had to go through back in the riding, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: That would have made it tougher still, would it?

Mr. Laughren: As a matter of fact, the most difficult of all.

Mr. Kerrio: It'll be the same speech.

Mr. Laughren: It may not be the same speech. As a member of this party who represents the strength in centre, I am very unpredictable.

Mr. Speaker, I think the government and the minister understand very clearly just where we stand on this question of compulsory auto insurance. The minister is shaking his head; I don't believe it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I do not understand. I wish the member would tell me.

Mr. Laughren: Does the minister not understand that we are supporting compulsory automobile insurance?

Hon. Mr. Walker: That's not what the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) was saying.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, it is. We are supporting compulsory auto insurance in Ontario. But what the minister should understand and what my colleague from Hamilton was trying to tell him was that when he reduces the component of it being compulsory in Ontario, he therefore takes away the right of citizens in Ontario to make it an option as to whether or not they will do it. For example, we don't make the purchasing of bread compulsory in Ontario, because persons could bake their own bread; that is the way it should be. I don't want to be too elementary for the minister, but I think I do have to explain it to him very clearly.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The only thing compulsory in all of this is for a person to accept the responsibility. It may be strange to the member but it is not strange to me.

Mr. Laughren: Responsibility is not at all strange to me. As a matter of fact, if the minister wants to engage in a debate about responsibility, we could start to talk to him about his responsibility for consumer protection in Ontario, which has been sadly lacking since he became the minister; that is strange, given the background of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Some day, Mr. Speaker, I think I am going to walk in here and introduce a private member's bill that will change the name of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to the Ministry of Commercial Relations, because there is no consumer protection in Ontario. My colleague from Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) rises in his place day after day and gives examples of where the minister is not protecting consumers in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Even you don't believe that nonsense.

Mr. Laughren: I certainly do believe that—and, Mr. Speaker, I know you would want us to address the bill before us. The point for me, when it comes to compulsory auto insurance, is that we are removing from the public an option—

Hon. Mr. Drea: The right to be irresponsible.

Mr. Laughren: I know; I am supporting it. If the minister would just listen for a moment—

Hon. Mr. Drea: I can't fathom you or follow you.

Mr. Laughren: If you would listen, Frank, you can't—

Hon. Mr. Drea: "The minister."

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the word "Frank."

What I was attempting to explain to the minister was that we are no longer making the provision of auto insurance optional. Whether he wants to admit it or not, until this point a driver in Ontario did not have to buy auto insurance; now we are saying he must buy auto insurance.

The minister surely understands we are supporting this bill. But what we are saying is from the point this bill takes effect it is going to be compulsory for drivers in Ontario to buy policies from the private sector insurance companies in this province. That's what it comes down to. That's what makes us so nervous. We don't believe, as the minister does, that is the way to dispense auto insurance in Ontario or in any other jurisdiction. That is what it comes down to. Surely the minister understands that.

I should make it clear that is the reason I rise in my place—not to repeat, I hope, what others have said but to make the point if we are going to make auto insurance compulsory in Ontario, we have an attending obligation to bring it into the public sector. It is no longer an option, it is compulsory.

I would not for one moment recommend that anything be brought into the public sector unless it can be justified on social and economic grounds. It must fill that requirement. If I thought the private auto insurance industry could better deliver auto insurance to the people in Ontario than the public sector, I wouldn't be suggesting the public sector do it.

The fact is public auto insurance is more efficient and delivers a better product than does private sector insurance. People who read the background material, who study the systems in the three western provinces and here, come to that conclusion. Please, I am not talking about some kind of Pavlovian, doctrinaire, sectarian response; I am talking about thinking it through to determine which is the best system for the people of Ontario.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations had his mind made up before he ever read a report.

Mr. Rotenberg: So did you.

Mr. Laughren: No, it is not the same with me.

I know people think public auto insurance isn't the answer. I understand that. All I am saying to people like the minister, who used to be Frank, is set aside those prejudices and look at the pros and cons of public auto insurance versus private auto insurance. That's all I am saying. That's all I am asking the minister to do.

Mr. Rotenberg: Why don't you set aside your prejudices?

Mr. Laughren: I did.

Mr. Rotenberg: No, you didn't.

Mr. Laughren: I want to tell the member, I have done so, as did the people from Woods Gordon, who were very objective about it. I have done it just as they did.

Mr. Rotenberg: No, you didn't.

Mr. Laughren: Well, I did, and if the member would read the conclusions of the Woods Gordon report, he would come to the same conclusion I did.

The only difference between the people over there and me is that I didn't go into it with a prejudice.

Mr. Rotenberg: Yes, you did.

Mr. Laughren: No, I viewed the question of public versus private auto insurance in this province very objectively.

I will tell the minister one of the reasons is the lack of consumer protection in the province of Ontario. It is not the most compelling reason for me, but it is one of them.

The minister likes to pretend he is very popular out there. He is a populist minister. "Populist" is the right word, not popular.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You take that back. That's something the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) thought up.

Mr. Laughren: Oh, then I will take it back. The minister thinks he is providing consumer protection and the consumers of Ontario love him. Well, that's simply not true. They are beginning to realize, because of my colleague from Hamilton and my colleague from Welland-Thorold, that the minister isn't providing the consumer protection he should be for the people of Ontario.

I want to move on, Mr. Speaker. I stated earlier I believed we should only provide something to the public sector if it can be justified on social and economic grounds. I believe this can be.

There are all sorts of analogies one could draw. In the United States for example, medicare is a very topical issue today. We know the cost of medical services in the United States is a higher percentage of gross national product than it is in Canada. We know that. We have a public health system in Canada and there is not one in the United States. That is the greatest free-enterprise system there is, at least in their terms.

The minister can't stand in his place and claim the private sector delivers things automatically more efficiently than the public sector. I believe for social reasons, the public sector should provide auto insurance. That's true if we are talking about education in Ontario, which the public sector delivers; it is true of the highway system and I think it is true for auto insurance as well.

We could spend a moment on some of the reasons I think auto insurance fits into the category of social reasons for it being delivered by the public service.

First for all, there's an opportunity for the people who provide the service in the case I recommend—the public sector, the government—to utilize the surplus pool of funds that would be available for purposes other than simply investment for something called an insurance company. In other words, it would be for the benefit of the people who contributed the funds. The minister would admit surely, that with the private sector delivering auto insurance, if the insurance company wants to invest in something that has no relationship whatsoever to the public sector or the people who buy the policies, they are free to do so.

Does the minister know the insurance industry in Ontario can invest in South African bonds? Did he know that? They can invest in South African bonds. What advantage is that to the driving public in Ontario? Perhaps the minister could tell me how investments by the private insurance industry in South African bonds could help the driving public in Ontario. That is one compelling social reason.

A public auto insurance plan can develop proper rehabilitation programs for bad drivers, conduct safety programs for drivers, driver education, and also of course provide a return to policy holders if there is a surplus at the end of any given year.

Second, if the public sector delivers the insurance there could be more equity among drivers, if it's considered desirable. I mean whether or not young drivers should pay more or less or whether the high-risk driver's premiums should be shared by others is not a decision the private sector should be allowed to make.

Most important of all, I would ask the minister when he responds to tell me how he justifies the policyholders' funds being used to invest in other jurisdictions, because that's the way it is under the Insurance Act now.

Third, if it is compulsory auto insurance, the argument is even stronger than if it's just auto insurance delivered by the private sector. It's a case of the public being required, being forced by law, to contribute to the surplus of the auto insurance companies.

Fourth, the fact we have a public auto insurance program makes it much easier, much more logical to effect consumer protection in the province. The way it is now, the minister must confront the industry when there is a consumer protection problem. If it was in the public sector it would be part of the program of the public auto insurance. We don't have that in Ontario and I think we should have.

I heard some members talking about some of the problems of public auto insurance. I look to what happened in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and British Columbia and I saw the shambles into which the industry had allowed the situation to develop in those provinces.

I looked at Manitoba. Prior to Autopac in Manitoba at least three per cent of vehicle owners were not insured for third-party liability coverage; 55 per cent did not have the protection of the accident benefits coverage; 26 per cent did not insure their vehicles against collision damage; six per cent did not have fire and theft insurance; and 71 per cent of vehicle owners did not carry medical payments coverage. That was a fine record in Manitoba by the private auto insurance industry, wasn't it?

It was only when public auto insurance was introduced in Manitoba that those problems were solved. I know the minister will say, "We don't have those problems in Ontario," but I want to tell him we don't have consumer protection in Ontario at the present time. It's simply not there. It is going to get worse and the minister is going to have complaints on his desk when this law goes into effect such as he has never had since he became minister, because now it is going to be compulsory.

In British Columbia, there were problems there before they introduced ICBC. Efforts to cope with a large residual market were divided between the operations of two different high-risk plans, the Facility and the BC Insurance Exchange. Creaming in the market was practised by insurers who enjoyed the privileges of being selective in the risks they chose. This was considered to be an undesirable practice, resulting in alleged gaps of availability. Increasing claim costs and processing delays were said to be creating dissatisfaction with the system as operated by the private industry. Mid-term and arbitrary cancellation by insurers was said to be widespread. These were the problems in British Columbia.

No matter which province one goes to where there has been private insurance that has been replaced by public insurance, those problems have been solved. Perhaps one of the cost compelling arguments, which I hope the minister will respond to, which my colleague from Hamilton Centre raised as well, is that when public insurance was introduced by NDP governments or CCF governments, when another party took power—the Liberals in Saskatchewan and the Social Credit in BC—they didn't change the system. There are quotes from those governments that indicate they could not improve upon the public auto insurance system. I think the minister should explain why he thinks public auto insurance is still in effect in those free-enterprise provinces.

The other thing I would like to touch on briefly is the whole question of efficiency. We had a study done, which was referred to already, by Woods Gordon and Company. There were a couple of very interesting comments in it. On the question of moving to a public auto insurance program in Ontario they said, "The private general insurance in Ontario employs an estimated 16,300 company employees in 236 companies." They also said, "The general insurance industry uses the services of approximately 1,350 adjusters and an estimated 12,000 agents, brokers and their employees."

The report goes on to say, which is really significant, "Government ownership of automobile insurance would affect at least half of the close to 30,000 general insurance industry employees in this province. It is evident that the provincial corporation would absorb a segment of private industry employment, but a significant restructuring of job opportunities is likely to result."

If I could read between the lines briefly, what that really is saying is if we brought in public auto insurance in Ontario we could do it with fewer employees than the private sector is using at the present time. So much for the efficiency of the private sector. That's not an efficient way to deliver auto insurance to the driving public in Ontario. It's not the way to protect the driving public in the province.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations is not doing his job as long as he allows the private sector to deliver auto insurance in Ontario.

On motion by Mr. Laughren, the debate was adjourned.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

---

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

COMPULSORY AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 160, An Act to provide for Compulsory Automobile Insurance.

Mr. Speaker: Does any member wish to speak to the bill? The member for York North.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Speaker, I don't see a quorum.

First Clerk Assistant: There is not a quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker called for the quorum bells. On resumption:

Mr. Speaker: Do we have anybody who wishes to speak to the bill on second reading?

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have two or three comments I want to make on second reading of Bill 160, An Act to provide for Compulsory Automobile Insurance.

To the very best of my ability, I will try not to repeat what has been said before about the origins of the bill or the reasons why it is presently in the assembly.

I would, however, in my own small way pay a tribute to some of the people who worked with us in the committee on company law dealing with this area, particularly the minister's advisers, the superintendent of insurance and his staff, throughout a long period of time. We have had so long an association with the three reports on insurance, the present report on insurance and a previous report dealing with the law of trust companies, that the superintendent of insurance and his staff approach us with a certain care and wariness about what we're about. We've got to know each other and we've also got to know how we go about the process of coming up with the kind of legislation which in due course will be acceptable.

I would also like to comment on the presence of the consultants who were here this afternoon, Mr. Paul Boddy and Miss Ludmilla Jagielicz who have worked with us for some considerable time entirely in the insurance field. The work they have done on all three reports and the work they're presently doing in the field of life insurance have been invaluable to the work of the committee. It is reflected in these two volumes dealing with automobile insurance.

I couldn't let the opportunity go by without referring to the late George Ness, who was counsel to the committee for the two reports dealing with automobile insurance. At the end of his time as counsel to the committee, he probably was aware he wasn't going to live very long and he was not with us when we were working on the third report. Ultimately, he died at a much younger age than he should have. I did want on this occasion to pay a tribute to the work which he did for the committee over such a long period of time, both prior to the work on hospital insurance when he was associate counsel to the committee and then when he was counsel to the committee. I want to pay tribute to his work on these two reports which ultimately have led to this particular piece of legislation.

Let me turn for a moment to the legislation. I am not going to spend very much time on the report. Anybody who wants to read that model of English prose, known as the dissent of the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa), the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) and myself, will easily recognize that while it doesn't have any particular Churchillian ring to it, it does compare somewhat with, shall we say, the Gettysburg address in the model of concise expression of a dissent which is irrefutable, and which says all that has to be said in the clearest possible way about what will take place in the province in a few short years, even under a Tory government, that is the introduction of a government automobile insurance plan.

As a matter of fact, I can see this minister at the last gasp of a dying Tory government nailing to the masthead that the Tories are going to bring in a government-sponsored plan in order to stave off ultimate defeat before a New Democratic Party victory at the polls.

If I may now turn to the bill and two or three things, the bill has a certain semantic intrigue to the title of it. Having looked at the reports recommending compulsory automobile insurance and seeing the bill which the minister introduced into the House to deal with compulsory automobile insurance, one would think there would be some resemblance in the bill to what is in the report. There are certain minor similarities between the recommendations in the report and what is in the bill, but that's about all.

In introducing the bill, the minister referred to it in an almost punitive way, as if we were going to make people take out insurance. That was not the purpose of the committee. The purpose of the committee, given a private automobile insurance system in the province, was to provide the assurance that anyone who wished to drive a car would have available to him automobile insurance at a price which, subject to the risk which he was bringing to bear on the pool of people who were driving automobiles, would be at least bearable, so that he wouldn't be priced out of the market and so that he would not be in a situation such that he couldn't drive because he couldn't afford the insurance policy. For a long time that has been one of the hallmarks and one of the bad things about the automobile insurance system as it existed in the province.

We now have a Facility Association which is so close to being a government-operated plan that it might well be very close to a total operation of such a plan that may very well develop from this Facility Association.

The crux of that association, if I may so refer to it, and the principle of the bill, is that an agent shall provide to an owner of a motor vehicle who is a resident of Ontario an application for automobile insurance and submit to an insurer a completed application for automobile insurance when requested to do so by the owner of a motor vehicle. Having submitted it, of course, it is then up to the private marketplace, the individual company, to pick up that particular application and to issue the policy. But the safeguard for the resident of the province is that the association shall ensure, through its members, that a contract of automobile insurance is provided with respect to every application for automobile insurance submitted under the plan to an insurer under the section I have just quoted.

Very simply, if an individual insurer in the province will not pick up that application the association is obligated to find an insurer within the association who will pick up that application and issue the policy; that's the protection which is finally available in the province.

I'm warning the minister, and I'm warning him now, that our experience showed the number of policies which find their way into an insurance corporation facility such as this, or into the previous pool, reflected very clearly the capacity of the insurance industry to absorb the business. High risk insured persons were looking for insurance through the Facility and paid the penalty of the higher premium; but there came a point where the capacity of the industry was shrinking and a great many relatively normal risks were finding their way into this so-called pooling arrangement for the issuance of policies to cover those persons.

I'm saying to the minister that unless he monitors the operation of that Facility Association very carefully, and I think the elements to provide for that monitoring are in the bill, we may very well find the capacity of the insurance market may contract over a period of time and a number of people will find their way into that association looking for policies who would otherwise be serviced in the private market. The minister has a very real responsibility for monitoring the operations of the Facility Association.

We have plainly provided an obligation on the insurers forming that association to file the rates and to get approval from the superintendent before those rates go into effect. I think I can say that the integrity and the knowledge of the superintendent's office within the ministry of the government, coupled with what they have learned from their association with members of the select committee, would indicate it would be quite likely they will exercise stringent authority to make certain those rates are fair, equitable and at the lowest possible level.

I believe I saw in this bill a provision with respect to a report. I do not see the usual provisions that that report must be tabled in the assembly. It may very well be advisable when the bill is in committee to make such a provision so that it will be seen that this assembly has some sense of responsibility to make certain this new compulsory automobile insurance scheme will be monitored by the assembly, and if necessary will be available for scrutiny by some committee of the assembly should that committee so desire.

The other major element in our report not dealt with in this bill is the question of termination of insurance policies. We tried to devise a model scheme of compliance which, coupled with significant changes in the vehicle licence system from a vehicle licence registration system to a licence-owner or a plate-owner system, would have ensured that an insurance policy, once issued, would be irrevocable during the period the owner had possession of the plates for which he was covered and which he could use on his own automobile.

The ministry has chosen not to implement, at this time, that compliance model that was the recommendation of the committee. At some point in the future, if this interministerial committee which we heard about for so long ever makes a report—and I haven't heard that a report has been made—it may be able to recommend the institution in the province of an owner-to-plate system of registration which will allow us to have the kind of model for the compulsory insurance scheme that is envisaged by the report of the select committee.

Just before I leave that particular section, I do want to say the procedure for the termination of a policy is not nearly as clear as we would have had it. The irrevocable nature of an insurance policy tied to a plate, would, in many ways, have eliminated a wide range of possible persons driving without insurance coverage. That, of course, was the goal of the system, but the minister has chosen simply to restrict the bases on which termination of a policy can take place by enumerating four particular reasons for termination, which are then part of the conditions attaching to the automobile insurance policy.

I assume at some point those four clauses will find their way into a condition in the policy so that a person reading the termination condition in his policy will be able to see that the insurer has only the rights of termination set out in the bill. I take it that is not a problem because of the regulatory power of the ministry. I'm certain when the minister stands to speak he will assure us those clauses will be incorporated in the bill.

I want to turn to my last comment on the bill, which is a concern I've expressed for some time on a number of occasions. It is the reference to the right of the constable, the police officer, to require to see the evidence of the insurance. It is still immensely confusing in the bill.

Let me refer very briefly to the comment that was made in the report. "The committee noted that the authority for police officers to stop vehicles and demand proof of insurance is contained in section 3 of the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act and in section 55 of the Highway Traffic Act. A review of the provisions of these acts is included in appendix F." This is the second volume of the report on automobile insurance.

"The committee has concluded that there is value in setting out clearly in the Insurance Act the specific authority for police to stop a vehicle for the purpose of checking for compulsory insurance coverage and recommends that the minister makes such changes to the act."

Let me just step back for a moment and relate it to the Highway Traffic Act. As this is a matter which in the opinion of some, including myself, at least touches upon the question of civil liberties in the province, I think it is time both the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and this ministry clarified exactly what the authority of the police officer is with respect to documentation which I, as a driver and operator of a motor vehicle, may be required by law to have in my possession and which he can stop me and require the production of in order to identify me or to assure himself that I am insured when I am driving that motor vehicle. The provisions are scattered and are far from clear. The Highway Traffic Act has never been amended to delete the term "constable" and to replace it with "police officer." We therefore have in section 14 of the Highway Traffic Act this provision, "Every operator of a motor vehicle shall carry his licence with him at all times while he is in charge of a motor vehicle and shall produce it when demanded by a constable. . ."

There is no definition of "constable" in the act. There is, however, a wide definition of "peace officer" which is extremely broad and does include, among the enumerated heads, the term "constable."

We have the first provision that if a person has an operator's licence a police officer, on the wording of section 14 of the Highway Traffic Act, can require a person to produce the licence when demanded. Then in section 17 we have the identical provision related to a chauffeur's licence, as distinct from an operator's licence: "Every chauffeur shall carry his chauffeur's licence with him at all times while he is in charge of a motor vehicle and shall produce it when demanded by a constable. . ."

Then in section 55 of the Highway Traffic Act we have this, again rather unusual, provision: "Every constable . . . may require the driver of any motor vehicle to submit such motor vehicle together with its equipment and any trailer attached thereto, to such examination and tests as the constable or officer may consider expedient."

There is no particular provision in any of those particular sections to which I have referred, either in section 14, in section 17 or in section 55, which says the police officer can stop a person.

As was stated in the report, we then have this provision in the motor vehicle accident claims fund section of the appropriate section: "The owner of a motor vehicle who operates or permits the operation of the motor vehicle on a highway shall, upon the request of a constable . . ., produce evidence that (a) the vehicle is an insured motor vehicle or (b) the uninsured motor vehicle fee has been paid in respect of the motor vehicle." That will be somewhat changed, of course.

I did want to draw the attention of the House to these four provisions related to something called the production of documents to a police officer. The problem, however, is whether or not police officers can simply stop you for that purpose, or do they have to have some reason to believe that you are engaged in infringing the law before they can stop you and ask you to produce your chauffeur's licence or your operator's licence or to produce the evidence of insurance or to examine your vehicle?

That is not clear and hasn't been clear for a very long time. I don't know the answer to that. There may be lawyers who practise in the traffic courts—although I doubt if many can afford to go into those courts these days—who may be able to answer that. But I want to draw to the attention of the government that not just this minister, but also the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow)—the two of them—are operating a statute which appears to allow a police officer at random to stop a vehicle without reasonable cause that any offence is being committed.

In other words, if my colleague the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, who is an impeccable driver, is simply driving from here to his home in Scarborough-Ellesmere, he can be flagged down by a police officer who can presumably say, "You are driving, Mr. Warner, in your usual impeccable style within the speed limit on the right side of the road. Your vehicle is in perfect functioning condition and you are driving in your usual temperate, sober condition, but we are out tonight and have nothing else to do, so we think we will flag you down and ask you to produce your operator's licence or your chauffeur's licence and evidence of your insurance."

My colleague, being a person who stands clearly on his rights on occasion, might very well say to that officer, "But, officer, you have no right to ask me unless you can tell me that you have reasonable grounds to believe I was breaking some law while I was driving." As you can see, it would not be long before my colleague, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere might very well be up on a charge of obstructing the police in the performance of their duties.

That is the kind of conundrum which the law presently allows to exist under the Highway Traffic Act and the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act. We are going to perpetuate that conundrum in the bill before us, because this bill specifically states in section 3 that an operator of a motor vehicle on a highway shall have in the motor vehicle at all times an insurance card for the motor vehicle or an insurance card evidencing that the operator is insured under a contract of automobile insurance, and the operator shall surrender the insurance card for reasonable inspection upon the demand of a police officer.

I wish I could see the lawyers equivocating as to what they really wanted to say when they put the word "reasonable" before "inspection" and not before "demand." I would have assumed if they were trying to indicate there was some reason behind the request that the word "reasonable" would have been before the word "demand" and it would have read, "and the operator shall surrender the insurance card for inspection upon the reasonable demand of a police officer." This bill perpetuates the confusion and compounds the problem I have endeavoured to draw to the attention of the assembly.

I think it is a problem which verges on infringing on civil liberties. It does so in my judgement, and raises serious problems. Now that we are adding a fourth provision with respect to this question of the production of documents to police officers on demand, it is time that this assembly made a clear statement of what it intends.

Do we intend to give police officers the right to stop drivers at random and ask to see their insurance cards and are citizens obliged to comply; or are we saying—I am glad the Minister of Transportation and Communications is here—that no, an officer can only make the demand if he has reasonable grounds to believe an offence has been committed under the Highway Traffic Act or some other kind of offence, and that ancillary to that anticipation he can demand the particular documentation?

The bill compounds the problem further. The Highway Traffic Act doesn't define police officer, but defines peace officer to include a police officer as well as a constable. A police officer in this bill means the chief of police or other police officer or constable. I want to make certain that anybody looking into the minutia of what I have been talking about is aware that I purposely left out in all of my quotations the reference to a person appointed under section 156 of the Highway Traffic Act for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of that act. I wanted to make it perfectly clear that section 156 provides a specific authorization of a particular kind of person who becomes an officer. I wouldn't want anybody to think that the phrase "for the purpose of carrying out . . . the provisions of this act . . ." in some way or other is a qualification of the word constable as it appears in its bald form in the statute.

There are very serious problems of interpretation which we are compounding in this bill. They have existed for so long in the Highway Traffic Act, which is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, and they have existed for a long period of time now with respect to evidence of insurance under the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, and they are now going to appear in the same confused state as an additional provision in the Act to provide for Compulsory Automobile Insurance.

In appendix F the report said, and it poses the difficulty of the problem, "If it is important that a police officer"—and I emphasize the if—"be provided with the legal authority to carry out both these steps . . ." The two steps are, "to order a driver to stop, solely because he wishes to interrogate him as to whether the appropriate insurance coverage is in force; and to interrogate the driver after he has stopped and to require him to answer."

I go on: "If it is important that a police officer be provided with the legal authority to carry out both of these steps, it is also important that his authority be expressed in terms that are clear and unambiguous." I think what I've been trying to say is that the provisions of the Highway Traffic Act, the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act and the provisions of this act are not clear and they are not unambiguous.

"It has been suggested"—and I quote again—"that when a Legislature intends to grant the police the power to limit the citizen's freedom of action, that intention should be expressed in clear and unambiguous terms and should not be left to be inferred from the related terms of a statute. If this condition is applied to the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act"—and I would read into that the Highway Traffic Act and this act—"it becomes apparent that section 3 does not expressly grant police officers the authority to order a driver to stop for the sole purpose of conducting an insurance interrogation; it only requires that the requisite evidence be produced after the request is made. It is arguable that the intention of the Legislature had been to authorize the officer to order the driver to stop, but it may also be arguable that the intention of the Legislature was to authorize the request to be made only where the driver is already stopped and available." In other words, when he is already stopped for some other reason unrelated to the sole purpose of insurance interrogation or whatever the appropriate analogy would be under the Highway Traffic Act.

I've spoken at some length on that particular section because I am still very worried about it, and I am very worried that we are now going to add a fourth provision in the statutes of this province which will be equally unclear and equally ambiguous. I think it is important that we try to clarify it during the committee hearings on this bill.

With those—which to me are somewhat serious—reservations, we in this party have little alternative but to endorse this step forward in the stages which this province apparently wants made before it can reach the rational, logical and reasonable goal of a government-operated automobile insurance scheme.

Mr. Samis: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to address a few brief remarks to this bill, not having had the benefit of the expertise of the select committee, however. I think it's a bill that affects virtually everybody in Ontario and I welcome its introduction. I congratulate the minister for his initiative. It certainly is something that is long overdue in this province, attested to by the fact that Ontario is the last province in the country to introduce this legislation.

In some ways I find it a bit ironic. I recall vividly his predecessor twice removed—the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman)—and some of the questions about compulsory insurance that were raised when he was the minister. I think the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) raised some, I know and the member from Hamilton had raised some; plus some speeches the former minister had made on the subject and statements he had made to the press saying he was adamantly opposed to it, compulsory insurance wasn't the answer; it wouldn't work in Ontario, it hadn't worked in other provinces.

I am really glad to see the government make this change, a very substantial change, in the whole field of auto insurance in general. I credit this minister for having made the change. It is something, I think most citizens in Ontario would agree, was obviously needed because the present system, frankly, wasn't working. It didn't provide real universality of coverage. I would be the first to admit that no system achieves complete and total universality of coverage in the true sense of the word; but obviously the present involuntary system has failed to achieve what I think most citizens and most of the car-driving public in Ontario would consider adequate coverage.

Just as we in this Legislature have had to legislate compulsory seatbelts to solve a problem, and compulsory helmets for motorcycle drivers, compulsory safety standards, emission standards and automobile design standards, compulsory safety inspection on cars, so we have moved to the stage, belatedly, that we have to protect the motoring public and in the name of the public good introduce compulsory insurance in Ontario.

I don't intend to get deeply involved in the philosophic dispute about the merits of public versus private insurance. I think some of my colleagues have covered the case for public insurance more than adequately. I recognize there are two philosophic positions on this and I recognize that each has some inherent validity; but I think regardless of our difference of opinion on the merits of each, the record clearly indicates that when our party did introduce public auto insurance in those cases where we were defeated at the polls, the party that campaigned against us and used it as one of the main issues in their election platform did not eliminate, did not abolish, did not do away with, did not substantially change the principle of public auto insurance. I refer to the Thatcher government in Saskatchewan, which was certainly as right wing as you could get; the Social Credit government of British Columbia, the son of "wackey," which is as right wing as I suppose you can get west of the Rockies.

Mr. Martel: Genghis Khan.

Mr. Samis: You can say that if you want.

I refer to the most rabid right wing of all the Tory Premiers, Sterling Lyon in Manitoba, who campaigned very vigorously against this aspect of the NDP record. He's been in power I think two and a half years and has yet to abolish it. He has yet to undermine the program, much as he said he would when he was campaigning. I notice right next door to us on the east, the province of Quebec has introduced a modified version of public auto insurance. It was a compromise. The lawyers won their compromise. I think it was introduced by a Liberal government initially and then actually legislated by the present government. I am sure that regardless of the results of the next election in Quebec, whether it's the Liberal government or P.Q. government, the public aspect of their plan will continue.

There are some people in our party who believe in the public approach purely on the inherent philosophical merits, but I would like to suggest there are other people in our party and in society who see it in terms of dollars and cents. They see it in terms of what is actually best for the consumer rather than seeing it as inherently better in the public sector or the private sector. I don't intend to regurgitate all those arguments or the philosophical basis for that.

One of the interesting results in the Quebec experience, when they introduced compulsory auto insurance, was that it had a very positive effect on the number of—I guess you would call them wrecks and hazardous vehicles on the road. I don't have the actual figures, but I recall reading there was more than a minimal decline in the number of car registrations in Quebec when they introduced compulsory auto insurance. I believe it's tied in; you can't get your plates unless you have adequate proof of insurance at the time, and you must buy the public portion of the auto insurance from their outlets, I think in the main the credit unions in Quebec. There were certain people who had old jalopies, purely fringe cars or borderline unsafe, and sometimes dangerous cars, probably worth anywhere from $50 to $200, who just decided, "If the government is serious, if we are going to have this, if this is the law, if I am really going to get hit if I go out and drive this jalopy; damn it all, I might as well forget about it, clunk it and sell it to the junk yard." These people would either get off the road completely or have to go out and buy something that is actually safe.

We do have people like that in Ontario, who haven't made use of the present program and who will probably try to defy or find a way around the compulsory program. Hopefully these people would be intimidated by the fact that this law is going to be in force and that this is going to be the way from now on in Ontario. If they have a car worth only 100 bucks, I would hope they would decide, rather than take a chance and rather than risk the penalties to get rid of it and either stop driving altogether or buy a worthwhile car.

Speaking very briefly to the matter of penalties, I am strongly in favour of stiff fines and very meaningful penalties for any individual violators of the proposed law. I think we have to stop fooling around and let the fringe element know we mean business on this one, because we are talking in terms of safety, human lives and the high cost of insurance.

I notice in the bill there are minimum fines for individual violators who don't take out the insurance program we are offering, but when it comes to the insurers or the corporations there is no minimum fine, the maximum is just outlined in the bill. I realize there are certain legalistic arguments for that approach, but it does strike me as a little bit inconsistent that the individual has a minimum set for his violations but the insurers don't have a minimum set for their violations.

Finally, I would like to wind up on something that is purely a personal opinion, probably an idiosyncrasy or eccentricity or hang-up—call it what you want. Since we are bringing in this major reform in auto insurance and since we are bringing in the element of compulsion, I think this is the ideal time to ask ourselves at what age should people be driving legally in Ontario.

I really have a hard time trying to fathom in an industrial-urban society why we tell people, "You can't have a glass of beer until you're 19. The age of majority is 18. You can't do a whole host of other things unless you reach the age of 18, but you can go out and get a car and drive it at the age of 16." I can understand that in a rural society and I can understand that in small-town Ontario back 10, 20, 30, 40 or 50 years ago; but in today's society, when one considers the types of cars we do have and when one considers the standards we impose on young people in other domains, it strikes me as somewhat inconsistent and illogical to say people can do all these other things only when they reach the age of 18 but this privilege, and that is what it is, is available to them at the age of 16.

I realize this is somewhat of a tangent. I do want to end by saying I welcome the introduction of the bill and I congratulate the minister.

Mr. Roy: I would like to say a few things about this insurance plan, if I might just reach over and look at the great volume of the select committee on company law. I am interested in speaking especially about the recommendations in the 1978 volume.

I would like to say, before I get talking about the bill, that walking into the building this evening by the north door, the Wellesley Street entrance, I saw a sign there saying "Medicare Bash." I am wondering what that is about. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you, as one of the gatekeepers of this institution, would want to know what is going on in the building.

I haven't tried to follow it, but I look to my friends to the left and ask them what the celebration is about. Has there been a change in medicare?

Mr. Acting Speaker: That is hardly speaking to the principle of this bill.

Mr. Roy: I just want to put that on the record. What is happening with the bash? Are we all invited to it?

Mr. Acting Speaker: I would ask the honourable member to return to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. Roy: Another thing I would do is pay tribute to my colleagues who have striven so diligently and unselfishly over all these years involved in the select committee on company law. Some of my colleagues have been on that committee for quite some time.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: I hear some of the nasties coming out over there and I just want to say, speaking to all my colleagues on all sides—the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) has been on this committee for some time, the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) has been on it for some time, the members on the other side, my former colleague for Wilson Heights and now, of course, my colleague the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt)—that they were intent on doing a complete and thorough appraisal of the insurance industry. There was no jurisdiction that was too far and there was no jurisdiction whose weather was too inclement. In other words, there was no sacrifice that was too much for these people to accomplish the task at hand. In other words—

Mr. Acting Speaker: There is no section in this bill dealing with travel abroad.

Mr. Roy: In other words, Mr. Speaker, these people were intent on having a full and complete report and no impediment.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is he embarrassing you?

Mr. Roy: The Premier is here. My God, the Premier's here and I don't intend to embarrass him.

I was watching that football game Saturday and I thought I was watching the Toronto Argonauts. Ottawa was playing so badly I was thinking of the Premier. If he had bet he would have finally made a dollar.

Mr. Speaker: I want to pay a tribute to my colleagues on the committee because in my opinion, as one who's had some work in the insurance field—always for the plaintiff, of course, I want to put that on the record—I want to say it's always seemed to me to be somewhat of a strange situation that we allowed people to sort of opt out of compulsory insurance.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Now you're speaking to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Roy: Yes, I'm back to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Acting Speaker: You're not back, this is the first time you've touched it.

Mr. Roy: I want to say that I've always felt, as a general principle, if one is allowed the privilege of driving a motor vehicle there is a corresponding principle which follows—to be responsible, not only for oneself but for third parties who may suffer as a result of his or her actions. So over all these years I've always been in favour of compulsory third-party liability insurance for every motorist in this province.

In so doing I want again to pay tribute to my colleagues who worked to finally get this minister—and I pay tribute to the present minister, even though I want to say to the Premier I don't know what he's been calling the minister lately but things are changing over there. The shirt collars aren't as crooked as they were. They're getting straight now. And occasionally if I throw "Frank," he says, "No way; it's 'Mr. Minister' now." So I tell the members we're minding our manners on this side now when we're speaking to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I wish you'd mind the rules of the House and not so much the manners and get on to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Roy: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I fully support the bill. I think it's high time we brought forth this compulsory third-party liability insurance. I really think that finally in Ontario the message will go out.

Having read the bill it's obvious that a lot of people have had a lot of input, including my colleagues on this committee.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Give them credit—give them credit again.

Mr. Roy: I will, because I want to say that when in the dead of winter you get up in the early morning to pick up that Globe and Mail, and you look at that picture, I tell you it's very unfair. The same reporter who chased them down at that time is not around now to be looking at that hefty report. She's not writing anything about that now.

Mr. Van Horne: She's still hiding behind the palm tree.

Mr. Roy: Yes. She's not around this House looking at this bill, looking at what has been accomplished. No way. There is not a reporter around; nobody around; nobody gets credit. I tell you I'm going to give these boys some credit. I think they fully deserve it.

Mr. Worton: This was conceived 16 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Albert, you want a mint.

Mr. Roy: Don't slow me down, I'm just starting to get warmed up. You want to get on with this. You don't want me to get involved in that principle of public insurance versus private insurance and all this stuff.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I want you to give them credit.

Mr. Roy: No, I will not. All I will say, though, is that from talking to my colleagues to the left I'm convinced there is some merit in the public plan. Obviously, there must be some merit or they would not function as well in the other provinces and in the other jurisdictions, and our colleagues who have been elected in other jurisdictions, whether it's Sterling Lyon in Manitoba or Ross Thatcher in Saskatchewan, and others, would not have changed the system.

But that's not the argument for what is best for Ontario, because my colleagues to my left must appreciate there has been progress in the private plan as well, and by and large, when I compare what is existing now in Ontario under the private plan, for instance, the way small claims are processed—

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is true of everything in Ontario.

Mr. Roy: Yes—involving damages only, involving claims involving the loss of salary, and the smaller claims, the way they are processed, the service is relatively good.

The other thing is, as a lawyer, and one who believes in the rule of law, I have difficulties.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And as one who still practises in the courts.

Mr. Roy: Don't you dare mention conflict of interest.

Mr. Breithaupt: That's not our problem at all.

Mr. Roy: Yes. I would like to put on the record again that I act for plaintiffs.

I want to say I believe there should be some relationship between fault, that fault is still a factor, that it derives responsibility to people who are driving a motor vehicle. I believe as well in the principle called tort, that if one suffers damages, the courts as the final arbiter are still the best forum for determining the loss suffered by the victim, by the individual.

I get concerned. I get concerned, for instance, with the Quebec plan where you have a ceiling on how much one is going to get a month or how much one is going to get for the loss of a limb or the loss of earning capacity and so on. I tell you when you are at the bottom end of the scale, I suppose for the majority of the claims that's fine, but there are nevertheless substantial numbers of claims where people will not be compensated for their loss.

That's where the private plan, that's where the rule of law, that's where the courts and that's where the legal profession come in. To take an approach and say it's a public plan over the private plan is too simplistic.

I would say, and I say with all candour to my colleagues to the left, I have run into insurance agents, insurance companies and lawyers to whom I have said, "Acting the way you are would convince me easily enough that a public plan is best for Ontario." There are people within the system who act as though each victim is a crook, and every person who is collecting, who is attempting to bring forward a claim is going to rip off the insurance company. I don't like that attitude.

We've made amendments to the Judicature Act. I can think of the amendment involving interest, the system involving a large claim from insurance companies who would hold back until the courtroom door and then pay up because they were making money on the basis that they weren't paying any interest or that the interest awarded by the court did not reflect prime rates. All of that has changed.

We're refining the private plan. Things are improving. There's no reason, because we've accepted the principle of compulsory insurance, that automatically you step into the other area and say, "Look at the 183 or so companies and the 36,000 agents: it's a farce; there's no competition," and so on.

I'm not prepared to accept that, Mr. Speaker. I say that not because I hold a brief for the insurance companies or the insurance agents. In fact, I look at them over there. I take it that's what all these fine people are, because the minister keeps looking that way. I notice that more than on other evenings there are more important Tories walking into the House and smiling in that direction. I don't know if that has anything to do with the people who are here.

I do want to say to the dear people, the ladies and gentlemen under the gallery—

Mr. Acting Speaker: Please direct your remarks to the chair.

Mr. Roy: I have run now in three elections—1971, 1975, 1977—and I know there are two free-enterprise parties in Ontario. They should know that, keep that in mind. I want to tell them that in many areas they do know it; but in some, they don't. I'm not going to single out any area, such as Ottawa-Carleton. I'm not going to do that. I wouldn't do that. I do want to say to these fine people—what's that gallery called? Is that the Speaker's gallery?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Under the Speaker's gallery.

Mr. Roy: I do want to say to keep in mind that there is a group of individuals—in fact, the alternative here in Ontario, right here on this side, led by the member for Hamilton West (Mr. S. Smith)—who believe in free enterprise. They'd best keep it in mind.

Hon. Mr. Davis: From time to time he believes in free enterprise.

Mr. Roy: No, no; all the time, all the time; and the Premier knows it. If the Premier were to compare his own record with our leader's record in 1971, the Premier would look like the Socialist. He would. He has reversed himself a number of times.

Remember the Speculation Tax Act? The Premier backed off that. Then he tells the teachers, "You can strike. We have a bill where you can strike." They've got their bill there; it's worked for five years. Now they've got a committee studying it.

Interjections.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Will the member for London North (Mr. Van Horne) either be quiet or return to his own seat?

Mr. Roy: He's being verbally abused by the Premier. He is. I want to say to the Premier it's going to be interesting shortly, once things don't go that well and Joe is still in Ottawa—the Premier will be there for a few more months—who is the Premier going to blame now that Pierre Trudeau is not around any more? That's going to be interesting. Who is he going to blame?

Hon. Mr. Davis: You.

Mr. Roy: Me, yes. That's what I thought. It's going to be the fault of the opposition.

I don't want to take up too much time. I notice my dear friend the minister obviously wants to wind this up in front of the assembled gallery. I want to say we are in support of the legislation and I will conclude by asking the minister a question just to prove that I read the bill, something the Premier hasn't done and that's for the record.

What safeguard does he have in his legislation to prevent an individual purchasing insurance, getting his plates and then cancelling for a variety of reasons? Is there some mechanism where, when he cancels the insurance, he must advise the ministry or something along that line? I see that as one of the evils within the system. Even though one has to take premiums based on a yearly basis, an individual can cancel that insurance and continue driving. When people are intent on driving without insurance, they're going to find all sorts of ways to do it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's impractical to do it until he can find a new owner.

Mr. Roy: I guess he'll have to. I'd like an explanation why there isn't some way for the insurance companies to report to the ministry when this cancellation takes place.

You've been indulgent and very patient with me, Mr. Speaker. I'll not hold you up any longer. I'll let the minister go at it.

Mr. Warner: Before making some comments on the bill itself, I would like to pass along my personal thanks both to the staff that served the superintendent of insurance and to the consultants, Mr. Paul Boddy and Miss Ludmilla Jagiellicz. The consultants, in my opinion, provided much-needed expertise and did so in a very objective and complete way.

I wasn't on the committee for very long, just a few months. One of the reasons I enjoyed the work on the committee was the fact that we had experts. The consultants provided us with the material we needed to try to deal with the matters in an intelligent fashion. There is no question in my mind that the report done by that committee is extremely thorough. The document is well worth studying by members of the assembly, and well worth the government's taking a serious look at. I would also mention that the chairmanship of that committee was extremely good. I felt the chairman did a first-rate job in attempting to expedite the matters of our committee while allowing each member to participate fully.

I will say, going into the committee knowing it had sat for many years and was likely to sit for many more dealing with various aspects of insurance, but noting that this particular portion was going to deal with automobile insurance, I had anticipated a rather bitter battle over government car insurance. It ran through my mind that that was what I would encounter on the committee.

I was pleasantly surprised. The members of the Liberal Party and of the Conservative Party who were on that committee had taken the trip out west, they had looked at all the material provided, and what they were left with wasn't a factual argument any longer but an ideological stance. I find that much easier.

If someone else wishes to have a difference of opinion based on philosophy, that is fine. When they have gone over the facts and they realize the facts are there and they are indisputable, then I feel good that the case has been argued and it has been won.

Finally, through the thoroughness of the report, we have put the argument to rest about how evil a government car insurance plan is. That argument is finished, because the evidence is in and it is very clear and unmistakable.

The Conservative and Liberal members of the committee obviously had difficulty in coming to an overwhelming support of a government-run scheme—I understand that—there were many many positive comments about a government-run car insurance scheme, one of them being that “the level of apparent efficiency of the government insurance corporation is higher than that of the Ontario insurance companies. The committee has taken great care in reviewing the basis for this comparison. It has concluded that, while the financial information provided to it may not be exact in every detail, it is substantially correct and the comparisons which have been made are fair in substance. The committee cannot quantify this higher efficiency.

“Having reached the conclusion, the committee considers that the apparent relative inefficiency of the industry in Ontario is of serious concern. The committee believes that improvements can be achieved in the operating cost structure of this industry, certain of which may find their origin in the operating methods of the government insurance system.”

In other words, if the insurance people in this province would study the government-run scheme, they might learn something and make a more efficient operation in the province. That wasn't the view of only our members; that was the view of the committee in total, and I certainly appreciated

it. What it said to me was that, while the members on an ideological basis could not come to support a government-run scheme, they did recognize from an objective standpoint the merits of a government-run plan.

Of course, as has been pointed out by other speakers, when New Democrat governments were moved out of office for a short while in Manitoba and British Columbia, the successors in both cases not only maintained the programs, but also spoke highly of them and praised them. In particular, the government minister in British Columbia who was responsible for the plan was quoted as having said it was a marvellous plan and he couldn't envisage returning to the private scheme; that quote was given again to the committee members.

I was interested in the comments by my colleague from Ottawa East when he touched on the fundamental rights of lawyers—I think that is the correct term he was talking about, because he likes to represent the people who are grieved in these situations. It seems to me that is, boiled down, the inalienable right of lawyers to sue. That is what it is all about.

The committee, in addressing itself to no-fault insurance, came to a very interesting and positive conclusion; again, this is an aspect which this government should follow through on.

"In formulating its conclusions, the committee began by addressing the basic issue: whether fault should continue to be the fundamental factor to be considered in determining whether compensation should be paid for motor accident losses. The committee is particularly impressed with the capacity of no-fault systems to compensate all victims, regardless of fault, rather than paying only the relatively innocent. It is also impressed with the capacity of no-fault systems to reduce adjusting and settlement costs by minimizing fault investigation, so that a significantly larger portion of the premium dollar will be returned to the public in claims payments.

"The committee accordingly recommends that 'fault' should no longer be the fundamental factor to be considered in determining whether compensation should be paid for motor accident losses. Further, the committee also recognizes that the recommendation that it has formulated served only as an outline for a new no-fault automobile insurance program for Ontario.

"It also recognizes there has not as yet been an opportunity to make any projections as to the cost of the proposed new system, although it is apparent that the savings to be gained from increased efficiency and the reduction in noneconomic compensation claims will in all likelihood offset any overall increases in other claims costs. Exact dollar projections must inevitably be left to the industry and the superintendent and a fine-tuning of the terms can be conducted on the basis of that information."

So it is clear from the comments that the committee feels the no-fault plan is worthy of very serious consideration and would like to see it implemented. In fairness there were some members of the committee who dissented from that opinion, but the majority view was in favour of the no-fault system.

Reflecting on a portion of the principle of the bill which deals with the superintendent being able to look at the rates for the Facility, it seems to me that principle could be followed through. Again the report, dealing on a section of the government presence in rate regulation, mentions: "A broader form of rate regulation is embodied in sections 365 to 367 of the Insurance Act of Ontario. These sections empower the superintendent to order after due notice in a hearing an adjustment of auto insurance rates whenever they are found to be excessive, inadequate or unfairly discriminatory or otherwise unreasonable. However, the sections have never been proclaimed in force."

My memory is a little faulty on occasion. I can't recall whether it was 1932 or 1933 when that section was passed, but it was one of those years.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: 1934.

Mr. Warner: Sorry, I was wrong, 1934—I was out by a year.

So that was first put in in 1934, but never proclaimed. Now for the first time we come back and we are giving a small measure. We are going to put it with respect to the Facility—that makes sense. I would like to see that extended as a principle for all insurance in Ontario.

It is not just myself, but the committee's opinion is that "more emphasis is required in Ontario on rate regulation in order to achieve a better balance between financial stability and the other objectives of rate regulation." There is obviously a need for it.

Most members will conclude if they go through that report very carefully and look at the principles involved in each of the parts that are dealt with—whether it is no-fault insurance, rate regulation or any other section—there is a compelling message in that.

Some day in Ontario—as my colleague from Riverdale says so accurately, whether it is the Conservatives or us—there will be a government-run scheme. Why does this government not take the credit for it now? The people out there will stand to save a lot of money. We had estimates in the committee ranging anywhere up to $45 million a year in savings for this province. They stand to gain and would thank this government. There is a challenge for them.

I put it to them as a challenge because the day we take office, it will be one of our first items of business—a way to protect the drivers of this province from exorbitant rates and to have a measure of equity and fairness about no-fault insurance. That is the kind of protection that is needed in this province. We have waited many years.

The challenge is there to the minister. He has met other challenges before, many of them quite successfully. Here is one more. It is one for which the hundreds of thousands of drivers in this province would thank him because they could save money. They would know they weren't being ripped off and they would have the kind of overall coverage and protection that is needed.

In conclusion, of course I am pleased to see the introduction of this bill. It is long overdue. I must also remind the House that this bill is only one small part of that select committee's report; there are many more important aspects of that report which must be dealt with, and the sooner the better. Let's not wait for the change of government, although I'd be quite happy to make the changes needed.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words of compliments to the select committee that has brought forth this recommendation.

I want to say it has been 16 years since the previous report was brought forth. The father of the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison) sat on a select committee with me at that time and it's true, that committee recommended compulsory insurance. If I recall correctly, while his father supported compulsory insurance, he did support a public owned insurance program. Of course, in the period of time that we studied that, we crossed Canada and visited the states of California, Massachusetts, New York and, I believe, North Carolina. Now it has been 16 years. If I can get my medical expression correct for the Minister of Education, I believe it is the longest gestation period that has ever taken place to bring forth a bill and have it passed in this House; 16 years to get something done. Anyway, it is a move in the right direction.

I didn't hear the reply that was made to my friend the member for Ottawa East in regard to his concerns about paying for the insurance and then cancelling it. That was the very problem they were running into in Massachusetts and New York when they had it at that time. By the time they caught up with them, very often a great deal of damage had taken place and a great deal of misery had come about. Maybe the minister can clarify that when he is giving a further explanation of his bill.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly to welcome this bill. I feel it is a great step forward in that this debate is one of the major debates in the history of Ontario. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have only been in this country for just over 10 years. When I came to Ontario I was horrified to find that motorists' insurance was on a voluntary basis, and that there were many drivers on our roads who were not covered by insurance and an unfortunately large number who were not covered by the uninsured motorists' fund either.

I note that some of the members opposite have been looking at their watches, I suppose trying to convey the concept that they would like to see this matter dealt with very speedily. I understand that and that's why I will keep my comments short, but I really feel that in this Legislature it's very important that debates of this kind, which will go down in history as marking an important day in Ontario, be given full and adequate consideration.

I have been a driver for over 15 years and I have always been one who has carried insurance, but during that period of time I found many flaws with that insurance. Since my time as a local alderman and as a member of this Legislature, I have had even more people come to me and tell me about the problems they have faced with automobile insurance.

One of those problems has been the matter of discrimination or supposed discrimination. I commend the minister for attacking that problem head-on. I want to suggest to him there are many problems as yet unsolved and that insurance companies at the present time are dealing with people in classes. They are treating everybody within the class as if their driving skills and their driving abilities were equal, be they young people or senior citizens or individuals who have encountered an accident situation in one way or another which was perhaps not their fault but perhaps as a result of another driver. Those people are being put in a pigeon-hole and treated by the insurance companies as a class and, in general, charged a higher rate as a result.

I want to suggest to the minister that is a kind of discrimination and is unfair. We have to find a way whereby automobile insurance is matched to the individual and to the individual's ability to drive. I want to suggest that the public automobile policies suggested by some of my colleagues are perhaps a way of addressing that issue because the private companies that are at present responsible for selling insurance have shown their inability to come to grips with that issue. In fact, when the minister made some of his statements earlier this year, urging the companies to do away with the kind of discrimination they practise, they responded to him in a very negative sense. They did not appreciate his intervention. I did. I felt it was a tiny step forward. I would urge the minister to find stronger and stronger ways of dealing with this kind of problem.

Another difficulty we have with insurance companies at the moment is the matter of standardization of benefits. Standardization of coverage has in some way been dealt with by the standard automobile policy that most drivers have and there is room for individual preference within that automobile policy, but the standardization of benefits has not been achieved. Despite some of the advertising put out by the larger automobile insurance companies, we are left with a situation where the driver is buying the unknown. When one goes and buys automobile insurance, he really doesn't know how he will be treated by that insurance company if the day comes when he needs to make a claim. I want to suggest that much could be solved by standardizing the coverage.

My colleague from Ottawa East spoke earlier about the involvement of lawyers in this whole process. It seems to me sometimes, and I know it seems to many of the people who are involved in automobile insurance claims, that some of the procedures are put in place deliberately to provide fodder for the lawyers who are involved in the process. I want to suggest much could be saved if we had standardization of coverage and a single system for resolving automobile insurance claims in this province. I would urge upon the minister that he give consideration to that kind of approach.

A problem we also have with our present standard automobile insurance policy that I want to draw to the minister's attention is that an individual in different circumstances can be treated in different ways. One that concerns me greatly is a clause in our present Ontario standard automobile insurance policy that excludes from the benefits of that policy people who are covered by workmen's compensation at the time the accident occurs. That bothers me very greatly because it means that if a person in the course of his job is involved in an automobile accident on our highways, he cannot claim in the same way as an individual who is driving for pleasure or who is otherwise not covered by workmen's compensation. That's just an example of some of the problems we have with automobile insurance.

I believe too we have to come to grips with the matter of limit of liability. Our colleagues to the south in the United States are facing a situation where claims under insurance policies, particularly automobile insurance, but I will generalize as well, are increasing year by year and claim by claim. It seems at the moment the sky is the limit. I want to suggest that is not to the benefit of the people of Ontario. The minister has it within his powers to look at this situation and to come to grips with the matter of a limit to insurance liability so that all of us in Ontario can gain benefit therefrom, rather than having to pay for the astronomical claims being generated by the legal system and the court system.

Mr. Roy: It is not happening here.

Mr. Isaacs: My colleague says it is not happening here and I agree, but it will come unless the government takes action to stop it coming. I suggest we should act before the situation becomes desperate.

I want also to ask the minister about one provision in the bill that relates to some other comments that have been made previously. In section 15(b) the Lieutenant Governor is empowered to make regulations "prescribing identifying markers for all automobiles licensed in Ontario." I would hope that has something to do with some of the matters that have been discussed in association with plate-to-owner rather than plate-to-automobile. In the explanatory notes it suggests it is self-explanatory, and I really don't find it self-explanatory the way it stands.

I hope the minister will give us some assurances about the meaning of that clause and the way it is going to be used in the future because it has the potential to be a very significant clause, but it has no meaning without a better explanation than is provided in the bill.

I want also to suggest to the minister that one major problem remains unsolved, and it may be unsolvable, although I would hope that there are ways of dealing with some of the difficulties. That problem is the people who are suffering now and who have suffered since this bill was introduced as a result of motorists who have been uninsured and who have not paid into the fund that was set up for such motorists.

It has been a very sad situation that those people have gone essentially without any kind of benefit, even when they have been involved in an accident that was 100 per cent the fault of the other driver or of some other individual. It would seem to me that should have been dealt with a long time ago and if there is a way of dealing with it now, then I hope the minister will address it.

Just very briefly, I want to comment on the matter of a single automobile insurance system for Ontario. I know the members opposite consider themselves committed to a free-enterprise system, but now that we are moving into compulsory automobile insurance I want to suggest that automobile insurance for many people in Ontario is taking on the form of a utility that serves the people. Ontario Hydro is a very major utility that is a crown corporation and that serves the people reasonably well. We can have our disagreements with certain aspects of its operation but in general Ontario Hydro is set up to serve and does serve the people.

That sort of model could be used for automobile insurance, but even if the government doesn't wish to go that far, I want to suggest there could be much more regulation of the private automobile insurance industry than there is at the present time. It could be done in ways similar to the ways in which the telephone industry and the cable television industry and other utilities are regulated. We should move towards regulation of essential services that are in the form of utilities and any indication from the minister that greater regulation will be put on the system will be welcome on this side of the House.

Those are my brief comments. As I indicated before, I welcome the introduction of this bill. It is so long overdue that it is sad, but change has to come and I welcome this change, as I will welcome a change at the time of the next election that will lead us to put in place some of the things members from this party have spoken about.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I am going to be brief. I would like to divide this into two sections. The member for Ottawa East and the member for Wentworth asked some particular questions.

To the member for Wentworth: on the particular section he queried it is true that in the case of a change to a plate-to-owner system that section would be necessary. It's just a provision that gives us the authority to cope with whatever changes come when the plate-to-owner system is introduced.

Mind you, the plate-to-owner system isn't just a simple conversion of the record. It also will have something to do with the style and type of plate and when one gets it, type of operation. That's why that is vague and in there; it does give us the authority so at the particular time when plate-to-owner comes the compulsory insurance regulatory provisions will be in step with it.

To the member for Ottawa East: There's no question that some people may have 30-day or short-term insurance coverage purely for the purposes of obtaining licence plates—in the past they did it to avoid paying the penalty fee; now, presumably, they will do it just to get the plates because one will not be able to get a plate without signing one's name on the back of the form where there is also the insurance company name and insurance number. This is a difficult problem, but there is no question that when plate-to-owner and computerization come it will be a relatively simple matter to control, because licence plates simply will not be issued if the insurance number does not punch out on the computer, much the same as the cash register doesn't open now when one's credit card is overdrawn or in default. Until then, I say to the honourable member, it's not the expense or the time-consuming nature of it that's the problem, it's the confusion that would be caused by a manual system.

For instance, a person might want to change agents or companies for a very valid reason. His insurance is perfectly paid up—and insurance does not always come up for renewal at the time of the purchase of plates; it generally reflects the time of the year when one bought one's first automobile and that carries through the rest of one's life.

For good and sufficient and honest reason—he just doesn't like the service the company gave him—the person might very well transfer over to some other company. The company he left might get its report in first, whereas the company he'd renewed with would do so a little bit later. There would be the difficulty of somebody having his licence suspended by mail when, indeed, his insurance was paid up. On a manual system, I just don't think it's practical.

I agree with the honourable member that this is going to be our main problem in the future. It will not be, as it is now, the person totally avoiding the system and not paying in. The big problem will be the person who at the time of sticker renewal is covered but then lets it lapse. This is my concern.

We say a quarter of a million people who haven't yet broken their maiden in the insurance field are going to be brought into this. Nobody knows. Nobody knows, because on any given day after March 1 one gets into that diminishing return. Have they renewed or are they going to wait until next year?

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the members of both the official opposition and the New Democratic Party for the very constructive remarks overall they have made about this bill.

Just for a few moments, I want to reinforce something about public insurance. I was read from the select committee report today some of the advantages of public insurance. I think it would also be fair to point out to the member for Hamilton Centre, the critic of this ministry, there was a much more lengthy section on disadvantages and the disadvantages went all the way from the impact on the employment structure to government corporations not paying corporation tax; ratings being too simplistic or inequitable; hidden subsidies; a government corporation—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Corporate Protection.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Please, please, please. The member read the advantages, I'm reading the disadvantages from the same report. To continue: "a government corporation may become a political vehicle and deviate from sound insurance practice; operational startup problems and cost; vulnerability of labour problems and pressure groups . . ." Does the member know today in Quebec it is only a stroke of Rene Levesque's pen that has the regime operating. They were all ready to go on strike. Who would have paid all those benefits? Every one of those is a bodily injury claim, every one. It's only that signature.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Don't preach to me about operating in the public interest.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Obviously, obviously, obviously, I have struck some blood. I may stay on that for a while. To continue: "no freedom of choice or comparison for the consumer on basic coverage; no right when they go on strike even to get one's car fixed." Do the members remember the ICBC? BC was the junkyard of the world. People were told, "Drive your car because they're on strike."

Mr. M. N. Davison: So now you're against trade unions, is that it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, but if we are going to bring in a monopoly situation, we are going to say to the employees of that company, "You have every right to go on strike and to devil with the public," at an appropriate time. That is exactly what happened in British Columbia, and it lasted for three months. That's why the member didn't mention it from 1975 until tonight. It's taken four years to get over what happened out there.

Mr. Roy: Don't mention disadvantages, that's not fair.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I just want to read one other section out of that report:

"It is apparent that while a government corporation may be a credible solution to some problems, it will create a number of new ones and may be incompatible with the free-enterprise philosophy accepted and practised by the business community and a large segment of the public in this province. Government ownership of automobile insurance in Ontario would pose a significant implementation task."

Enough of the disadvantages. I want to come to this question of public insurance from another direction. I point out that the introduction of public insurance in this province, and some members of the New Democratic Party have allowed this little thought to escape from time to time, would have absolutely devastating consequences on the business and financial enterprises of this province.

First of all, more than 44 per cent of all the insurance underwritten in the Dominion of Canada is underwritten in Ontario. More than 50 per cent of the automobile coverage for the Dominion of Canada concerns Ontario drivers. If we demolish 183 competing companies and turn them into one, who is going to pick up the office space? Who is going to pick up all the other things that went with those companies, because most of them aren't going to stay here. There won't be enough volume for them to stay.

Nor, indeed, would there be the capital pool or the investment pool that comes from the very nature of that industry.

They collect premiums at the start of a year on a one-over-365 basis. They may not have to pay out that money for 11 months and in the meantime they invest it. It would all disappear. Instead, the member would have the government collect that pool. I suggest the reason Saskatchewan, BC and Manitoba haven't changed is because the cash flow that comes in on one day or in one month is so nice they can't afford to change. Those three provinces have slipped the cash flow from the private, competitive market so their government can operate on a deficit basis without it being so apparent and can generate funds without having to go to the market.

What a model the ICBC provides for some members. Have they seen what the ICBC has done lately? The flat-rating? Do the members believe in flat-rating right across the province, regardless of region? In fact they better not, because I can give them some rather devastating figures on the results of flat-rating, as they're doing in British Columbia—no matter where you live and no matter how much you drive you pay the same.

Mr. Charlton: That's also what the Tories in BC are doing.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I see. Now the ICBC isn't quite as holy as when the NDP was in power and ran it into a deficit. They couldn't settle a strike so nobody got his car fixed.

There are roughly 12,000 agents and their support staff in this province, exclusive of the companies that underwrite them. To go into public insurance would be the most devastating attack upon established small business in this province that has ever been contemplated by anybody. It would wipe out those agents, the income and the tax they pay in their local community. It would wipe out their support staff. As a matter of fact, the worst evil of all, it would take away the ability of them to sell their agency. Since they have been self-employed, that is the money they have been counting on for their retirement. And it would be done with a stroke of the pen.

What would happen as an alternative? There would be 10,000 new civil servants in this province in one day. By the way, in the three provinces that have gone this route, the pay that goes to the civil servant—ICBC, Autopac Saskatchewan government insurance—is between 25 per cent and 35 per cent higher per person than when they worked in the private sector. In short, these members would be providing monopoly coverage called "take it or leave it"—whatever rate they wanted to give.

Another of the cute little devices—and the member raised this in comparing prices—the driver's insurance policy may be flat-rated but the penalty points come on his driver's licence. One pays $3 a year in this province for a driver's licence—$9 for three years. How much does one pay for a driver's licence in Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan? Are these members prepared to concede that a bad driver will pay over $200?

I want to talk about some other little things. What about the leased cars that would be charged for at business rates—not the way they are now?

There would be an automatic staff reduction in agencies writing large volumes of automobile insurance by at least 50 per cent. That's in addition to the agents losing their businesses—indeed, the right to sell their businesses.

Incidentally, these figures are compiled by the new organization in which the member for Sudbury has so little faith. This is from the Registered Insurance Brokers of Ontario, the new self-regulatory body. As a matter of fact, they have stationery from the old Independent Insurance Agents and Brokers of Ontario, the IIABO.

When one considers the many millions of dollars in government subsidy, the many millions of dollars in lost opportunities and the destruction of the most viable small business in this province—which goes right across this province, particularly in the smaller communities—when one takes away the opportunity for people to have that business; when one takes away the need to build large buildings—these people who are so interested in the construction business should be at least interested in preserving the office space requirements in the major urban areas—and so on. I could go on for some time with this.

I want to end very simply. It has been suggested that I am responsible for taking the first step, depending upon which speaker for the New Democratic Party raised this—sometimes it was a small one, sometimes it was a giant one—towards publicly owned and operated automobile insurance. As a matter of fact, it was suggested that somehow I would nail it up on the masthead before I was gone. Mr. Speaker, I will tell you, as long as I am the minister there will not be public insurance in this province. As long as the most distinguished statesman in this country, the Premier of this province (Mr. Davis) is Premier, and this government is here, there will not be public insurance.

This bill is not a step towards anything. I will tell you, within two years I will be so disentangled—and I make no bones about this, this is a straight thrust from my ministry—within two years, I would hope, within one year, we will be so disentangled from the operations of the insurance industry by the self-regulation of the agents, and by certain other endeavours we are going to do with the companies, including the privatizing within 18 months of the motor vehicle accident claims fund and the records for the future, that no matter who gets in here, Mr. Speaker, there won't even be the opportunity to bring in, with all of its devastating impact and all of its implications, public insurance.

With the passage of second reading of Bill 160 tonight, public insurance is dead and buried in the province of Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

SECURITIES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 156, An Act to amend the Securities Act, 1978.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks on the second reading of this bill.

As I said before, the bill deals with a number of points, mostly of a fine-tuning nature to resolve minor questions in the interpretation of the Securities Act adopted in June 1978.

As members know, since that time the commission and staff have engaged in extensive discussion with members of the financial industry. Also, they have gained practical experience with the application of the new act since it was proclaimed on September 15, 1979.

All of the amendments, except the new section 62, have been exposed at length for public comment and have been revised to reflect comments received. I will not attempt to deal with them in detail except to say they will further improve an already good statute.

I understand the changes have been reviewed with the securities commissions in other provinces, and are expected to be included in the uniform legislation which most of the provinces now have under active consideration.

One change merits particular attention, the new section 62 to permit the short form and summary prospectuses. This section is the only one that has not been exposed generally for public comment but its objective is obviously desirable.

When this bill is adopted, the Ontario Securities Commission will publish for comments a draft regulation which, among other things, will permit a short form prospectus for junior mining issues.

As I am sure members know, many junior mining companies have expressed concern with the cost in delays now involved in filing a prospectus with the OSC. I expect a short form prospectus will go a long way to meet these concerns. The draft regulations will also provide for a summary prospectus to be used by mutual funds. I have asked the commission to report to me on its experience with junior mining and mutual fund prospectuses under these new regulations in order that we may consider making similar provisions as to prospectuses for other types of issue. If this experiment is successful it will do much to reduce the burden of the prospectus filing procedure while maintaining investor protection.

As I mentioned when I introduced this bill for first reading, the fine-tuning provisions that it contains include revisions of the takeover bid rules to reflect experience gained in the competitive takeover bids of last winter.

Since I introduced the bill a number of technical concerns have been raised as to one provision. Rather than revise it hastily, I propose to withdraw it in order to allow ample time for consultation prior to its reintroduction in the spring. Accordingly, I will be moving in committee that section 14(1) of the bill be deleted.

Also tonight—and I am sure the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) and the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) will probably want to make some remarks—we have here the very distinguished chairman of the Ontario Securities Commission, whose tenure in his position is drawing rapidly to a close. As the minister I would say on behalf of the public of Ontario, notwithstanding there was an agreement with Mr. Baillie as to what his tenure would be, the "rapidly" is approaching just a little bit too rapidly.

This will probably be his last appearance as an adviser to a minister, either in committee or before the House. His record of service as the chairman has been distinguished and outstanding. His record of accomplishment would really take a considerable time to document. He has served the public, the investors, the securities industry, and indeed the entire business community admirably and well.

As I mentioned, with the passage of Bill 156 there probably will not be another occasion for him to appear formally before the House or in committee as an adviser to the minister. I think it only appropriate that the Hansard report marking the start of the progress of this bill to the Legislature does reflect some comment, however inadequate, of the job Mr. Baillie has done as the chairman of the Ontario Securities Commission.

Mr. Breithaupt: In starting my remarks with respect to Bill 156, it would be appropriate for me also to add my point of view with respect to the involvement James Baillie has had in the securities commission during these last several years.

Perhaps it is because I have been here for just a few years now that I look upon someone like Jim Baillie as a young man; yet he is one who has made an exceptional mark, not only in the practice of the law but also in the opportunity he has given to those of us who have met with him from time to time with respect to his knowledge of securities legislation.

He clearly has brought to this task an expertise which is remarkable. Certainly the persons I have spoken to from time to time who are in the somewhat more active securities business, as brokers, as dealers or as persons on the floor of the Exchange or whatever, have consistently viewed his involvement as a very happy occasion.

I suggest what he has brought to us has been two particular points of view. First of all, he was involved in the provision of the securities legislation last year, Bills 7, 8 and 9 as I recall. We spent some time on detail in the committee in the spring of this year looking over in depth the involvement of what those bills might bring. He brought those bills before us as an administrator of that legislation, but more important he also had the opportunity of bringing these bills before us from the entirely balanced point of view of someone who was knowledgeable in the field of security, of someone who was mature in the approach he has taken for the responsibilities he has had and of someone who really has had a leadership obligation within securities legislation in Canada that is truly second to none.

It is clear, as the minister commented earlier, that the involvement of the chairman of the Ontario Securities Commission really sets a tone and an obligation across the country. Surely it is important for our legislation to have a common background, so that particularly in the common law provinces outside of the province of Quebec we have a consistent and thorough point of view that is clear, and we have an opportunity to make sure the law which we pass in Ontario is truly the common approach the rest of the provinces will take.

We have seen in the attitude and in the style and intelligence Mr. Baillie has brought to this task that his point of view from time to time on a variety of legislative commitments has been accepted by those in other provinces as that of one who clearly knows what he is talking about. He clearly has given leadership to which we can all refer.

Certainly in the year or so I have been the critic in this ministry, I must say, Mr. Speaker, my relationship with Mr. Baillie has been excellent. He has always been thorough and clear in the point of view he has brought with respect to the details of legislation that have come before us from time to time.

It is clear in reviewing the Ontario Securities Commission bulletin, or indeed looking at the interviews in the press, whether it is the Financial Post or the other newspapers, whether it is looking at the journal articles or the other things we have seen from time to time, Mr. Baillie is a person who has brought a substantial amount of expertise in a short and concentrated time to the job which he has.

I wish him well as he returns to a private practice; I am sure we will hear much more of him in years to come. It is my pleasure to second the remarks the minister has made in this opportunity we have to comment upon the service Jim Baillie has brought to the people of Ontario, to the government, the Legislature, and indeed the commercial community within the province with his own expertise, in this possible last circumstance we have to see him in action in this post as we deal with the amendments to his bill.

The minister has commented from time to time, not only in his initial statement but this evening, as to the provisions of this bill. We have seen here a compendium of the amendments which are necessary to this bill, amendments dictated by what experience over this past few months has shown should be developed because of changes in securities legislation and in the operation of the securities market.

Perhaps you will recall my earlier comments in the ministry's estimates, as we looked at the opportunities for increased junior mining participation, and the opportunity as well to have new products available without some of the difficulties of the more senior securities, as has been the case in Ontario over these past several years.

I am sure the members from northern Ontario are well aware the development of new mining prospects, and of a variety of other opportunities, has been somewhat constrained over these last few years because of the rules as they now exist.

I recognize we have a responsibility to the investor to make sure a basic amount of information is available so that the bucket-shop operations, and all these tragic stories we hear from time to time, the con jobs and all this sort of thing, are not maintained with the presumed authority or imprimatur of the government of this province. Of course none of us wants that. There seems to be a middle ground, and that middle ground is something for which the somewhat circumscribed prospectuses for junior mining companies, and the involvement with respect to that kind of development, is available for investors in the province of Ontario.

In this amendment bill, Mr. Speaker, we have also dealt with the takeover bid situation to some extent. I understand from discussing it with the minister that some of the provisions which otherwise would have appeared in this bill are to be reconsidered, particularly the first portion of section 14, which is not going to be proceeded with at this time.

I think that is reasonable, in looking at the involvement from the mining and business community, if they are of a view, on a calm reflection, that this kind of an amendment is not going to be practical at this point.

The early amendments in the bill are things with which I certainly agree. I look particularly at section 11 which deals with interim financial statements. We also look, later on, at the various changes to the later sections of the bill that deal with a variety of amendments which are going to avoid inter-jurisdictional conflicts and which are going to give the opportunity to the Ontario Securities Commission to have extraterritorial meetings to ensure that consistent securities law does develop, not only throughout Canada but also with respect to the American jurisdictions in which our own investors are also involved.

A number of these matters are housekeeping matters which I think can be dealt with quite promptly if there is a need to deal with this bill in committee.

The whole matter of takeover bids, of course, has been of great concern to Mr. Baillie and his colleagues on the securities commission. We discussed this at the time the bill was dealt with last year in that earlier package of Bills 7, 8 and 9 to which I referred. This was also discussed at the time of estimates. I am quite aware the minister has been concerned about this flurry of takeover matters that just didn't seem to work out as far as having consistent approaches to legislation was concerned and as far as minority shareholders and other individuals being clearly knowledgeable about what in fact was going on was concerned.

This is a new phenomenon, I suppose, within the Ontario securities world. We have found, in looking at the operations of a variety of companies, that they have chosen to use their funds to buy other companies. I suppose if one were in the aquarium business one would wind up reviewing the circumstances based on the fact that bigger fish eat smaller fish, but the end result, of course, Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, is that you don't wind up with any more fish. Possibly it could be that we are using funds only because there's no better purpose to use them to buy other things. Indeed, it may well be a burden on our economy in these next few years that instead of creating more fish, all we will really be doing is creating bigger fish. Of course, only time will tell on that point.

Mr. Wildman: Sharks.

Mr. Breithaupt: They may be sharks from one point of view, I don't know, but the end result is simply there. We are not necessarily creating more opportunities for investment or more detailed and interesting obligations, as a result of which the stock market could show or sell shares. We are simply developing a larger and larger, almost merry-go-round of investment opportunities which really do not create anything new.

The purpose of this legislation is clearly to encourage the continuance of a standard of securities legislation within the province. As we look at those earlier Bills 7, 8, and 9, to which I have referred, certainly it was the obligation, I think one that was cheerfully accepted but one that was also clearly on the mind of the securities commission as it brought these bills forward to the minister, that we in Ontario were setting a standard for securities legislation within the province. The provisions of the proposed Bill 132 have now been withdrawn and reworked so that we see the details of them in Bill 156.

The two concepts the minister referred to with respect to the short form of prospectus and with respect to the summary statement are both, I think, items that should be encouraged. We have had, as I have said earlier, the prospect of more junior mining obligations which I believe will be useful within Ontario, and yet we have the obligation to make sure those prospectuses and the information available to investors are on a sound basis. This, I hope, will be a happy combination of the needs for the future prospects of our security development with the consumer involvement for which we are all responsible.

I welcome these amendments, because I think they will add to the basic securities legislation we now have, and I presume that at the committee stage of the bill a variety of details can be discussed at some greater length.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I also would like to have a word about the chairman of the commission. I think he is much too level-headed to take all the remarks that were made about him tonight quite to heart. The important thing is that the first experiment by the commission in something called the revolving-door theory of chairmanship for the commission has been a very successful one.

I take some small satisfaction that it was a matter discussed in this assembly on a number of other occasions that in this particular commission this was an appropriate way in which the chairmanship should be established, that someone from among those knowledgeable in the industry should serve a specific period of time as chairman of the commission and return to that industry, and the sooner we had established the kind of acceptance of that process the better it would be for the regulation of the securities industry in the province. Mr. Baillie, during the course of his tenure, has not only established that principle but he has also established it in a way which I assume will continue to be the guiding way in which the ministry and the government will make the selection.

Mr. Baillie had, in addition, the opportunity of finally bringing to conclusion this process of the new Securities Act which had been going on for much too long. Too many amendments were required and the new act was too long in coming, but under his chairmanship we finally did achieve that particular event.

However, it poses an immense warning to this assembly. I say quite bluntly and quite candidly: Even in a minority government situation in the standing committee on the administration of justice dealing with this bill, when in theory at least the government's intentions on a particular clause in the bill could have been amended by an amendment proposed and accepted by the two opposition parties or in the assembly, there was not a single amendment proposed by anyone in this chamber that was accepted.

The reason it wasn't accepted, of course, is that we were bit players in a process in which this Legislature was not involved. It was not involved for a number of reasons, not the least of which is that when you have a single statute and a series of detailed regulations about a particular industry, there is a pool or a school of experts in the financial community, in the legal profession, in the accounting profession and in the others who become so highly expert in the understanding of all the minutiae of the regulations and the law surrounding the securities industry that it is very easy for those in that industry to treat this forum and these members with something less than having anything useful to say about the process of change and accountability.

I issue this warning to the minister, that that's what happened in the case of this bill. It is no reflection on Mr. Baillie, because Mr. Baillie happened to come with a very high sense of public obligation and public duty to discharge to the commission. That was fortunate, but I want to say that the bill went through, I believe, something like six different versions and that none of them, except this final draft, got to second reading in the assembly. In other words, they had been gone over in minute detail, not in a public forum but in the offices of the commission with the representatives of the industry, over a considerable period of time, until they were so refined—so refined in their interest, not the public interest—that the bill which came before us was not capable of amendment.

We had the nerve in committee to propose a couple of amendments. I don't need to go over them. They are amendments which could well and truly have been made in the public interest, but there was no way in which this assembly could amend that bill. I think it is a startling reflection on the accountability to this assembly of that commission that a bill of this magnitude and this complexion, while it was amended in committee not a single amendment was passed that was proposed by any member of this assembly. Each and every one of them were very refined, specialized amendments that came to light in this ongoing process of which this bill tonight is the next stage.

There was constant and continuous refinement by discussion between the commission and the industry. That is no reflection on the commission. The commission, as I said on second reading of the Securities Act in 1978: ". . . has all of the earmarks of that kind of a commission that requires public scrutiny, intense expertise, intense internal morale, intense sense of its public obligation, but so intense that every now and then, for example, it goes a little awry in its sense of what is and what is not in the public interest."

It is quite interesting, for example, to read: "Relevant policy statements promulgated by the commission generally obligate issuers to make immediate public disclosure of changes in the issuers' affairs that would be likely to affect the market price of their securities. The policy statements recognize that in certain cases the attainments by an issuer of valid business objectives might be compromised by public disclosure and that in such cases a delay in disclosure may be appropriate.

"In a recent situation, a large Canadian industrial company, whose common stocks are listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange, discovered that for the first six months of its fiscal year it would report earnings greatly in excess of its earnings for the corresponding period in the preceding year and greatly in excess of what had generally been anticipated.

"At the moment when this happy fact became clear, the issuer was in the process of settling a contract with a labour union that had struck one of its plants. The chief executive officer of the issuer telephoned a high-ranking Ontario Securities Commission staff member and explained that the company would prefer not to release the good news until after settling the labour contract. His call was consistent with the timely disclosure policy statements, which advised that if management has an unusual or difficult situation confronting it, it should discuss the matter promptly with the commission.

"The commission official, who apparently was somewhat troubled as to whether he had exercised his discretion properly, told the issuer's chief executive that under the circumstances it would be permissible for public announcement to await the filing of the issuer's six-months financial results in the normal course.

"Different people will have different answers to the question whether the desire on the part of an issuer's management to secure the labour of its unionized employees at the lowest possible price constitutes a valid business reason for non-disclosure under the securities laws of a favourable material change in the issuer's earnings, but it seems highly doubtful that if the question had to be confined publicly by rule rather than privately by telephone the provincial government or the securities commission itself would declare an ongoing collective bargaining situation to be a valid business reason for non-disclosure of favourable developments relating to the issuer." If the regulator would not put itself on the line publicly it is doubtful that it should do so privately.

That focuses the point I want to make: that this assembly or a committee of this assembly has to devise a method by which it does not abdicate knowledge of what is happening in the financial markets of this province to the expertise, however well motivated and however well established and entrenched, of the Ontario Securities Commission in that very close relationship it has established with the industry.

A second example, Mr. Speaker, is that under the single clause which says that the commission has power to order the Toronto Stock Exchange and to give directions in all other things to the Toronto Stock Exchange, it is very significant that practically all of those relationships are done in private and by telephone, not by direction.

I want to make it very clear that I have very serious reservations about the process which is going on. I say to the outgoing chairman, with the greatest respect, that during the period of time when his term of office may be ending and his successor may be coming into office he instill, at least in his successor, what I believe the chairman of the commission at this time has for this assembly, some degree of respect about the responsibility of this assembly in this field.

I say to the minister that he has to ensure this assembly a method by which a committee of this assembly is seen to have a close working relationship in this building with the ongoing processes of change which take place in the minutiae of this highly sophisticated business we're involved in. Let me perhaps suggest a possible avenue by which this could be accomplished.

By the way, I want to pay a minor tribute to the Ontario Securities Commission. In this morning's Globe and Mail under the byline of Stan Oziewicz there was the article about "Ontario's Use of Secret Rules Well Hidden, Researcher Says" and talks about "secret law"—that is all of the internal rules and regulations that are not available to the public at the present.

I want to say that does not apply to the securities commission. I think by and large there isn't something called secret law hidden away in the interstices of the commission. Their requirement is full, complete and true disclosure of all of the affairs of the corporate issuers, and in a funny way that has worked within the commission so they're a fairly open body. I did want to make the point that despite what may be the case in the Workmen's Compensation Board and other agencies of government and in the interstices of government ministries, that's not one of the failings of the Ontario Securities Commission.

Let me compliment the commission on what I think may be a possible avenue by which some of my concerns can be allayed with respect to this question of accountability in this chamber. The commission has very rightly done what we have tried to urge the government to do on many occasions. That is before filing and publishing the regulations in final form, to provide a forum by which detailed and complicated regulations for which we grant authority in almost every statute could have some public exposure and discussion before they are finally promulgated.

It is very interesting that under the aegis of this commission, under the chairmanship of Mr. Baillie, seminars were held, I believe three or maybe more. Three or four seminars were held at which the regulations were made available in draft form, and were discussed in detail. The commission came forward and explained those regulations as they related to the new law which was coming into force. The result was that those who had to live with those regulations had a real opportunity to understand what was in them.

I would hope some other ministries of the government would adopt the same procedure with respect to detailed and complicated regulations. We happen to have a body which performs an abortive function in this House called the standing committee on statutory instruments. Anybody who has sat on that particularly dreary committee perhaps would welcome its use as the body before which regulations under such statutes as the Securities Act or any other act, the Environmental Assessment Act for example, would be referred in draft form for public input, public discussion and public understanding.

I'm quite certain this suggestion will not be picked up by this government, but it is a suggestion that might possibly provide the link between this assembly and the Ontario Securities Commission. I say that because of the funny process of the establishment of the words that actually find their way into statutes. Our regulatory powers are so broad they have already found their way in many cases into the regulations and it's only after they have had a refinement in that process that they become amendments to the actual statute. So the standing committee could very well perform that useful function. The securities commission and the industry would come to a standing committee of this assembly and the expertise which is lacking among most of the members of the assembly about the workings of this highly sophisticated and knowledgeable field would be seen here and would be understood. The member for Armourdale (Mr. McCaffrey), for example, would be an ideal person to be part of that process.

I've talked about those two or three matters because they are of immense concern to me, and should be to this assembly. That elitist, proud group who administer the securities laws of this province from time to time have to understand that noblesse oblige is no satisfactory substitute for the public interest, and this is the place where the public interest is.

That is not to chastise the commission. It is the fault of this assembly that we have allowed it to happen. I, for one, was very upset to have sat through the committee hearings of the Securities Act, which was passed and is in force as of last September, and to find that this assembly couldn't change one jot or tittle of that legislation even when there was a majority in the assembly. I need not rehash the occasion when we could have passed an amendment to the act and in all good faith we accepted the deferment of it so that it could go back into the digestive process. It never ever did quite come back again and so we do not have the one amendment that might have been passed.

I have gone on at much too short a length, but it appears to be about 10:30. I think the remaining items could be well dealt with in this bill in committee of the assembly.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure the bill is ready to go to committee yet. I would like to adjourn the debate.

On motion by Mr. T. P. Reid, the debate was adjourned.

ESL PROGRAMS

Mr. Speaker: Under standing order 28, a motion to adjourn has been deemed to have been made. The member for Oakwood has indicated his dissatisfaction with an answer from the Minister of Education dealing with English as a second language for Asian refugees.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, on November 16 I asked the Minister of Education to inform the Legislature in a clear, concise, unemotional manner how many provincial dollars have been allocated or will be allocated to boards of education to set up English-as-a second-language classes for the 6,000 refugee children the ministry itself expects will be entering Ontario's schools within the next 12 to 14 months.

Approximately 800 of these children are already here in Metropolitan Toronto alone. The minister also said 90 per cent of these children do not speak any English or French.

The minister's answer was the weighting factors within the legislative grants will accommodate almost all these children. As far as I'm concerned, in the minister's own words, that is factually incorrect. As a matter of fact, in my own words, I will say to the minister that it is total and utter nonsense.

The minister obviously should be more knowledgeable in terms of how the grant structure functions from the Ministry of Education and how provincial dollars flow to the boards of education. The minister should know how the weighting factors work. Let us take an example. If a teacher of English as a second language started to work in September 1979, the teacher is counted in the June 1980 board report. In June 1981, the weighting factor recognizes this teacher and generates provincial funds. In other words, it is approximately 15 months after the fact that provincial funds are generated.

I don't think the minister should go unchallenged in always saying the grant formula generates money. Clearly, this is an emergency situation. I would like the minister to be addressing this problem in a more serious manner.

In answer to my supplementary, the minister returned to saying the grants are going to look after the problem. As far as I'm concerned, this stubborn attitude of the Minister of Education is definitely not going to help the education of the 6,000 refugee children who are going to be coming into this province within the next 12 to 14 months.

Two possible courses of actions will follow if the minister does not recognize the intensity of the problem. One is the boards would have to rely on the local resources they have. If those resources are not adequate, so be it. Hundreds of children will sink by being placed in the regular classroom, a classroom in which they don't understand the language the teacher speaks. This certainly is not a way to treat the introduction of immigrant children into the school system.

If the boards do have local resources and can muster local resources, that particular burden is going to fall totally upon the local taxpayers. I'm sure the minister realizes this situation is a very sensitive one and certainly not conducive to the education of the immigrant children, when the community around them begins to feel it has to absorb the whole shot of this education on a regressive property tax.

Clearly, the minister has the information, which was provided during the justice committee hearings, at which she was not present. Therefore, the minister should not really be shocked at the figures I used in my November 5 question.

What the minister should be doing as fast as possible is conduct an inquiry into this situation and to begin to put in the money so that boards across this province can look after their needs.

In the justice committee, we had an answer from the minister to that particular problem; that answer said the ministry is actively looking at ways to provide additional financial assistance to boards that provide this particular service for the refugee kids.

The minister herself is going backwards in saying the grant structure will look after the problem. The minister has to look seriously at this problem, and playing the numbers game is certainly not going to do any good to the thousands of children who need English as a second language; not only the Vietnamese kids who are coming in—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Grande:—but also those children who are not getting the proper ESL language classes right now.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, in the several months since the influx of Indochinese children, primarily Vietnamese children—began to occur in Ontario, there have been approximately 1,812 who have arrived in this province.

At the present time, in the mid-northern region there are 12; in the northeastern region there are 38; in the northwestern region there are 39; in the eastern region there are approximately 500; in the western region there are 302; in Metropolitan Toronto—in the central region—there are 921; totalling 1,812 students.

These students are concentrated primarily in the city of Toronto, although, as I suggested, there are a number who are in other areas of the province. The Toronto Board of Education has 760 students at this time and estimates the extra costs that will be incurred for teachers, interpreters, educational assistants and translation services will be approximately $100,000 in the next year, and not the figure of $1 million to which the member for Oakwood alluded. The North York Board of Education has approximately 900 students within its jurisdiction at the present time, and feels it may need to hire a community relations officer as well as extra teachers above the formula that is appropriated to it. The other five Metropolitan Toronto school boards have an average of 12 students each within their systems at this time.

It's interesting that the mid-northern region, with a total of 12 students, is attacking the problem in one way. The northeastern region has a very special situation in that three school boards in the northeastern region are co-operating to provide services in one location for all of those students. The 36 children, and the adults who have accompanied them, have not been integrated into any regular educational system at this time, but are being taught through a mechanism that has been established, uniquely, by that board.

The northwestern region has approximately 40 students, including 14 in the Lakehead board and 13 in the Fort Frances-Rainy River board. As I said, the western region has approximately 302, and the city of Ottawa has almost 500, accounting for that number in the eastern portion of the province.

Under the ministry's regular funding arrangements, school boards receive funding for provision of education for every new Canadian student who enters the school system in Ontario. In addition, there is appropriate funding over and above the regular per-pupil grant, and it is provided to school boards for programs and services for newcomers in English as a second language as well as in French as a second language.

These arrangements apply to all the newcomers who come into the province, and most certainly will apply to the Indochinese refugee students from Vietnam. But we anticipate, based on available estimates at this time, there will probably be about 50,000 Indochinese refugees in Canada within the next 18 months, and we anticipate about 20,000 to 25,000 of those will settle in Ontario, about half of whom will be school-age children.

We had anticipated they would arrive within the province at the rate of about 1,000 per month, but that rate has not as yet been met; the arrivals have been at the rate of about 400 a month over the last several months. As I suggested earlier, and as was mentioned by the honourable member, about 90 per cent of this total number of children will speak neither English nor French.

The funding mechanism is there, it is in place for dealing with these children, but because of the nature and the size of the problem, although the weighting factors for 1980 have not been totally finalized in the general legislative grant, the language instruction weighting factor for Indochinese refugees is certainly going to reflect current programs and services. The number of English-as-a-second-language teachers providing programs and services for Indochinese pupils in 1980 will be used in the calculation of the language-of-instruction weighting factor for that year.

We intend to move to a current funding basis for this program in order to ensure that no board is disadvantaged in attempting to meet this increased responsibility, which weighs heavily upon the boards but which reflects the generosity and the kindness of Ontario people and the people of Canada.

The House adjourned at 10:40 p.m.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

FARM MACHINERY

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, the farmers of Ontario invest about $300 million in machinery every year. When this much money is at stake, it is essential the farmers have a reliable supply of new machinery, a dependable supply of repair parts and first-class repair service.

The government has been working with the farm representatives and with the people from the farm machinery industry to develop a program which will ensure that farmers get the kind of service they need. The program will be administered by the Ontario Farm Machinery Board, which has members representing farmers, manufacturers, dealers, wholesalers and the Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

The program centres on a certification program. Certification of distributors and dealers will be granted by the farm machinery board in accordance with standards which the board is in the process of implementing. Certified companies will offer a new equipment warranty which will meet or exceed the minimum standards set by the board. They will also guarantee to provide repairs and replacement parts in a reasonable time. They will also provide sales agreements with standardized conditions of sale.

Those provisions are crucial. When a farmer spends $70,000 or $80,000 for a piece of equipment that turns out to be faulty, he must be able to get some satisfaction from the dealer, distributor, or manufacturer of that equipment. When it comes to repairs, a farmer cannot wait. If his machinery is out of operation for a week due to breakdown, he can miss the crucial schedule for planting or harvesting and thousands of dollars can go down the drain. Delays are more than just a costly nuisance to farmers, they can be disastrous.

To undertake this program, the Ontario Farm Machinery Board has been enlarged and its responsibilities have been augmented. As well as developing standards and administering the certification program, the board will distribute educational information on farm machinery. It will also conduct special surveys and investigations and it will mediate disputes between purchasers and suppliers.

I might say we have found the farm machinery industry most willing to co-operate with us in this program. I believe it will work smoothly once it gets going. I am sure farmers and the industry will find it extremely beneficial to their business dealings.

CAS FUNDING

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), I would like to inform the House about a major reform of the funding of the children's aid societies that is being introduced in 1980 and 1981. This new approach is being presented by the Minister of Community and Social Services to all children's aid societies and municipalities at four regional meetings today and tomorrow in London, Sudbury, Toronto and Kingston, thus the reason for my making this statement on his behalf.

The government has been consciously and deliberately moving dollars from the residential portion of children's services into community-based programs such as prevention and foster care. The success of these initiatives, however, has been hampered by the current method of funding societies. This method provides societies a disincentive for using nonresidential services and rewards societies for making use of purchased residential care.

The present practice of attempting to control society expenditures on a line-by-line basis results in lengthy delays in the budget approval process. This practice, combined with the current use of funding, places the government, the societies and municipalities in a state of uncertainty about the total cost of society services.

The new approach to funding, which avoids the extremes of no controls, on the one hand and massive red tape on the other hand, is called the services approach. In very broad terms, the provincial government will define the types of services it wishes to purchase—prevention, residential care and so on. It will then set aside specific amounts of funding for each one of the services desired and seek to establish consistency in the rates paid to agencies for similar services. The services approach is aimed at minimal government interference in internal agency operations once these services and their costs have been agreed upon.

For children's aid societies, this new approach to funding means that the budget allocation will be made clear earlier than currently happens. The government's goal is to finalize budgets as early as possible in the new year. Second, unless there are exceptional circumstances, societies will be expected to operate within their budgets, which are intended to cover their full costs. In return, societies will be permitted a great deal more flexibility in how they manage their resources within their total budgets. For example, societies may reduce the total amount spent on expensive residential care and apply these savings to services in the community.

Third, in 1981-82 the government will begin to allocate all new funds to societies in a manner that reflects the numbers of children in the areas they serve. The allocation of these funds will also be adjusted to reflect social, economic and geographical differences among areas. Both municipalities and societies will be consulted during the coming year on the factors to be applied. In the interim year, 1980, the allocation of new moneys will be based on a fixed percentage increase over the 1979 approved society budgets.

Fourth, a substantial reduction will be made by mid-1980 in the total amount of reporting and form-filling required of societies. Fifth, the ministry will provide both societies and municipalities with regular statistical information and analyses that will assist them monitor the performance of children's aid societies with respect to their own goals and the performance of other societies. Finally, and perhaps most important of all, the services approach will strengthen the role and authority of the boards of directors of societies in the direction and development of their agencies.

For municipalities the services approach also means positive changes. Firstly, it will more firmly establish municipalities in their role as cofunding partners. Knowing more clearly and earlier the nature and size of the allocations made to societies and having access to the same financial data and analyses provided to the societies, municipalities will be able to participate more effectively in the budget review and approval process. Second, municipalities will know early in their own fiscal year what the total cost of their society's budget is likely to be.

The new approach does not affect, of course, the present 80-20 cost-sharing formula for the funding of societies, which we are currently addressing with the special committee on children's services established through the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee.

It is not possible to outline today the exact amount of funding individual societies will receive for the 1980 budget year. To determine the base figure from which the 1980 budgets are to be calculated it will be necessary to estimate the amount of any 1979 supplementary budgets, subject to later verification. Otherwise, our goal of early notification of the full 1980 budgets would not be met.

The full amount set aside in the provincial budget this year to cover special projects of children's aid societies will become part of the societies' base budgets for 1980. I am pleased to be able to announce that the increase to societies in funding for 1980 will be a further eight per cent added to this base. A one-time expenditure of $120,000 will also be made among eight agencies which are at the bottom in terms of salaries, to place them in a more appropriate starting position as the new approach takes effect.

The new approach to funding children's aid societies introduces a new management relationship among the provincial government, societies and municipalities that stresses service to children and families, greater accountability of societies and their boards and greater local autonomy and flexibility. It is the hope of the government that it will be well received by both societies and municipalities since it is clearer, simpler, fairer and more equitable, and should reduce budget review and processing costs. The children of Ontario should be better served because of it.

The introduction of the services approach to funding of children's aid societies is part of a broader plan to phase in this approach for the funding of all children's services programs within the Ministry of Community and Social Services. A full discussion of the problems of children's services funding and the overall strategy to address these problems in the 1980s will be included in a policy paper which will be released by the minister in December. A summary of the contents is being released today and copies will be placed in all members' mail boxes.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, Last week during my absence, my colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle)—

Mr. Speaker: Order. A copy of that statement has yet to be transmitted to the opposition. The honourable minister may proceed.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'm sorry about that, Mr. Speaker. Because of all that, I'll have to start over again, because I don't want my train of thought to be interrupted. Last week during my absence, my colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, advised this House of the status of the proposed federal legislation for the regulation of the transportation of dangerous goods. Briefly to refresh the members on the subject, let me say that since 1976 the transportation of dangerous goods secretariat of Transport Canada has been in existence. Its efforts were undertaken at the request and continuous co-operation of both industry and the provincial ministries concerned with ensuring the uniform—and I stress uniform—application of dangerous goods regulations across the entire country, as well as the interchange of such freight between any and all modes of transportation.

The proposed system would regulate the packaging and container standards, labelling, storage and transportation of dangerous goods; prescribe documentation requirements for the movement of such goods; provide emergency information, procedures and authority regarding dangerous goods transportation incidents; and prescribe penalties and liabilities for the contravention of the proposed regulatory provisions.

As members of this House should now be aware, the draft federal Act was introduced in Parliament in May 1978 as Bill C-53 and was reintroduced in November 1978 as Bill C-17. However, it died on the federal Order Paper at dissolution this past spring.

For our part, the Ontario government passed the enabling legislation; that is, we amended the Highway Traffic Act to accommodate the adoption of any federal code by reference two years ago. In fact, third reading of that bill was given on November 8, 1977.

On my return, I was advised by my people that the new federal Minister of Transport, the Honourable Don Mazankowski, introduced Bill C-25—which is the new bill to replace the previous two I mentioned—on Monday of this week.

The provincial secretary also advised the members of the existence of three elements critical to the full implementation of this proposed federal system of regulation.

First, the act and code of regulations are being developed as separate and distinct instruments to permit the provinces to implement the code in co-operation with federal administrative procedures. Second, by virtue of our constitution the act and code intervene in a most difficult area of overlapping jurisdictions. Third, the federal, provincial and municipal governments will need, individually and jointly, to make a large number of arrangements concerning the administration, enforcement and funding of the system.

There are members here today who are pressing for rapid decisions in this matter and in the afterglow of what happened in Mississauga all members should. But I can tell them it has been an ongoing matter of prime concern with me over the past few years. For example, on four successive occasions while at the Canadian Conference of Motor Transport Administrators, I and my provincial counterparts and senior staff members have pushed and prodded for action, formulating and passing resolutions calling on the federal government to act with dispatch. I cannot enumerate the number of telephone and face-to-face conversations I had with Mr. Mazankowski's predecessor, Otto Lang, on this same subject.

As the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development candidly pointed out, the act and code intervene in a broad area of overlapping jurisdictions. Just the same, when one considers the amount of goods, including hazardous and dangerous commodities, crossing Ontario borders, one can understand why I have strongly supported complementary Ontario legislation to any federal act and why I so vigorously urged Ottawa to move on Bills 53 and 17 and now on Bill 25.

As late as yesterday afternoon, a senior official of Transport Canada, representing his minister, met with my deputy minister, with the deputy minister of the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and the Deputy Solicitor General, as well as a senior law officer from the city of Mississauga. The latter, naturally, attended on behalf of Her Worship, Mississauga Mayor Hazel McCallion, to discuss draft terms of reference for the inquiry to be called by the federal minister to look into the transportation of hazardous goods by rail.

Following that meeting, I had the opportunity to talk yesterday afternoon with Mr.

Mazankowski. Recognizing there will be an inquiry, I urged him to move on the federal legislation as soon as possible. I did so because I believe such legislation is essential for Ontario, especially when one considers the amount of hazardous goods transported almost daily within the provincial borders.

I also pointed out that should the upcoming inquiry reveal any deficiencies in the present federal legislation, then these could be corrected by subsequent amendments. I can tell the members of this House that Mr. Mazankowski himself expressed his very keen desire to get the new legislation passed before the federal House rises for the Christmas recess. For our part, as soon as the federal legislation is in place and the three volumes are available to my people in the ministry, I shall process and adopt all appropriate provisions for swift application in Ontario.

At this point, I would like again to underline the need for uniformity in the processing and adoption of the federal legislation in all 10 Canadian provinces and the territories, for uniformity is essential to safety from near-disasters such as occurred in Mississauga, instead of all jurisdictions dashing off in different directions. Recognizing, however, that there could be possible problems affecting the prompt passage of the federal legislation, despite Mr. Mazankowski's optimism, I've asked MTC staff to accelerate any selective, interim regulations which could be implemented quickly as a stop-gap measure. I did that, despite my conviction any unilateral action by any province in this field is contrary to the common Canada-wide good.

Finally, while I believe I have answered any and all queries directed at my colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, there is one last matter which I should address, namely, the charge by the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) that unregulated carriers are carrying dangerous goods on Ontario highways, notwithstanding Bill 89. Simply stated, the member should not confuse economic regulations under the Public Commercial Vehicles Act with safety regulations which apply across the board to all carriers, whether private or for hire.

HUMAN RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement concerning important matters having to do with human rights.

Ontario was the first jurisdiction in Canada to enact a comprehensive code on human rights some 17 years ago. Revisions have been made from time to time in our human rights legislation, sometimes by way of amendments to the Ontario Human Rights Code and sometimes by means of separate legislation—for example, Bill 122 introduced last session by my colleague, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), dealing with discriminatory business practices.

In mid-1977, my predecessor received a report on a broad range of human rights issues from the Ontario Human Rights Commission following an extensive review by the commission of the existing human rights code and consideration of a number of submissions made at the public hearings throughout the province. While the report of the commission was, as I have said, a comprehensive one, it did identify two major areas to which the government gives special priority at this time. I refer to the need to protect handicapped persons against discrimination and, equally important, the need to take positive and meaningful measures to further protect the rights of the visible minorities in this province and, in particular, to further promote and encourage improved race relations.

Later this afternoon, I shall be introducing a bill entitled An Act to Protect the Rights of Handicapped Persons. As the honourable members may know, 1981 has been designated the International Year for Disabled Persons. I am sure many jurisdictions will be taking positive action to promote the integration of disabled persons into all activities of society. The bill I wish to introduce today is in keeping with this objective and is, I believe, a significant move towards what I am sure is our common objective: namely, to ensure that disabled people have the fullest opportunity to utilize their talents and realize their potential in all walks of life.

In the last few years there has been increasing awareness of the difficulties handicapped people face in trying to exercise basic rights which the non-handicapped have taken for granted. Regrettably, discrimination against the handicapped does occur. Sometimes it is deliberate and invidious but more frequently perhaps it is a result of the erroneous view that the handicapped need to be segregated in order to protect them from themselves and the rest of society. Whatever the motivation, I am sure all members agree that discrimination against the handicapped is unwarranted and cannot be tolerated.

The handicapped persons' rights bill has two main purposes: first, to prohibit discrimination on the basis of handicap in relation to employment, accommodation and the provision of services and facilities; second, to establish an office of the handicapped to provide information and to co-ordinate policies and programs designed to benefit and assist handicapped persons.

There are four provisions of the bill which are of particular significance:

1. Protection from discrimination is extended to the physically disabled, the developmentally disabled and to those who have had a past history of mental illness.

2. Complaints of discrimination are to be dealt with by the Ontario Human Rights Commission, which will have the power to appoint boards of inquiry to adjudicate claims and make appropriate remedial orders.

3. Provisions have been made concerning the relationship of the new act to other acts of the Legislature, with provisions for primacy for the new act where appropriate.

4. The act establishes an office for the handicapped, responsible to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch), to provide information on available services and co-ordinate policies and programs relating to handicapped persons.

The second initiative to which I wish to refer today is the designation of a member of the human rights commission as this province's race relations commissioner. As recent events have shown, we cannot be complacent about the imperative to treat visible minorities, who form such an important part of our social fabric, with fairness and equity.

In my view it is not good enough simply to prohibit discrimination and to react only to complaints. We must increasingly move out into the community, to our schools, to places of employment, to volunteer organizations, to trade unions, to our churches, and indeed to every sector and institution in our society, with an active educational and preventive program, aimed at eradicating all forms of racial bias and discrimination.

As you are aware, this government has committed itself to combat racism. To this end, the human rights commission was given this responsibility. Accordingly, the human rights commission some time ago established a race relations committee and that committee has been working in that area for some time.

To further support this proactive role, a special race relations division will be established within the commission, working under the direction of a new race relations commissioner. I am pleased today to announce the appointment of Dr. Bhausaheb Ubale, who is sitting in the visitors' gallery and who becomes the race relations commissioner of this province, effective December 1, 1979. Since his appointment to the human rights commission 18 months ago, Dr. Ubale has played a major role in the area of race relations.

As a further indication of the government's commitment in this area, I would like to announce that a cabinet committee on race relations is being established. It will be chaired by the Attorney General, and composed of the ministers of Labour, Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz), Education (Miss Stephenson), and the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry).

While the government has been reviewing the recommendations set forth in the Life Together report, the Ontario Human Rights Commission continues to vigorously enforce the provisions of the existing Ontario Human Rights Code. This has been amply demonstrated by the increasing number of boards of inquiry that have been appointed, particularly during the last year, under the code. The success of these boards of inquiry and the decisions handed down by them will have far-reaching implications in promoting harmonious relations among the various segments of our society. Moreover, I am pleased to state that the human rights commission has already made certain changes in administrative procedures within the commission to ensure that the complainants and the respondents receive written reasons for decisions and that appeal from these decisions will be entertained to ensure natural justice.

There are, of course, other aspects of the commission's report which are not addressed in the initiatives I am announcing today. I can assure honourable members that while I have dealt with two of what the government has considered to be the most important themes in the commission's report, we shall continue to study the other recommendations of the report with great care, with a view to proposing further initiatives in due course.

COPIES OF STATEMENTS

Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a legitimate point of privilege. If it is not, I would ask for the Speaker's direction in this matter.

We have now had three statements that have taken nearly 30 minutes, and in my judgement, each of the three has been important. We've been over this before.

Copies of each of the statements, as the rules provide, have been provided to the leaders of the opposition parties and to the opposition critics; again, private members have not had the opportunity to follow important and somewhat detailed statements.

I don't know what the line of questioning will be when oral questions begin; a reasonable man might guess that some of the questions may be directed to points raised in the statements. Again, I would ask the Speaker where we fit into this. We may very well get those copies in the mail; we may very well see those things in the press, but I think there has to be a better way to give all of us an opportunity to question these important matters.

Mr. Speaker: While there is no provision in the standing orders for circulating those ministerial statements in advance to government back-benchers, I think it is an excellent point. It's one well taken. Perhaps the government House leader could prevail upon his cabinet colleagues to circulate a sufficient number to allay any apprehension the honourable member has just expressed.

I think it is an excellent point.

Mr. McCaffrey: It wasn't just for government back-benchers. We have managed to get this information when we need it. I'm talking about private members in the chamber.

Mr. Speaker: Since I've never had a complaint from over here, I have presumed they were all happy.

Mr. Foulds: On behalf of the back-benchers in our caucus, I would certainly like to support the previous speaker.

ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order dealing with Hansard of October 16, 1979, and a comment made that day by the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) in regard to the Royal Ontario Museum. The minister indicated in reply to questions: "I am planning to make a statement next week which will deal not only with the expansion program but also with our operating grant to the Royal Ontario Museum. I think once we make that statement those questions that have just been raised will be answered."

The minister was kind enough to phone me and say he wouldn't be able to do it within a week. It's now over a month. In two weeks, as I understand the schedule, certain of the galleries in the Royal Ontario Museum—particularly the mineralogy and geology galleries and others—will be closed down and will be completely inaccessible to the public for a number of years, as I understand it, if this minister does not take some action to ensure that these galleries are available to the people of Ontario.

In view of the $11 million extra that the province was about to put in its operating grant, I wonder if the minister has a statement today so that he can assure us that on December 3 these galleries will not be lost to the people of the province for the next 18 months to two years.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, as the honourable member has indicated, I did telephone him to say some of the information I wanted to encompass in a statement like that was not yet available. It is now available. I cannot make the statement today—it isn't ready—but I also felt in the meantime I had answered, in a letter I addressed to him as chairman of the public accounts committee, some of the questions he had raised.

I am sorry if there has been this delay, but I really felt I could best serve this House and the public at large if I waited until I had all the facts before I made my statement. I am not trying to dodge the subject at all, believe me.

BROWDALE FRAUD

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health.

In view of yesterday's decision by Mr. Justice Holland to sentence John Brown to three years for his $975,000 fraud against the government of Ontario, and in view of the fact that the judge expressed the view that any repayment of that amount of money would have to come by separate civil action, does the minister intend to begin such an action on the civil level to recover the money of which the province was defrauded—close to $1 million? Will the minister be taking a civil action to recover that money?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will be discussing that with my colleagues, especially the Minister of Community and Social Services, under whom children's mental health programs now come.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the Ministry of Health was represented by counsel at the proceedings, if I understand it correctly; and since counsel appears to have asked that such compensation be part of the sentence; and in view of the fact that request was already made but denied by the judge on the basis that it ought to be a civil matter, why is there any hesitation at all on the part of the minister in assuring this House some effort will be made via the civil courts to recover the money the people of Ontario have been defrauded of?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it is standard practice in my ministry, wherever possible, to recover sums owing to the ministry. In this particular case, inasmuch as the program was transferred two and a half years ago, before beginning any action I will want to consult with my colleague who is now responsible for the children's mental health programs in general and that one in particular, funded through his ministry, because anything we do is potentially bound to have some impact on the present and current viability of any operations.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: While the minister is doing that, will he also ascertain for the House why the government and the civil servants who were responsible did not pass any cabinet order okaying the budget of Browndale, and why no authority was ever given and no contract arrived at for up to three years, I believe, for the funds that were handed over to Browndale from time to time in that three-year period?

Will he also undertake to tell the House why some of the funds that were given to Browndale were given as operating grants and were spent on capital things, such as the houses in the United States and in Europe and the vast real-estate empire Mr. Brown built up?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will take that as notice on behalf of the ministry in the generic sense, inasmuch as all the records and all the associated staff are no longer in my ministry. They are reporting to and responsible to another ministry.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, can the minister then explain to this House what instructions were given to the counsel appearing on behalf of the Minister of Health? Why was he there and what was the purpose of it, in view of this rather "iffy" situation as it is expressed today?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the Leader of the Opposition I will report back and will include—

Mrs. Campbell: You don't know?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the ministry was involved at the time—and that of course is the reason for the involvement—through the crown law office.

Mr. Speaker: A new question, the honourable the Leader of the Opposition.

COMPLAINTS AGAINST POLICE

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Is the Solicitor General able to assure this House that his much-vaunted and extensively prominent bill with regard to civilian review of police complaints in Metropolitan Toronto will be brought before the House this session, as was originally indicated to the press and to the members of this Legislature? Can he give us the assurance that before we rise that bill will be before us for debate?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was speaking to my House leader; he was indicating to me that he had been discussing this very issue with the House leaders of the other parties as recently as yesterday. I want to indicate to all the members of the Legislature that these are not problems we are not prepared to share with all of the parties.

When the Leader of the Opposition speaks of the "much-vaunted" legislation I am not quite sure what he means by that, but it is clear that the legislation has been requested by the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and the Metro police commission.

The delay in producing this legislation, which I hope will be introduced and which I expect to have introduced before the House rises, is that it is absolutely essential, Mr. Speaker, that this be legislation that police authorities, both the rank and file and the senior officers, responding reasonably feel they can live with. I have to say that, understandably enough, police associations that represent the majority of police officers and the senior officers, police chiefs and senior officers and their governing authorities have different views with respect to some important aspects of this legislation.

We have been attempting to reconcile these differences before we introduce the bill, because I am satisfied that if we don't have legislation both these vital components of any police department feel they can live with, then the people of this province are not going to be well served. We have been making every effort to reconcile those differences. We expect this will happen and that the legislation will indeed be introduced before the House rises.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, and accepting and understanding that any bill that deals with a review procedure of this kind should enjoy at least the active involvement of the police in the drafting of the bill—accepting that, does the minister not concede that in the first place he has had about five years of discussion on this matter to start to get the opinions of police forces? Does he not concede as well that he assured the public in Toronto and in Ontario that he would be moving very swiftly in this session, so we would have a bill on the books—not just something to be introduced but on the books—and what has been the delay between the time he made the promise and now? He surely could have had discussions between then and now.

I remember when a previous Solicitor General tried to introduce a bill dealing with police, he was removed from his position. Does the Solicitor General not feel he might be in for the same fate if he goes ahead with the promise he made to the people?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would have hoped the Leader of the Opposition was really interested in seriously addressing the fundamental issues involved. We have not only consulted with the police authorities, both the police association and police governing authorities and senior officers, but we've consulted citizens' groups and many others who have some interest in this legislation. As a matter of fact, since we announced in September our intention of introducing this legislation, this process has been carried on by senior officials of my ministry on a continuous basis.

With regard to the history of legislation, I can only talk about what I attempted to do during my year as Solicitor General. I don't think the House is really interested in my reviewing the past five years or whatever history is related to this type of legislation, other than to say—

Mr. Cassidy: It is your government, don't disown your colleagues.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Not at all. Mr. Speaker, if the opposition wishes, I can do this. It's going to take me a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I can take them right through the history of this legislation if they want to do it.

First of all, when Mr. Justice Morand reported—

Mr. Renwick: Let's do it in committee. Let's do it in the estimates.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't expect the two opposition parties to be able to even agree on the time of day.

Mr. Speaker, I'm really in a quandary. Here, I'm invited by the leader of the official opposition to give a history of this legislation, but then the New Democratic Party, which of course always has a short simplistic answer to every issue, wants me to abbreviate my response. It is obvious that I should simply resolve the issue by saying the estimates of the Attorney General are presently in progress. I'm prepared to discuss with the opposition critics in some detail the history of this legislation, because it does touch the responsibility of the Attorney General.

They've been talking about the role of the Minister of Transportation and Communications for the last few days. I'm quite prepared to discuss this legislation as well. Just let me reiterate that we are trying to produce legislation that's going to work. We've worked very hard at this legislation and we intend to have this legislation introduced this session.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: While I appreciate the conflict of interest which the Solicitor General has in respect to his role as Attorney General, thus explaining the fence-sitting he's been doing for this long period of time, and knowing this issue goes back at least nine years and we've had two pieces of legislation—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Warner: —will the Attorney General explain why he cannot tell us definitely today that the legislation will be introduced prior to Christmas?

Second, has he rejected out of hand the resolution I placed on the Order Paper just a couple of weeks ago which fully outlines a workable type of procedure for Metropolitan Toronto and presumably for other municipalities which are interested?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have nothing further to add to my previous answers that would be relevant to this issue.

Mr. S. Smith: Just so the record will show it, did I understand the Attorney General to say the legislation will be introduced this session and its passage will be permitted contingent simply upon its acceptance by the opposition parties? Is that what he has said, that as long as we are co-operative the matter will be passed this session? Is that an undertaking from the Attorney General? [2:45]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I repeat what I have said before: I will make every possible effort to introduce the legislation. I expect that it will be introduced, yes. If the legislation is accepted in the form in which it is introduced then I'd like to see it passed, yes. But I can't guarantee I am going to support the passage of legislation that may be changed in certain fundamental principles. I think we'll just have to wait and see.

I assure the Leader of the Opposition that I will make every possible effort to introduce this legislation. I do intend to introduce it; I just can't be precise about the date.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism about a classic case of how the government is failing to use government purchasing as a lever to support domestic industry here in this country.

Can the minister explain how it came about that when the regional municipality of Peel sought proposals for a major portion of its waste recovery plant this summer, at least three interested Canadian companies did not bid on this demonstration project? If the government is committed to using procurement as a means to encourage Canadian technology and Canadian industry, can the minister explain why it was prepared to commit $10 million, plus a piece of Ontario's own land, on the strength of one bid from a huge foreign corporation—the Grumman Corporation of New York?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The leader of the third party is asking me why the regional municipality of Peel did not exercise a preferential purchasing policy in its purchasing decision. If his request is that I investigate and call Peel and ask them the circumstances, I'd be happy to do that.

I am as interested in using government procurement constructively in this country every bit as much as is the leader of the third party. Perhaps he would write or call me about matters like this so that I might have the information for him with regard to a decision made by a municipality in this province. When he raises such matters in the House I would then have all the information at hand in order to answer the question for him and provide some constructive information for both of us at that time.

If I had heard his question correctly, he is apparently asking me why three Canadian firms did not bid on the project. I would hardly be in a position to tell him the reasons why three firms chose not to bid. However, if he will give me the details, I'd be happy to contact those firms and ask them. Perhaps he has asked them and might be interested in relaying that information to me.

Finally, I might conclude by saying I am still waiting for some of the information he said he would have earlier when he told me there were some prospective purchasers of Eldorado Nuclear and asked if I would investigate the rumours. I asked him to give me the source of those rumours and the names of the prospective purchasers, which were the fundamental basis behind his question in the House. If that's the tactic I only ask him to be kind enough to have followed up three weeks later with the basis upon which he asked that question.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I appreciate that the minister is asking me to do the job his staff should be doing on his behalf. I also hear him say quite clearly that even though $10 million in provincial funding is being put into the waste recovery plant in the regional municipality of Peel, that amount of provincial money isn't important enough for him to be concerned about whether the procurement goes to Canadian companies or to American companies.

Could the minister explain why the government would not have taken an aggressive leadership role in helping these three Canadian companies to bid jointly on the waste recovery project or in setting up a joint venture with those Canadian companies in order to develop the Canadian technology in this important area of future development of an industry which will soon be spread across the country?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to permit the leader of the third party to suggest that I didn't consider it was important enough to see if we couldn't get them to implement a preferential purchasing policy when the region—with or without our money—is making a purchase. I specifically said I am interested in seeing exactly that sort of thing happens and that municipalities, boards of education and everyone else begin to adopt appropriate procurement policies.

With regard to the latter part of the member's question, if his information is—and I would like to hear it—that they have approached this government and asked for our assistance in putting together a bid, in doing research and development and in creating a consortium in order to bid on that project, then I will also investigate that and explain to him the reason behind the government's decision. I could be wrong, because of course he hasn't told me the details in advance so that I could investigate, but I suspect those companies did not approach us for that kind of assistance. If they have, I will find out the circumstances behind that approach.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I do draw the minister's attention to the fact that this question was raised briefly in the House back on November 1, and clearly the minister's officials haven't responded to that.

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Cassidy: My question, Mr. Speaker, is this: Is the minister not aware in his responsibilities as Minister of Industry and Tourism that last fall Grumman Ecosystems Corporation entered into an agreement with Reed Paper to capture the solid waste recovery market in Canada and that their first project is the Peel plant?

Given the fact that the government and Peel have already dealt a severe blow to Canadian companies that might get into this area on the ground floor, will the minister now make a commitment actively to promote a consortium of Canadian companies to develop this capability, rather than just simply waiting until somebody comes knocking on his door? Is there not a role for leadership from the Ontario government to ensure Canadian companies do play a role in this area of technology?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must say to the leader of the third party that this government, all of my field staff and all of the staff here at Queen's Park are taking quite a leadership role in encouraging industries for the first time to consider entering into and forming consortia. If he wants to pick one particular sector and suggest they did not respond to the general invitation that is out there, then I have to say to the leader of the third party what he's suggesting is this government go out and find instances in which a firm or a group of firms, not Canadian-owned, is bidding on some projects and going into an industry, and that we should, as a government, put out resources, collect firms and become partners in order to compete with those private-sector investors.

I have to say to him that that is an historic position of his party—there is nothing new about that—to have government put in money to form consortia or whatever to compete against private-sector initiative in creating jobs. That simply isn't our view of the world. It's not our view of the way capitalism ought to operate in this country.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis), I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development about the Niagara Escarpment. It is particularly appropriate since the proposal plan for the Niagara Escarpment was being released in Collingwood just a few minutes ago.

Since the Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet (Mr. McCague), told people at the Grey-Bruce Progressive Conservative annual meeting a few days ago he could foresee the Niagara Escarpment Planning and Development Act being rescinded once the Niagara Escarpment plan has been adopted, can the provincial secretary tell this House exactly what plans the government has concerning that important piece of legislation? Secondly, what plans does the government have to ensure future development along the escarpment conforms both to the plan and also to the principle of the creation of a continuous natural environment along the escarpment?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I will be making a statement tomorrow. As the leader of the third party mentioned, the commission released the report today. Copies of my statement will be sent to members who are interested. The determination as to the future plans of the commission has not yet been made.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the proposed plan recommends that a ministry be designated to monitor and keep an eye on the implementation of the plans, could the minister tell the House whether the government intends to abolish the Niagara Escarpment Commission or is that still to be decided? Could he assure the House that the ministry that monitors the implementation of the plan will be a ministry that is dedicated to protecting the environment, such as the Ministry of the Environment, and not a ministry that is dedicated to raping the environment, such as the Ministry of Natural Resources or the Ministry of Housing?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member knows full well this government has on numerous occasions indicated the Niagara Escarpment area would be preserved. It is a unique area, so the honourable member should have no fear; that area will be preserved.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Could I ask if the minister is aware the general government policy is set out in the act at the present time by such statements as: "The purpose of this act is to provide for the maintenance of the Niagara Escarpment and land in its vicinity substantially as a continuous natural environment; to ensure only such development occurs as is compatible with that natural environment; to ensure the objectives; to ensure that all new development is compatible with the purpose of this act, expressed in section 2; to provide for public access," and seven additional objectives?

If the act is rescinded it will destroy the whole principle of preservation and, in fact, be a liquidation of the policy your government has stated. Is that what the minister wants to do, and if not, will he give the commitment that he will attempt only to amend the act and will leave intact the stated purposes and the objectives of the act?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: As I indicated earlier, the members will be receiving a copy. A meeting has been set for next Tuesday. I believe the honourable member has received, and if he has not, he will be receiving an invitation to attend this meeting and all these matters will be fully discussed.

Mr. Foulds: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: What is your point of order? There is nothing out of order.

Mr. Foulds: The point of order is with regard to the statement the minister just—

Mr. Speaker: He has taken it as notice. He will have a statement tomorrow, and members will be able to question him further in detail. There is really nothing out of order in question period—unless it is the Speaker, and that is permissible.

Mr. Foulds: Can I try a point of privilege?

Mr. Speaker: You can try.

Mr. Foulds: Is it not the privilege of a member of this Legislature to receive a policy statement by the government simultaneously, at least, with the statement being made in Collingwood? There is ample precedent for this government making—

Mr. Speaker: No, that is not a privilege of any member of this House.

Mr. Foulds: A point of protest, then.

AMBULANCE SERVICES

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health concerning our Kitchener-Waterloo ambulance strike. Is the minister aware that an offer of an increase in pay was rejected by the employees because it was contingent on the approval of the ministry to provide the necessary funds to cover the increase? If so, can the minister publicly state today that sufficient funds will be provided so that condition can be removed from the proposed settlement offer, with the hope that the parties can then quickly resolve their remaining differences and settle the strike?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I answered that question on Tuesday—I think it was from this member's colleague, the member for Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney). I made the point that obviously we don't cover—and I don't think he would want us to say that whatever settlement comes along we will cover penny for penny, nickel for nickel; but I can give the member the assurance that we have in all other circumstances ensured any review of the budget as a result of any settlement would provide for the maintenance of an acceptable, satisfactory level of ambulance services. I think that is about as far as I can go in that regard.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Would the minister convey those assurances to the parties involved, with the hope that even that involvement of his good offices in this matter possibly would be helpful in getting this strike completed?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am obviously as anxious as the honourable member to see that happen. It is my understanding the parties were made aware of that position a long time ago, but I will assure myself again that they are aware of it.

Mr. Breugh: Supplementary: I am wondering how the minister can make that kind of statement when, quoting from the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, "The company has so far resisted arbitration because it says it doesn't know if the Ministry of Health will provide extra funds in the event a higher than expected wage rate is awarded through arbitration."

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In any of the negotiations respecting any aspect of the health-care system we do not and never have adopted the position we cover any arbitrated settlement penny for penny. What we do is receive the submission from the hospital, health unit, ambulance service, as to the effect of it. What they submit is required to maintain what we would mutually agree is an acceptable level of service. If that's the case, then we cover it.

I cannot and will not give the kind of assurance that will cover no matter what, because I think that would obviously throw the whole negotiation and arbitration process into a cocked hat.

Mr. Sweeney: Since there is now a precise offer on the table—I mean there's no question about what it is—why can't the minister, as my colleague from Kitchener has suggested, simply tell them, "Look, we can or we cannot meet that offer"?

We are not asking the minister, as he suggested to me a couple of days ago, to write a blank cheque; we appreciate that comment. But we now have a specific figure. Can the minister say yes or no, and if not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I don't think we do have an exact figure in terms of the total impact, but if the parties were to arrive at an agreement and submit it then we would cost it out very quickly and get back to them very quickly, just as we've done in other localities.

HANDICAPPED PERSONS' RIGHTS

Mr. Mackenzie: A question of the Minister of Labour: Can he explain to the House

why, with his statement in the House today, he has done exactly what we are trying to prevent? Why has the minister discriminated against and segregated the handicapped in Ontario by isolating them with a separate bill dealing for the moment with only two of the issues instead of comprehensive changes to the human rights code, in view of the comprehensive nature of the review?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: With the greatest respect to the member, I think he does a disservice to the important nature of the legislation introduced today. It shows clear and precise conviction and dedication over the issue of the rights of handicapped.

I would ask him, before he pursues this line of thought, to read the bill and read that it goes beyond even the areas discussed in Life Together. Therefore, it is in the view of this government and in my view a very progressive piece of legislation, as are the other thrusts that are mentioned today as our priorities at this time.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary to the minister: Is the minister then prepared to assure the House that what is in that bill is not locked in and does not prohibit amendments to other bills or regulations—the Workmen's Compensation Board, for example—and can we be assured it doesn't lock out any right of a worker to appeal discrimination on the basis of, say, a knee injury if he's an injured workman?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that refers to disabilities. There's no suggestion that it in any way hinders the rights of anyone with a disability from bringing a complaint.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: Can the minister assure us that in bringing in the bill over the handicapped and disabled in this way, rather than as an all-inclusive amendment to the Ontario Human Rights Code, the question on employment forms, "Have you ever received WCB benefits?" can now no longer be asked?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I haven't given specific thought to that question but certainly it was my intention all along that this bill would prevent that very sort of problem. If that's not so, then let's deal with it.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Revenue: In view of the fact that there are a number of properties in the city of North York, particularly oil company properties, which have some of their land in so-called agricultural use and by doing this, they are costing the taxpayers of North York some $300,000—I'm wondering if the minister is aware of this and if he is—

Interjections.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, can I have order?

I am wondering if the minister is aware of this situation. If so, could he indicate to the House whether what these property owners are doing is totally in accordance with the Assessment Act, or whether there is any discretion on the part of the ministry or the assessors so this situation could be changed?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I am aware of this problem. It is not one that is restricted to North York by any means. I have had complaints from the city of Mississauga and other municipalities, not only about people who happen to own oil companies but also people who have land for development purposes.

The land is leased to farmers who are using it for agricultural purposes. Under the Assessment Act, if land is being used for agricultural purposes it must be assessed as farm land. Certainly, my assessors are within the act, as it is now written.

I have had my senior staff check into this matter and it is being discussed to see if there is any solution to it. There are many problems inherent in this particular matter. The question of defining a farmer and a farm alone is one of the major problems. It has been under discussion in many committees in this Legislature for a long time and we still do not have what we consider to be a proper definition.

This matter is under close scrutiny by the ministry. The other part of the problem is the direction of this government has been to make the most use of the available farm land in the province. This, of course, does permit that to take place.

Mr. Rotenberg: Supplementary: Recognizing, as the minister has indicated, the need to preserve what I will call legitimate agricultural land in the province, would the minister undertake to look into what seems to be an inequity, in that land which is really not agricultural is being used for that purpose, apparently to avoid taxation? Also, would the minister look into the possibility of some changes in the rules or legislation to correct this apparent inequity?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: As I indicated in my first reply, we are looking into the matter. However, I don't think I would like to categorize it as a tax evasion by anyone. The law is there, they are within the law. Our assessors visit each one of these properties every year to see if it is being used for agricultural purposes or not. As long as the act exists as it is, it is certainly not a tax evasion. It may be a loophole, but is certainly is not an evasion. An evasion is a little different thing.

We are looking at it. I cannot assure the member there's an easy solution to the problem.

Mr. Epp: Since the minister has admitted it is obviously a loophole of which these companies are able to take advantage within the law, I would like to ask him why he is so reluctant to make a commitment to this Legislature and to the people that he will plug that loophole post haste. I would think he has a responsibility to the people of Ontario to plug that loophole as quickly as possible. Why is he so reluctant? Why does he have to consult?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Whether or not I am reluctant is a matter of opinion. I have already indicated I would look into the matter. I am not about to make a decision on a matter as important as this at the beck and call of the member for Waterloo North. I am prepared to look into it; I have made the commitment and I am not hedging on it.

VANDALISM

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I would like to respond to a question asked on November 15 by the member for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy). The honourable member asked for an update on the newest Ontario Housing Corporation building for senior citizens being constructed in Thunder Bay on the Red River Road. This tower was scheduled to be turned over to the corporation later this month, but because of the severe damage caused by vandals it will likely not become part of our property and assets until May of next year.

The damage to this building occurred as a result of vandals turning on the fire hoses on the top floor of the building. They remained on overnight, causing severe damage to the main structure of the building and necessitating the replacement of the electrical wiring, floors, Gyproc and doors in the building. The estimated cost of repairs is something close to $500,000. The building is still the responsibility of the developer and I assure this House there is no problem with the insurance company, on behalf of the contractor, looking after the repairs to the structure.

I will keep the member advised of the progress of this structure.

CHEESE PRODUCTION

Mr. O'Neil: I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food concerning the cheese industry in the province.

Can the minister tell us what he and his government are presently doing to obtain an increased milk quota from Ottawa so that the cheddar cheese industry in Ontario will be able to remain viable and also be able to fill markets that are available for their products?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, in response to the honourable member, in the last fiscal year the dairy farmers in Ontario only filled a little over 95 per cent of their industrial milk quota. On top of this, the National Dairy Council of Canada increased Ontario's portion by some three per cent. If we apply what farmers supplied last year to this year's quota it would take last year's deliveries back to 92.5 per cent or 93 per cent. This year there is quota for the farmers to increase their production of industrial milk by a little better than seven per cent.

When we get into the different price ranges for the different levels of milk, the farmers were afraid of overproduction—I don't think I need go into that and the effects it has on the farm economy. In order to encourage the farmers to produce up to their quota, the government has assured the Ontario Milk Marketing Board it will put in $6.2 million. That would have to be my answer to the honourable member.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: Could the minister tell us whether or not there will be larger increases this year than what he is talking about now? In other words, is the minister planning to try to get some more milk quota from Ottawa so they can produce beyond that increase of seven or eight per cent?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I am worried about the other side of it. As I suggested, our farmers only produced 95 per cent of quota last year.

Mr. S. Smith: Why?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: They were afraid of overproducing.

Mr. S. Smith: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That is right. There is no argument. They were afraid to go over their quota. Last year was one year they could have produced up to the 100 per cent.

If the honourable members care to look back, we all know there were farmers who only received about $2.80 a hundredweight in the year previous because of their overproduction. Our farmers were afraid of doing that again, so we as a province have agreed to put in the $6.2 million—which will remove that worry of the farmers—to let them produce up to the quota.

What I am concerned about, as the Minister of Agriculture and Food, is that we do have this quota allocation. If the farmers don't produce up to it and the farmers of Quebec, for instance, produce 100 per cent of their quota, the national dairy council is put in a very difficult situation. I have conveyed this to the milk marketing board. I have conveyed it to the farm organizations. In Belleville yesterday I conveyed to the farmers there what the situation really is. No doubt the member has had it conveyed to him. If we don't come up to our quota, the national dairy council has to get that milk from somewhere. I have done everything I know to encourage our farmers to produce up to the 100 per cent.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: The minister didn't refer to what he had done in Ottawa. Can I ask him if he has made representation to the federal minister and what representation he has made?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I spoke for half an hour on the phone to the federal minister as recently as an hour and a half ago.

Mr. Samis: Are you any wiser?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Much wiser.

If the honourable member was in our position and had access to the Minister of Agriculture for Canada, I assure him he would be much wiser, yes; but there has been continuous dialogue.

[3:15]

CHLORINE LEAKS

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General.

In view of the four chlorine leaks that have occurred in pulp and paper mills in northwestern Ontario in the last month—specifically at Marathon, Red Rock, Great Lakes in Thunder Bay, and most recently at Terrace Bay on Tuesday last—can the minister explain why the company on whose property the leak occurs appears to have the sole discretion to decide whether or not the leak is serious enough to notify the police chief and the responsible authorities?

In particular, can the Solicitor General explain why Kimberly-Clark of Canada Limited failed to notify police chief Bill Zroback when a chlorine leak occurred at the Terrace Bay mill at 11 a.m. last Tuesday, particularly as the wind was blowing from the north directly over the town at the time?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am not aware of the circumstances of that particular occurrence. I will inquire into it and report back to the honourable member.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, in his investigation can the Solicitor General inquire into two matters: First, should not the notification be mandatory? Second, will he determine why it is that the police chief, who has the emergency plan and is the key contact person in the community, found out only accidentally, because an OPP officer stationed a mile away at a service station detected the leak and notified his superiors, who in turn notified the town police chief?

Can the minister also find out why Kimberly-Clark, contrary to the emergency plan, placed a tractor across the road that gave egress from the mill and if an evacuation of the mill had been necessary this would have in fact obstructed the evacuation of the mill?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I am very strongly of the view that if there is an accident or occurrence of the nature and character described by the honourable member and if there is any likelihood of any risk of emission that is going to affect the health of the citizens of that community, the police chief should be advised. I will certainly inquire into why he was not advised, if that is in fact correct, and I am sure that is the belief held by the honourable member.

BEVERAGE SUPPLIES

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food: Considering the amount of imported foreign beverage in the form of coffee that is used throughout the Legislature at the different committees, et cetera, would the minister use his good offices and persuasive ability to inform those people who do the ordering and serving that possibly a beverage such as milk or apple juice would better help our farmers and help the position put forward by the member for Quinte (Mr. O'Neil)?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I believe this ordering comes under Mr. Speaker's office, so I will consider that message conveyed to you, sir.

FOREIGN PURCHASES OF AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr. Riddell: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

What kind of response did he receive from the clerks of the townships pertaining to foreign investment in farm land here in Ontario; what did the response indicate; and how much weight is the minister going to put on that kind of information, considering there is no way the clerks would know the source of funding of these lands if they happened to be purchased by some local resident or some local corporation?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I have had an excellent response from the clerks of this province. I sent out inquiry notes to approximately 500 municipal clerks. As of yesterday morning, I had responses from 300 of those 500, or 60 per cent of the clerks.

My staff estimates we have about 16 million acres of agricultural land in Ontario. The clerks I have heard from represent municipalities containing 10.4 million acres or approximately two thirds of the land. While we have only received word from 60 per cent of the clerks, the area represents 66 per cent of what we estimate is the total agricultural land. From the 66 per cent response, I find there are about 76,000 acres of land owned by people residing outside of Canada; or approximately three quarters of one per cent shown in the response.

In going into this more deeply, I have phoned some of the clerks and I have visited some of the municipalities where there seems to be a high ratio. I had a response from one of the municipalities.

Mr. Wildman: Algoma.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —Algoma, where 14 per cent of the land was owned by people residing outside Canada.

Let me take that one a step further. In that particular case, they didn't report any farmers, but they did report 14 per cent outside ownership; so it really wasn't agricultural land, but that is in that 0.75 per cent. With respect to any of those I have inquired of, I find that of this foreign ownership, about two thirds consists of people residing in the United States; and about one third, or one quarter of one per cent, of people residing in central Europe.

I would have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that sample is very light, maybe one in 25 in cases where I have phoned the clerk. That is the report as of yesterday morning.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: Since there is enough concern about this matter in Ontario, which led me to introduce a private member's bill last session to have all those foreign owners disclose the land they had purchased and which led the minister's own colleague, the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton), to introduce a similar bill this session, stating when he introduced it, apparently, that the government is not doing enough, will the minister take a look at both private members bills and come to some decision as to whether or not he thinks he should bring in a bill of his own to find out exactly how much of this land has passed into foreign ownership? Doesn't the minister think that would be the route to go, rather than playing around with all these unreliable sources as he is doing at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I don't consider the municipal clerks to be an unreliable source. I have a very high respect for the municipal clerks of this province. I think that statement is unfair. Yes, I will take a look at the two private bills.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE EDUCATION

Ms. Gigantes: I have a question for the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker. As the minister had promised to respond by October to the strong local desire to see the creation of a French-language school board in Ottawa-Carleton, is she now prepared to make that response and also to inform us what decision she plans to meet the needs of 1,500 French-language high-school students of the Carleton board?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The answers to the questions, Mr. Speaker, are no and no. I am hopeful in the not-too-distant future I will be able to make that response to the school boards in the Ottawa-Carleton region.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Could we ask the minister at least to give her endorsement to the creation today of the Conseil francophone de planification scolaire d'Ottawa-Carleton as a local organization which will take the transitional step towards the formation of a French-language school board for Ottawa-Carleton.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted the francophone trustees in the Ottawa-Carleton region are providing a model, which I think might be useful to all public bodies in that area, a model of co-operative effort in support of their particular concerns. I am certainly pleased to support it in that light.

MISSISSAUGA TRAIN FIRE

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) has been in and out of the House several times. He is not here now. On November 15 the member for Windsor-Sandwich raised a question concerning the possible formation of chlorinated hydrocarbons during the recent fire in Mississauga.

I can assure the honourable member that officers of my ministry were aware of the possibility and the TAGA 3000 was used to great effect at this time.

The only chlorinated organic compound which was found in measurable concentrations was chloro-aceto-phenone, which is what is called a lachrymator. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, I have been there and had the experience of feeling it in my eyes, as has the Attorney General. You don't have to worry about knowing when it is present; you can sure feel it. It does make the eyes water. The material is formed by the action of sunlight on a dilute gaseous mixture of styrene and chlorine and in this instance was formed in very low concentrations. The maximum level detected was approximately 20 parts per billion, but one certainly could feel it very readily.

Samples of mud and water taken at the crash site were also analysed and the sample showed trace quantities of chlorinated styrene compounds. However, these latter compounds were apparently in too low a concentration in the air to be detected by our TAGA unit which, as the members probably know, measures in parts per trillion.

Regular tests were also made for hydrochloric acid and phosgene in the air, but again no measurable quantities were detected by the TAGA.

Finally, I would like to lay to rest any fears that PCBs might have been formed during the train crash and subsequent fire. I can confirm that it would not have been possible, since there were no biphenols at the site to react with the chlorine and form PCBs.

I have another answer to another question from the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio). I could do it today or tomorrow.

Mr. Bounsall: A supplementary to the minister's answer: Were air samples taken right from the very start of the combustion with the chlorine mixing with it and were those samples run through gas chromatographs to detect the whole range of chlorinated hydrocarbons that were likely to be formed? Was this done right at the beginning and were the air samples subjected to the proper qualitative and quantitative analyses?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In order to be completely fair on this matter, if the member is asking me if it was done within the first day, the answer is yes. If he is asking me if it was done within the first five minutes, the answer is no. We were on the scene with our instruments and TAGA 3000 was operating in the first day. We had other less sensitive equipment there within hours. We had TAGA 3000 there on the first day.

TRANSIT SERVICE

Mr. Stong: I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications. In answer to my question on the Order Paper concerning public transportation, the minister reaffirmed his commitment to provide and encourage public transportation and he recognized the need to tailor services to public acceptance and demand.

In the light of that reaffirmation, when will the minister give effect to the undertaking he gave to me in that same answer to "ensure that interregional services are maintained in the most effective and efficient manner?" When will he re-establish the GO bus services eliminated when the route on Bayview Avenue was turned over by Toronto Transit Operating Authority to the town of Markham?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, we would be more than happy to have TATO A reinstitute the GO bus service as quickly as we can possibly implement it, but as a lawyer the member should know I am told we happen to have a legal agreement with the town of Markham which pressured us to remove the service from that particular route.

We also had agreement from the town of Richmond Hill, which has now written to me and told me they are rescinding that concurrence to that change in service, for which I don't blame them because the town of Markham has not lived up to expectations, as I am told, to provide an adequate bus service on Bayview Avenue.

It is my belief that the Toronto Area Transit Operating Authority service should be re-implemented by the joint study on inter-regional and municipal transit services in that particular area.

But at this moment, at the request of the town of Markham we removed that service. We would like to reimplement it but we are not going to do it until I am satisfied we are not leaving ourselves open to legal action by the town of Markham.

Mr. Stong: Supplementary: Why would the minister allow TATO A, which is a branch of his government, to run away and contradict the policy of his ministry and enter into an agreement such as they did without being first aware of all of the facts—mainly that Markham could not provide the service that TATO A and the GO bus had been providing?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am not sure that is a correct statement. I won't accuse the member of inadvertently misleading the House, Mr. Speaker, but I just don't think that is a correct statement. How could we be aware that Markham could not? Because if Markham wished, they could supply the service that is required—

Mr. Stong: A little bit of study by TATO A would solve the problem. TATO A didn't even look at it.

Hon. Mr. Snow: TATO A did not recommend—with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is now, by way of his interjections, inadvertently if not intentionally misleading the House.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Because he is saying that TATO A did not look at it. TATO A looked at this very carefully. A joint study was carried out and the removal of the service from Bayview Avenue was not as recommended by TATO A but was the wish of the town of Markham, which happened to operate the local transit service in that community.

If the local transit services in the municipalities of the region of York could develop a better communication between themselves to operate a more efficient municipal transit service, there would not be this problem.

Mr. Speaker: Time for oral questions has expired.

REPORT

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee has considered two points of order raised in the House on October 11, 1979. The point of issue was the mechanism by which answers could be provided to written questions when the House was recessed.

Standing order 33(d) permits the tabling of documents by ministries simply by depositing them with the Clerk of the House on any day. The committee therefore recommends that answers to written questions should be tabled with the Clerk as soon as they are ready, whether or not the House is in session.

The second point arose on November 9, 1979, and concerns ministers answering questions which were asked at an earlier date.

On occasion, answers to such questions are given when the member who asked the question is not in the House. The committee believes that this problem can be resolved without recourse to a change in the standing orders. The committee recommends that except in unusual circumstances, ministers should refrain from answering a previously asked question until the member who asked it is present in the House.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE OMBUDSMAN

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the recommendations of the seventh report of the select committee on the Ombudsman be referred to the committee of the whole House for consideration.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL

HANDICAPPED PERSONS' RIGHTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Elgie moved first reading of Bill 188, An Act to Provide for the Rights of Handicapped Persons.

Motion agreed to.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 336 and 337 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 4739.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

WINDSOR-QUEBEC RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Ashe moved resolution 37:

That in the opinion of the House the government should urge the federal government of Canada to upgrade the Windsor-Quebec rail corridor to accommodate an electric, LRC (light, rapid, comfortable) train service.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, I would hope to have about five minutes for some closing discussion and some closing statistics later on in the debate.

Improving the transportation system in this country is one of the most difficult and important tasks we as Canadians are forced to contend with. We are faced with the unique problem of having to move a relatively small population great distances. Our cold climate, compounded with geological roadblocks of mountains, tundra and extensive wetlands, are enough to tax the resources of any country. Add to this a relatively small population and large distances and the economics of transportation become a seeming quagmire, almost unsolvable.

As with most problems, resorting to one solution is usually a great mistake. Solving these unique transportation difficulties will not be an easy task. Its success will depend on a broad mix of transportation modes, picking the most acceptable mode of intercity travel for a particular situation regardless of past traditions and past habits. Although the distance between Montreal and Toronto may be similar to the distance between Edmonton and Fort McMurray, we must realize the climate and population differences may well dictate the implementation of an entirely different solution.

One part of this passenger transportation puzzle is going to be based on rail service. For reasons I will outline a little later, an improved electrified rail line in the Quebec-to-Windsor corridor appears to be an excellent solution to the transport problem in this specific area.

First I want to make it very clear that this rail line is not the system that now exists. Our present passenger rail service has improved somewhat after the advent of Via Rail, but rail lines are a long way from where they should be. The reason for this is the long, sad legacy of neglect from successive Canadian governments, a legacy which is costing the Canadian taxpayer dearly.

Let us take a moment to look at some recent rail history in Canada. The most recent definitive study of transportation in Canada was the MacPherson royal commission on transportation in 1961. Despite the age of this report some of the recommendations are still valid today, although they have never been acted upon. The operating deficit of Canadian passenger train services in 1958 was estimated at $78 million. The MacPherson commission study emphasized the change from a monopolistic approach to a new, more competitive transportation environment in Canada, an environment in which the road and air modes played an increasingly significant role. In the passenger sector, this spelled the end for the railway, which could no longer compete with the auto, the bus and the airplane.

If the MacPherson commission judged traditional passenger rail service obsolete in 1961, one can well imagine the shape it is in now. By and large there has been little or no change. As affluence increased and car ownership became universal, roads were continually improved and superhighways were built. Fuel costs stayed relatively low and, as a result, local and intermediate-range traffic became virtually monopolized by the automobile and, where traffic was large enough, by the bus; all at the expense of the railway.

What did these other forms of transportation offer? The average speed of cars and buses reached 60 to 70 miles per hour and intercity jet travel developed rapidly. The other transportation means offered flexibility, high frequency of service, comfort and privacy; even the limited comfort of the bus was well compensated for by a lower fare.

For pleasure and family travel, the car became extensively used; even for the longest transcontinental trips. The long-haul market was taken over by the airplane because of its high performance and speed, comfort and economy. The transcontinental trains indeed all but vanished.

The decay of train travel reached new heights in the 1970s. It became impossible to depend on the regularity of trains. In 1972, on the Montreal-Toronto prime passenger run, only 72 per cent of the trains arrived on time; on time meaning with less than a six-minute delay.

During the winter months only half of the trains were on time and this figure plummeted to a miserable 24 per cent in February. During that month only one train arrived on time, and delays of up to three and four hours were not uncommon.

Even this sad record could not rival that of the transcontinental trains. During the worst two-week winter period, two trains never reached their destinations at all and others were delayed by as much as 50 hours.

It becomes easy to understand the reason for the decline in rail travel when these figures are kept in mind and put into proper perspective.

The frequency in the scheduling of trains to and from key cities became atrocious. In 1973, on the Montreal-Ottawa run there were a total of seven direct trains, as compared to 18 express-bus runs and 17 air flights. No trains were scheduled to leave after 6 p.m. from either city. On the Montreal-Toronto run there were only two non-stop trains daily, compared to 38 flights and seven bus runs. There was little or no convenience in travel by train.

More important than punctuality and convenience was the incredible decline in equipment quality and comfort. Even if the price was comparable to other forms of travel and even if trains were as dependable, if the comfort factor was low it would put a very big dent in the business. In fact, this is exactly what happened.

Reports that appear in the daily press tell repeatedly of malfunctioning air conditioning and toilets, of poor food, of poor service and of maintenance deficiencies and a general lack of cleanliness. Except for 25 10-year-old trains and the two turbos—which have had trouble in themselves—the average age of passenger rolling stock in Canada is over 27 years. This average is taken from over 1,100 cars, so I think it is a significant figure on which to draw an average.

Breakdowns of equipment are frequent. Dirty, 60-year-old coaches and even baggage cars are known to have been used to carry passengers. Shortages of equipment often occur. There is even an absence of government-enforced standards of service quality for passenger rail in Canada. The entire passenger rail service became obsolete.

The maintenance of these obsolete train services has cost the Canadian taxpayer dearly. Since 1967, passenger rail has been maintained in Canada through government order and subsidy to the tune of 80 per cent of audited losses. Subsidy payments have risen from $66 million in 1971 to just under $200 million in 1977. The forecast subsidy payment for 1980 will pass the $300 million mark.

These figures are staggering and become even more meaningful when subsidies are expressed in terms of revenue per passenger mile. The rail subsidy per passenger mile is about four times larger than the air subsidy and eight times larger than the car subsidy.

It is obvious that some kind of government subsidy must be given to the passenger rail service. With few exceptions, passenger rail is subsidized by governments all over the world, but on examination of these subsidies it was discovered that the losses per passenger mile were highest in Canada by a factor of eight compared with Japan and about three compared with West Germany.

The Canadian taxpayer pays more for the support of the railways than any of his western counterparts and what does he get for his money? He gets the most obsolete and poorest quality transportation system of a rail nature in the western world.

You may ask, Mr. Speaker, what has this vast amount of money been spent on? I will tell you where that money has been spent. It has been spent on the maintenance of the most obsolete train equipment in the world. Between 1971 and 1977, over $1 billion of public money was spent on the maintenance of passenger rail in Canada.

I admit the situation is not good, but that does not mean we should sit back and do nothing. Admittedly, there are pitfalls in pursuing some sort of passenger rail service. There are also great benefits. If nothing else, the Canadian government has seen the need for consolidating all passenger rail service in this country. Via Rail Canada Incorporated was set up in 1977 to do just that. It has been designed to integrate passenger operations into one corporate structure which will be totally dedicated to the rail passenger.

The job before Via Rail is a formidable one. It is faced with upgrading stations and onboard services, introducing a better system of reservations, making arrangements for convenient intermodal transfers and connections, refurbishing old equipment and acquiring new trains. Some progress has been made but not enough to reduce the losses significantly.

One important innovation is close to implementation, fortunately. A new computer reservation system which will automate ticketing goes into service next March. Developed by Air Canada, it will keep track of all seats and services available from Via, eliminating the long delays now encountered in mailing a reservation or even reaching a clerk on clogged telephone lines.

Via was charged with the responsibility of reducing the government's costs for rail passenger operations, increasing rail patronage under a single management and eliminating the duplication of services that existed under CN and CP Rail. To complete this task, it purchased the passenger rolling stock of both railways. This spring it will begin testing four diesel rail cars it has refurbished with modern interiors, improved aerodynamics and more powerful engines before going ahead with the remaining two it acquired from the traditional carriers. A selective refurbishing program is also under way in coaches and sleeping cars. This new equipment will provide some much-needed improvement in this area.

The key to a viable passenger train service is high speed. It seems that Via is moving in the right direction in other areas. An improved reservation system means improved customer access. New cars will mean more comfort. One organization should eliminate duplication of services. But none of these improvements will be worth anything unless Via can put into service high-speed trains through high-density areas.

To attain those high speeds, the government of Canada is going to be forced to make a substantial commitment of capital. Without this capital, there can be no improvement on passenger roadbeds. If there is no improvement in the roadbeds and signaling, Via schedules will not be significantly shortened and Via Rail's competitive position cannot possibly be improved.

Via has $90 million invested in 22 LRC locomotives and 50 coaches. This new rolling stock is designed to operate at 120 miles per hour, but if the roadbeds are not improved then the stock will be unable to reach its designed speed capability and that $90 million will be literally down the drain.

It is very important that we learn from others. A key lesson to be learned is provided by the National Passenger Corporation in the United States, commonly called Amtrak. As in the case of Via Rail, the purpose of Amtrak was to consolidate and nationalize passenger rail service to arrest the climb of deficits and make passenger rail eventually pay its own way. It is now conceded these objectives are further away than ever and, in fact, they're not attainable by present means.

Amtrak was established in 1971 and by 1977 had accumulated an operating deficit of $1.8 billion. The subsidy in the 1978 fiscal year reached $779 million or about 200 per cent of total revenue. The US Department of Transport has estimated that Amtrak will need over $12 billion in subsidies through 1989 or more than $1 billion per year. Why then pursue a similar operation in Canada with this record? The answer is simple.

Despite a higher density of population in the United States, the American public would not use an outdated rail service. In 1979, 91 per cent of all routes were operated at average scheduled speeds of below 55 miles per hour. A system which relies on an average scheduled speed of 47 miles per hour on many long-distance trains cannot possibly compete with newer and faster modes of transportation. About 90 per cent of the route mileage is made up of runs in excess of 500 miles and these runs are just not proving feasible.

These mounting deficits will likely induce further cuts until passenger rail operations are limited to short-haul runs at high speed in densely populated regions. One area already planned is the Boston-Washington corridor. This is the domain in which modern rail is indeed truly competitive. Unless the course now chartered for passenger rail in Canada is drastically changed, Via Rail can be expected to duplicate Amtrak's expensive experience.

That is not to say Via Rail will definitely follow Amtrak's not-so-bright guiding light. Via Rail must have the necessary capital needed to upgrade the roadbed so that competitive travel time can be achieved. Via is on the way to improving other facets of train travel, but it must not ignore the factor that will make or break passenger rail in Canada. Via Rail must have better control of its costs if it is to prioritize its needs and respond accordingly, and that is not at present the case.

Via does not control two thirds of its costs. This portion of money consists of moneys paid to the operating railways. They include payments for roadbed usage, maintenance, traffic control, ownership cost of facilities, the share of two superintendents' costs and so on. If they do not gain control of this spending then turning Via Rail into a money-making proposition is going to be just like trying to nail jelly to the wall.

One vice-president of Via Rail, Mr. R. Bechamp, has asked a rather poignant question: "Would any of you invest in a bankrupt company which had no control over two thirds of its costs, had no authority to monitor productivity and no means of amputating money-losing sectors of its business?" Mr. Speaker, if there are any members present or who will be present later who would make such an investment, then perhaps we can do business.

Another large benefit of this resolution would be the utilization of one of this province's greatest resources, a resource we have in great abundance. I am, of course, referring to electricity. Ontario has no main-line electric railroad today. Coal, and then diesel power, completely displaced the electric railroad which at one time was one of Ontario Hydro's first major loads.

Many railroads are again looking at electrification because of rising fuel costs, a desire to limit their dependence on a single fuel and the need to increase the freight capacity of certain lines. A major study is at present under way by the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport, Queen's University, sponsored by the railway advisory committee of the Railway Association of Canada, to assess the potential and problems of electrification. A major problem is the high capital cost for the overhead power supply and, of course, a new signalling system.

The electric train represents a moving load of approximately 20 megawatts. For the line from Toronto to Montreal the peak load is estimated to be in the range of 80 to 120 megawatts, a relatively insignificant demand on the Ontario Hydro system. The construction of a major electrified line of 300 to 400 miles is probably years away from completion. The expansion of railroad electrification in Ontario will be slow, of course, because of the high capital cost.

Another drawback is the lack of high-density long-haul lines to justify electrification. However, one such area does exist: the Quebec-Windsor rail corridor. The Science Council of Canada has made an important recommendation in a paper entitled, Canada as a Conserver Society. It has listed, under a heading of "Things To Do Immediately," the following:

"Intercity buses average over 110 passenger-miles per gallon and computer trains can achieve better than 120 passenger-miles per gallon. However, present intercity trains average only 25 because of low utilization. In view of the fact that air travel is one third to one quarter as energy efficient as rail travel, railways in the high-density Windsor to Quebec City corridor should be upgraded.

"Electrification, too, has potential. Where the capital costs can be justified and where electricity comes from hydro or nuclear plants, electrified trains are more energy efficient than their diesel counterparts. Electrification would save liquid fuel and could lead to better utilization and lower costs."

That report was written in September 1972, over two years ago. I am saddened that a member of this House has to bring a resolution of this type into the Legislature at this time. The government of Canada should have been moving in this direction years ago; but the fact remains that nothing has been done. The only way the passenger rail system in Canada can be saved, in my view, is by moving towards an electrified light railcar line in high-density areas, such as the Quebec-Windsor corridor.

I hope this resolution, with all-party support, will push the federal government at least to move in this direction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member has one minute remaining. Does he wish to reserve that?

Mr. Ashe: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: If the honourable member looks around the House and finds enthusiasm, or lack of it, in support of the resolution, he may just envisage to what extent this resolution, even if approved by the House, is going to impact on the government of Canada.

I say that not with any disrespect to the honourable member who has just spoken; I happen to have been working with the member for Durham West in the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs for many months and I have learned to have a good deal of respect for his judgement. I can only assume he couldn't think of anything better for the private members' hour and so trotted out this matter, which is clearly a federal responsibility.

Frankly, I wish the line could be electrified. But I also wish that in this debate, which we set aside Thursday afternoon, week after week, we could talk about something more compelling, of more interest and importance to our colleagues in the Legislature.

We have a good deal of legislation that we perhaps should be dealing with. I don't want to downgrade the member personally, because I believe the criticism applies to private members' hour generally more often than not.

A good example of the other side is that my colleague, the member for Kitchener, is bringing in a substantial amendment to a provincial act which is going to be supported by the government, we hope, because it's so reasonable. In fact, we're going to improve legislation; we're going to improve the quality of life here.

To the resolution at hand: I say immediately that in many respects it's out of order and irrelevant to us. We would like to have electrified rail lines, but I don't think anything we can do here, unless we're prepared to build them ourselves, is going to have any impact.

I would suggest that we do have a rail line of our own. As a matter of fact, we have more than one. We could talk about the Ontario Northland. The government of Ontario transportation system, GO Transit, is really operated through funds provided by this Legislature. While I don't think it's time for it to be electrified, I would like to see the resolution apply to something over which our dollars might have some impact and it could very well be directed to that.

I was interested to hear the Premier (Mr. Davis), in some sort of response or interjection the other day, indicate that in the back of his mind was the possibility of electrifying the GO network. I think that's an excellent idea. The only thing is, he responded that way when the argument was put that we have too much electricity presently available in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker is aware that our peak load at the present time is about 16,500 megawatts and with the plants now established we can turn out over 23,000 megawatts. With a 25 per cent cushion we have about 4,000 megawatts surplus, which is approximately twice the output of the world-famous Pickering power plant.

I mention Pickering because the honourable member for Durham West lives in its shadow. He tells us that repeatedly. And he says he's not worrying about it, although frankly when we see him in action sometimes we're a little bit worried about it.

But the concept of electrification of rail lines should not be in terms of using up our surplus electricity. The honourable member has indicated it would take less than 100 megawatts to electrify the line, an insignificant, practically irrelevant amount when compared with the oversupply of electricity of which Ontario Hydro is presently capable.

Just as a footnote; naturally we're bringing more electric plants on stream from month to month and it is expected within the next 18 months the oversupply will not be 4,000 megawatts but 6,000 megawatts. We build this with money borrowed in New York at an average of what—10 per cent when we're lucky? The money we're buying now is coming to us at a much higher percentage indeed.

While those mammoths of technology sit there with the dust settling on their wheels like some kind of strange temples to Conservatism, we're paying interest to the money moguls in New York whether we're using them or not.

The Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) often says the province of Ontario doesn't borrow money directly and that's true. But our agency Ontario Hydro does, and if anything ever goes wrong with our credit rating it will be laid at their feet and no one else's as long as we don't borrow ourselves.

The honourable member even mentioned the famous radial lines. When the former member for Brant, my immediate predecessor, first was elected this was a major issue. The then chairman of Hydro, Adam Beck, had been a member of the Legislature at one time, and even formed a Hydro Party. The honourable member should think of that. Couldn't he really get his muscles into that one?

He had a concept of putting these electrically-operated streetcars radiating from the hub of Toronto into many of the growth centres, including Paris, Ontario. We even had a radial in Paris. You could go all the way to Brantford. You could even go to Port Dover, which was another arm of the radial.

The government of the day in 1919 felt it was not a practical application and it did not proceed. Frankly, I think the government's judgement was very good.

I travel on a portion of the line the honourable member was talking about, from Brantford to Toronto, operated by Via Rail and it is excellent service. Certainly it could be made more frequent, faster, with newer cars and cleaner and then it would be fine; but it is world-class service in my view. The timetable is convenient, at least for me, and I suppose for other people who come down to Toronto to do business and go home in the evening. At $12 return, the rates are not bad and people who are fortunate, such as we, can send that to representatives of the Treasurer who will give me the money back. I am not so sure it is more convenient than driving in in a car, but that's another matter.

Mr. Samis: You don't get a speeding ticket, Bob.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, thank you for those interjections. I haven't had a speeding ticket since last February, responding to all the concern that is being expressed. At that time I hope to be down to five points, in case anybody is worried. All I need is to get to February with a clean bill of health.

I am very much concerned that the honourable member is talking about the LRC facility—light, rapid, comfortable. I don't know about the light part, but if it's rapid and comfortable that's fine. These so-called Budd cars are light, rapid and comfortable. They may be made, or parts of them are made, in Kitchener—I am told by the member for Kitchener that is not so—but the thing that's wrong with them ties in with what the honourable member said about high speed: they have to sound their horn too often. In such a little car one is right there where the thing is squawking all the time and one thinks, "Anything but this." It's very, very noisy. This is something that other people might not notice, I don't know, but for me this is a serious drawback in the so-called light, single- or double-car transportation.

While we're talking about amending and changing the concepts of transportation and particularly if we're going to electrify intercity public transportation, I think we should also envisage the availability of electrically-operated means of individual transportation. People who want to use the trains can drive their little electric buggies into the train station and plug them in there—the same source of supply that runs the train would be available. When they return from their work their little car would be all charged up and they could nip back to RR 1, St. George, or wherever it is they return to.

The concept of using other fuels besides diesel fuel is something that should perhaps be considered in the resolution as well. Certainly alcohol is going to be a principal fuel at the time gasoline gets up to $3.50 or $4 a gallon.

For the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa), who is gracing us with his presence, it has of course the obvious additional advantage that when you are driving to Toronto and you feel the need of any stimulation you can use a long straw and just take the top off the gas tank.

Speed of course is essential. The problem really is that if these LRC trains are going to be averaging high speeds they simply can't stop at all of the communities such as West Hill or wherever it is the honourable member lives. They might stop at Brantford but I would expect the next stop would be Toronto. If these things are going to attain a speed that is going to make it better to use them than automobiles they are certainly going to have to maintain better schedules than they now do.

I was glad the member mentioned the improvement of ticketing procedures. The ones now are pretty antiquated. You go to buy a ticket to Toronto and you get a sheaf of stuff to put in your pocket. The honourable person who sells it to you in the train station takes off the copy and puts one away and crumples the other one and throws it in the waste basket.

There are many things that can be done to improve it. I personally have confidence, even though the honourable member doesn't seem to, that the elected members of Parliament have this as their responsibility and it is not ours except just as sort of an after-noon discussion.

Mr. Samis: First of all, I want to say that I do share the misgivings of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) about the nature of the resolution and the fact this is essentially a federal prerogative. On the other hand, I do want to say I strongly support the intent of the resolution and the direction of the resolution. However, before I speak to the resolution, I want to dispense with some menial obligations I have.

My colleague, the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) has specifically asked that in any upgrading of the Windsor-Montreal rail corridor, the plan should include the installation of a GO Transit station in York East, at Degross Street.

Having dispensed with my obligations to my colleague, Mr. Speaker, maybe I can return to the principle of the resolution with a little more enthusiasm.

I have a certain personal interest in the resolution, because I am one of the few members, I guess, who makes regular use of the Windsor-Montreal corridor. I frequently take the train either from Toronto to Cornwall or Toronto to Montreal. I have tried all three modes; the milk run, the Rapido and the Turbo; in fact I will be using that same service within the next 12 hours.

I have also had some experience in other parts of the world to compare our rail service to that of other countries. I had the privilege and pleasure of taking the bullet train in Japan a couple of years ago, and I have been able to compare that with the rather conventional diesel service in the People's Republic of China. I have also experienced some of the high speed electrical trains in France, some of the conventional diesels in Spain and Mexico, and a high speed train in the United Kingdom. When we hear people talk about the Canadian rail system, especially our friend Professor Lukasiewicz at Carleton University, we have to face the obviously reality we don't have an up-to-date modern system; and the reason is that the federal government hasn't spent enough money to develop a truly modern and competitive passenger rail system as some other countries have. Obviously we are way behind France, the United Kingdom, Japan, Germany, and even the United States, in our passenger rail service program.

We have another complication. We have a private railway that served the country and shared the burden of passenger rail service, namely Canadian Pacific. If there is any private rail company in this country that has served to sabotage, undermine and ruin passenger rail service in our country, it is the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think we are all extremely familiar with the fact that when they wanted to get out of the passenger business they deliberately downgraded the service, made it inefficient, turned people away from it so they could go before the Canadian Transportation Commission and then suddenly say, "It is not making its way, it is not financially viable. The people aren't supporting it, therefore we should discontinue it." It just further served to undermine the whole concept of a passenger rail service. A city like Cambridge today has absolutely no rail service whatsoever on a passenger basis.

On the other hand we have Canadian National, which didn't go on any deliberate binge to get out of the passenger business, but even so look at their situation. They are so severely strapped for funds they are unable to purchase the necessary new and efficient trains. They are unable to really effectively upgrade their existing rolling stock, they are unable to adequately improve the rail beds to a level necessary for efficient rail transport; that is what they have to cope with.

Also, they have to cope with the policy of those famous and unlamented luminaries of the federal scene, Jean Marchand and Otto Lang. I think we all remember the 1974 election, the famous promise that they would spend, I think half a billion dollars, in the next five years to upgrade our rail system, to buy new trains, to modernize it. That promise, like most of the other promises of that election, was a complete sham.

The CN and Via Rail have had to contend with the idea that international airports are the mode of the future; they are glamorous, they are trendy, and they really are the mode of transport we should be going towards. The result was something called Mirabel, that monument to waste and extravagance that cost somewhere between $1.1 and $1.4 billion when you include the cost of land acquisition as well as construction. Look at the Mirabel record since it has been in operation: it has only half the number of projected customers; it costs $32 per capita to handle passengers versus a North American average of $7; it is losing a million dollars a week; has lost $115 million in the first two years of operation.

Take Pickering, that political abortion. Already it has cost Ontario $278 million to date and it has cost Ottawa $140 million to date. Airports, the great mode of the future: in the past three years they have a deficit of over $1.3 billion. Yet we hear the critics talk about a $250 million subsidy to the railways. That doesn't include the $4 billion deficit created in 1979 for the cost of building roadways in Canada, which is borne by the taxpayers.

Even with the niggardly amount of money they receive from the federal government, even with a limited advertising budget, even with the deteriorating conditions of the railbed, Via Rail has managed to increase its passenger usage on the strategic Windsor-to-Quebec corridor by an average of 10 per cent in each of the past three years. It is expected the rate of increase will be even greater for 1979.

In 1978, the increase was 15.8 per cent. That meant 3,876,000 people patronized the trains in that corridor. Even Professor Lukasiewicz, a critic of public rail in Canada, admits that the Windsor-Quebec corridor is a feasible corridor for high-speed rail transport and he would accept that as being a viable alternative to what we have today.

My point is very simple: give the trains a real opportunity to compete and they will prove they can win public acceptance, especially for trips of less than 600 miles, which is a generally accepted norm for maximum rail efficiency.

In terms of energy, we all know trains obviously make sense, especially the LRC model outlined by the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe), when compared with other modes of transport. The LRC train with six cars and a capacity of 480 passengers on a seat-per-kilometre basis would consume almost 15 per cent of the energy of a standard intercity bus, less than five per cent of that required by a Dash 7 and less than three per cent of that required by a DC-9, assuming all three were used at capacity.

The labour requirements are less than 20 per cent of those of a standard bus. A 10-car LRC diesel train operating between Toronto and Montreal would operate at a seat-per-kilometre cost 40 per cent below that of a standard bus and 85 per cent below that of a STOL plane. The facts are there.

In terms of operating costs, in terms of energy usage, trains make sense. In terms of jobs, trains make sense. If we upgrade our railways, adopt the LRC and provide 4,000 kilometres of electrified double track between Quebec and Windsor we would be creating jobs. True, it would cost upward of $4 billion between now and 1990.

Let's put that in perspective. Air Canada is spending $2 billion right now to upgrade its fleet of aircraft. We are spending $4 billion on highway construction in Canada. In terms of Ontario, a recent government study indicated an expenditure of only $250 million to upgrade the present tracks in the Windsor to Quebec corridor would create 1,200 jobs for each of the next five years. To install a full LRC train system would mean Ontario would get the greatest benefit in terms of thousands of new jobs that would be created here in Ontario. We could manufacture the rolling stock, the rails, rebuild the rail lines and power them with our own electricity.

We would be developing our own technology in our own province. We would be reducing our need for energy imports from the west. We would be giving consumers another reason to reduce their own personal consumption and giving them an alternative to the car. We would finally be catching up with the Americans and narrowing the gap with the ever efficient French, Japanese, British and German rail systems.

LRC is something we need in Canada, it is something extremely well suited to the Windsor-Quebec corridor. It is something that makes energy sense, economic sense, consumer sense, transportation sense and something that is long overdue. On that basis, I am glad to support the resolution.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, I support the resolution brought in by my colleague from Durham West, and our colleague from Durham East (Mr. Cureatz), if he is back in time and has opportunity within the time constraints, is of the same opinion.

This resolution is an important step in upgrading a sadly outdated transportation system and in increasing our utilization of new and available technology. The saving of fuel costs cannot be underestimated in its importance to Ontario's energy needs. Such a rail system would do just that.

It is my view there is much unused rail capacity that can be upgraded and electrified. The member for Cornwall said he had some misgivings. I don't share any with the resolution and I think the speaker before him, from the opposition, said the same. The resolution is very simple. Let's modernize. Let's come into the 20th century by electrifying some of our rail capacity.

It is somewhat ironical that we have perhaps gone full circle. I too remember the radial lines, the London and Port Stanley. I know of the one that came into Woodstock and Paris, but most important, the radial lines from Guelph to West Toronto which I travelled many times, which was an electrically motivated rail system. At that time I would say the speed accelerated much beyond the normal rail traffic of the day. I can remember going to high school on the Guelph to West Toronto line and we would hit 80 miles an hour on a roadbed that wouldn't be of the quality you would need today for an electrified system that would travel in excess of 100 miles an hour.

In a way it is too bad that that system was abandoned, because if we had that right of way it would be upgraded and utilized to very good advantage in moving people along that corridor and through Mississauga.

While I am at it I should make reference to the fact that the provincial government has been and is involved in rail transportation. The GO system is a case in point. It is a great success which is going to be expanded along the CPR line out through Streetsville and to points west. We have the electrified TTC here in Toronto. I look forward to the time—and I hope it isn't too long; I would like to see it in the planning stages right away—when the subway system will be extended into Mississauga, probably along the Dundas highway. There is a density of population there now and a need that I think would be comparable to some areas now served by the subway system. This would help in taking pressure off our vehicular traffic.

The turbo train, which I like to ride—it was plagued with difficulties—is indicative of how people will respond to high-speed rail transportation. So all these things come together and electrification would indeed bring about a real thrust forward in the integration and co-ordination of our rail systems.

As mentioned by the sponsor of the resolution, my colleague from Durham West, the state of Canada's passenger rail system is deplorable. For over the past couple of decades it's been neglected and forgotten. Present-day technology has far outstripped our outmoded rail systems.

Yet, despite this state of affairs, passenger train service is undergoing a slight revival in the country. The traffic has grown at a rate of between 10 and 12 per cent since 1976 and it is expected to continue into the 1980s. This could well increase, with the rising cost of fuel for individual motorists. I hope that many of these motorists will start switching to trains, but we have to provide that facility and make it attractive to them.

I think it is important we carefully determine the role of rail transportation in our society and attempt to keep it within these parameters. It is pointless to try and push the passenger rail service into a market in which it cannot hope to compete successfully.

I am afraid present federal government policies are moving in that direction. For example, the improvements made down at the Union Station, where we couldn't get aid from the former federal government. The province went it alone and upgraded the facilities there. So there has to be a recognition of the potential and the need and a response from governments to fulfil this need.

For local and short- to medium-range trips, the obsolete train cannot compete with the car and the bus except where the traffic volume is sufficiently high. Bus transportation is an obvious successor to what, up to this point, has been obsolete Canadian passenger rail service. Our colleague from Cornwall mentioned other jurisdictions where great numbers of people are moved in this high-speed fashion and we must recognize the potential and respond.

One such area of high population density is the Quebec-Windsor corridor, although population figures for the period 1966 to 1976 show many cities' populations along this corridor rising dramatically. Quebec City, Montreal and Toronto are the cornerstones of this corridor; they have grown 24 per cent, nine per cent and 22 per cent respectively. More important, the smaller cities which would make or break a high speed train system have also grown. Hamilton's population is up 16 per cent; Kitchener's is up 42 per cent; London, Oshawa and Windsor are all increasing.

This corridor should be considered for the major potential application of modern passenger rail in Canada. It has relatively small intercity distances, the maximum being 335 miles from Montreal to Toronto. A modern 100 to 125 miles per hour rail service can offer a highly competitive service compared to bus, auto and aeroplane travel. The key to its success will be its ability to attract a steady clientele from this relatively large population.

The private car has an incredible advantage over the train and bus in that it is infinitely more flexible. It can be cheaper than the bus, especially with the movement of a family. A bus doesn't have the great speed advantage, though, that a train has over a car, so it's not all that competitive. Air travel has a tremendous advantage over all other means of transport when it comes to servicing larger distances. The trips are faster and comfortable. The area where the aeroplane has problems is in the smaller and middle distances, and that's where this new updated service would fill a role.

An updated system for the Quebec-Windsor corridor may also produce another, often overlooked, side effect. The diversion of a portion of short-haul traffic from air to fast rail should alleviate to some extent the congestion of Montreal's Dorval and Mississauga's—it says here "Toronto" but I say Mississauga—international airports. A further reduction would also occur if these airports were provided with direct access by fast through rail to the corridor cities.

The Premier (Mr. Davis) suggested that 125 miles per hour service on an exclusive passenger track is an achievable goal in the Quebec-to-Windsor corridor. The first step would be a package of improvements offering a service of 95 miles per hour and could cost some $250 million rather than the billions that have been mentioned. This would provide opportunities for employment in the short term but this is secondary to the long-term benefits.

Rail improvement would help rail traffic to attain improved speeds, efficiency, customer service, labour productivity and safety. I can fervently support the safety aspect. It would also increase the availability of lower fare transportation. Another important long-term benefit is that an exclusive track would help eliminate freight interference, thereby speeding up both passenger and freight operations as well as reducing the risk of collision and accidents.

With those few comments, I am very supportive of the resolution brought forward by my colleague. I think the unused rail capacity, as I said at the outset, is there. It's there to be exploited to the benefit of the transportation industry in co-ordination with other modes of transportation. This is something we should be pressing the federal government to do; and we should get on with this as quickly as is feasible.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak in support of the resolution put forth by the member for Durham West, however, I would like to suggest at the outset that this member, as all of us, must have many views on how we could improve the government of Ontario by our private members' bill periods, suggestions for innovative systems or policies that could be undertaken by the province of Ontario. After all, we are supposed to be the body that has some control over that, not the House of Commons. Nevertheless, the question being suggested and supported by the member for Durham West is of such importance to us in Ontario that I am very, very pleased to help.

We ought to be looking at what lies ahead for us in future years. We are coming into a period where oil, and as a result diesel fuel, will become much more expensive and its use will have to be eliminated in many ways. In Ontario we have an abundant supply of electric power. I think we ought to be looking at this form of energy for our main corridor.

I know the resolution refers to this main corridor as running from Windsor to Quebec, but I am speaking from Sarnia to Quebec, of course. We have the Lambton generating station in Sarnia which is producing electric power from coal, bought and imported from Kentucky and Ohio. The entire output of the Lambton generating station is exported across the river into the state of Michigan, which is fine for our exports and produces good trade relations between the two countries; but I would like to point out that this is one of the places where electrification of a line such as we are talking about could start.

The present facilities provided by Via Rail discourage passengers from using that form of transportation. It is approximately 200 miles from Sarnia to Toronto, which is a very considerable drive back and forth, particularly when weather is bad. We should be encouraged, and indeed want to use the railroad, but the existing railroad bed is not sufficient now to carry a high-speed train. The service is very poor. It is a three and a half hour trip on the train from Sarnia to Union Station in Toronto. The train leaves at 5:30 in the morning and gets in here at nine o'clock in the morning. This seems very shortsighted. We are not going to be able to continue to drive our automobiles back and forth as we have been able to do in the past.

In the two and a half years that I have been in this Legislature, the fares on Great Lakes Airlines from Sarnia to Toronto have gone from $63.70 return to $105.90 return right now, using precious fuel and going up and up every day; and will go up more.

On the line we are talking about from Windsor to Quebec, or from Sarnia to Quebec, we are going right through the hearts of our cities. We don't have a 20-25 mile trip in from the airport by automobile, using further fuel, to get down into Toronto, into the downtown area.

The common sense of the thing overwhelms me. I don't know why the federal government isn't looking into this and putting into effect a crash program building the road beds to the extent they need to be rebuilt, improving the service, rebuilding the rolling stock and so forth.

This resolution refers to LRC—light, rapid and comfortable; as anybody will tell you, Mr. Speaker, the existing train service is heavy, slow and uncomfortable. It's such a sensible thing to build a service that is going to take numbers of people in a comfortable and speedy fashion in light of the energy situation we are facing.

In addition to this, the railroad companies and Via Rail, while they have improved their service considerably compared to what it was, have light-years to go before they will be able to encourage more use of the railroads. As I said, the main point of my speaking in this particular discussion is to show how every encouragement should be made to us to use that kind of transportation.

There were electrical lines in Ontario years ago which were abandoned because the automobile came in and took care of the transportation needs of the people of Ontario. That is now changing. We're not going to be able to use our automobile as we do now. When I drive in from Sarnia to Toronto on Highway 401, I would say that over 50 per cent of the cars that approach or pass me have one passenger in them. Everybody is using his own gasoline to go where he wants to go.

The whole resolution is absolutely essential to our future travel plans in Ontario and throughout Canada. I hope that a resolution of this nature, and the debate that accompanies it reaches the people in the government of Canada who are responsible for this transportation. It is the only way to go in the 1980s. We are going to find it increasingly more important.

Of course, in addition to electrified-rail, rebuilt road beds, we're going to have to have better service and a better means of ticketing and reservations. If necessary, we're going to have to have some kind of food service that is acceptable to the people. On that 5:30 train out of Sarnia in the morning, it sure would be nice to be able to come aboard that train and have a decent cup of coffee and some warm toast. What do you get? Coffee that you'd think is the residue from the manufacturing process at Union Carbide and some cheese sandwiches that you'd think were made by Petrosar. The whole thing is just discouraging for anybody who wants to use the present passenger service.

To sum up, it is absolutely imperative we in Canada go to a light, rapid and comfortable system operated by electricity. It is imperative that the government of Canada gets that message and that it knows we ordinary users of transportation in Ontario know this is the way to go in the 1980s.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Wentworth for up to eight minutes.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I rise to welcome the principle of this bill, applaud its intent, to lament the lack of explanation that's contained in it—the how and the definition of the Windsor-Quebec corridor—and to condemn it as yet another example of the enthusiasm for things they should be doing themselves.

As an aside, I want to mention that there has been some reference by members of this House to the radial railways that once ran in this area. I think that's an example of the problem of how the government likes to look back at its glorious past and refuses to look forward at how we could be building a better Ontario. The radial railways are being preserved very well by the Halton County Radial Railroad Museum, they are doing an excellent job. I think we should leave that job to them and plan here for the future.

There is one thing in this resolution, though, that hasn't been drawn out by others that I really do applaud: it indicates a belief on the other side of this House that the federal government should be involving itself in the transportation system in this country.

The rumours I have heard are that the federal government—the kissing cousins of the member who introduced this resolution—have been thinking about privatizing Canadian National Railways. I am glad this resolution indicates the member's opposition to that kind of activity, that we here feel the federal government should be the one to invest in transportation systems.

There is one aspect I have failed to mention. Maybe it is the member's intent to have the federal government invest all the money in the railroad system and then to privatize it, as we tend to do with every other major industry that is doing so well in public ownership. I hope that is not the intent.

The definition of the corridor has been referred to by some of my colleagues with respect to favoured areas of the province. The Hamilton-Niagara area has been totally ignored by the government in terms of provision of railway transportation service in the GO system. I note that the member who moved this resolution is the only government member here at the present time for this debate, and that is pretty sad. I hope the minister and his government will take a look at the GO system and see whether that could not be expanded to fill some of the need expressed in this resolution.

We could be providing a light, rapid, comfortable rail transportation system, at least in the entire Golden Horseshoe. We could be getting many of the buses presently running on the roads under the auspices of the government of Ontario, and many of the private cars, off the Queen Elizabeth Way, the 401, the Don Valley Parkway and the other expressways in this area if we were to expand the GO Transit service to provide service to Hamilton and Oshawa on a full-time basis to the great area of Welland-Thorold and perhaps also to St. Catharines and Niagara Falls. That could be done and could be done now. In the process, it would mean the purchasing of railway equipment built by Canadians, which would benefit the Canadian people in many ways.

In the few minutes I have I don't want to dwell too much on the alternatives that exist for public transportation. I want to make a suggestion that the government, if it supports this resolution—and with the member for Durham West I hope it is supported on all sides of the House—the government could take some steps in this area that would do a great deal for the country. The government of Ontario could take the initiative in the upgrading of the rail corridor as far as the Quebec border and could negotiate with the government of Quebec to extend that corridor by provincial action into the province of Quebec.

The forging of those strong rail bonds between Ontario and Quebec, in my view, would do a great deal to increase the need we have for understanding between these two great provinces. It would enable people to move more freely between them, avoid the long drive that is necessary to get to Montreal and Quebec City, and encourage co-operation, which is what federalism should be, rather than passing the buck to the federal government to do everything for us and on our behalf.

The initiative really could come from the other side of the House. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk said earlier the resolution refers to something that is clearly a federal responsibility. I reject that. I really believe the initiative could come from the provincial government. It has come in terms of the GO train service. There's a great deal more that needs to be accomplished, and I don't mind whether it comes using the train that carries the trade name LRC or whether it comes using the double deck cars and other types of equipment that have been and are being developed by the UTDC. That kind of initiative could indeed carry us forward into an age where public transportation is the predominant mode of travel.

A few years ago, in another capacity, I was involved in a study in which we looked at air transport movements out of Toronto International Airport, the destination of the flights and the need for the expansion of that airport. It became very clear to us that if the flights from Toronto to places in the Windsor-Quebec City corridor were replaced with a train service, as is being suggested in this resolution, the thought of a second Toronto airport, possibly even the thought of expansion of Mount Hope Airport would never have come about.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Isaacs: This is a great resolution; but it needs more than urging the federal government, it needs some real positive commitment from the government of this province to public transportation.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, what really could come about with the implementation of the thrust of this resolution is high speed, fast-turnaround traffic and a new train service able to divert air and road transport, which I think is one of the things we're aiming for, with significant savings in gasoline, jet and diesel fuel; high operation and maintenance savings; high technology utilization within the electrical industry in its broadest sense; possible savings in highway maintenance, for example; possibly no need for another Mirabel, as has been mentioned; and one hopes the creation of a revitalized artery for Canada's industrial heartland.

The advantages, I think, speak for themselves. Let me assure the honourable members that the debate as it has taken place this afternoon, along with my covering letter, will be forwarded to the federal government, assuming passage and support by this Legislature.

FAMILY LAW REFORM AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Breithaupt moved second reading of Bill 159, An Act to amend the Family Law Reform Act, 1978.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, the reintroduction of the Family Law Reform Act took place here on October 17, 1977. The debate of second reading occurred the next day.

The bill had been brought in previously and had had substantial hearings. The bill then returned to the committee stage for many further changes. Much comment was made as the whole package of family law bills went through the stages of public hearings and comments. Articles were written and some 40,000 copies of the proposed legislation went all over Ontario.

It really had taken almost 10 years of effort to get the legislation finally in place.

Most persons would have expected that all of that time and effort would have produced a perfect result. However, that was not the case. There was a particular problem which came to light as the result of a decision made in the family court in Kitchener.

It so happened that the lawyer representing the claimant involved was Mr. James Gothard, with whom I practised law from 1968 until I closed my practice in June of 1975 to devote my full time to my duties in the Legislature. I am no longer involved in private practice and I have no obligation to Mr. Gothard, in any way, to bring forward this bill.

I would certainly not want the Speaker, or any other person in Ontario, to think that I'm trying to have a law changed in order to benefit personally in any way from that change.

The facts of the case were these. A mother of two teenagers had applied to the family court to collect arrears under an order. These arrears had built up to $1,000 or so, based on payments which had been ordered of $50 a week for each child. The judge looked at section 27 of the act and noted that it read as follows, and I quote subsection 1 from the 1978 red volume of the statutes, where the Family Law Reform Act is chapter 2:

"The clerk of the united family court or of a provincial court (family division), upon the request of a person entitled to support under an order for support or maintenance enforceable in Ontario or other persons or agency mentioned in subsection 3 of section 18 and upon the filing of such material as is prescribed by the rules of the court may enforce the order."

That reference to section 18(3) is as follows: "An application for an order for the support of a defendant who is a spouse or a dependent child of the spouse may be made by, (a) the Ministry of Community and Social Services in the name of the minister; or (b) a municipal corporation including a metropolitan district or regional municipality, but not including an area municipality thereof."

As a result, the mother had made the application for the enforcement of this order, but the statute only allows two persons to be applicants. The first is "the person entitled to support" and the second is the Ministry of Community and Social Services or a municipal corporation in certain particular circumstances.

The judge ruled that only the children in this case could request that the payments be enforced by the court. In Kitchener, this application is one of about 80 which pass through the family court each month. Certainly a number of these would be involved in this particular problem, as would many right across the province. While teenagers could possibly make the application, what about the infants and small children of five or six years of age who could obviously not apply to have orders enforced on their own behalf?

I immediately sent the newspaper story that appeared in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry) on October 3. There accordingly appeared to be four possible approaches which could be taken. The first was to appeal the decision—this was the route which has been suggested by an information officer in the Attorney General's office—then if the appeal court was to uphold the judge's decision, an amendment to the act could be considered by the Attorney General's officials.

In my view this was an alternative, of course, but there would certainly be no appeal in time to have any prospective legislation in this session, which will end in mid-December. Any governmental amendment would have to wait probably until next spring, and in the meanwhile many children would be suffering.

The second approach was to try to use the law of agency, since those under the age of 18 cannot act on their own in family court matters. That suggestion was made after a similar decision was made by a county court judge in Woodstock in late September. There may be a prospect of such actions, and a letter to that effect was sent to the family court judges in Ontario by the chief judge for the consideration and use of those other judges. But the section, as I have said, does not refer to the right to use an agent.

The judge in the Kitchener family court was quoted as saying, "As the rules of our court stand now, I don't see any provision for the parent to act as an agent for the child. The rules don't seem to permit anyone else to act for the child."

Unlike county and supreme courts, the family court division of the provincial court has no particular provision allowing adults to launch proceedings on behalf of children, who are viewed by the court as minors. Therefore that suggestion, if used, could have been easily challenged.

A third possibility was one which I suggested to the Attorney General in my letter to him of October 3. That was the idea that some instruction as to the wishes of the Legislature might be given to the judge of the family court with the prospect of an amendment being eventually made. The Attorney General had not received this letter by the time I asked the question about this matter two weeks after my original letter to him, but his reply set out the view that this route of instruction was not one he would prefer to follow.

The fourth alternative was to change the law, but with the backlog of legislation already on the Order Paper and with only three more Tuesdays left for legislation, that also seemed an unlikely prospect.

The opportunity to change the law, however, was not only a prerogative of the government; there was the chance of using a private member's turn to bring in an amendment which could also be accepted by all members and which, hopefully, could be passed by this House. As I had the ballot turn this afternoon, I decided to bring forward the amendment which you see in Bill 159.

I am most pleased with the comments a number of members have made about my proposal, and I was particularly delighted to receive a call from the Attorney General's office expressing support for my attempt to help a number of children in this province who would benefit from this amendment. I hope the Attorney General or his parliamentary assistant will be able to speak in favour of the bill this afternoon.

A suggestion for an amendment to my bill was made by the counsel for the policy development division of the ministry, Mr. Craig Perkins, who is under the press gallery. He suggested a certain amendment as someone who was the original draftsman of the original family reform bill. The amendment which has been suggested does change a word or two and certainly clarifies the intention of my bill. The amendment will make my suggestions more consistent with the wording and style of the act and, of course, I am most pleased to accept that amendment. It can be put at the committee stage of the bill.

There are not many occasions on which we, as legislators, can actually and directly help specific individuals in our society. I suggest to you, sir, that the passage of the amendment to the Family Law Reform Act which I propose may well be one of those occasions. I would welcome the support of the members of this House, and I hope this bill will not only receive second reading, but that time will be available for it to go through the other stages in the next several weeks. We will have the opportunity to assist a number of children in circumstances where the applications which have been made from time to time, ordinarily by the mother, are now being called into question. I hope that opportunity will be clarified.

I welcome the support I have received and the encouragement from the Attorney General. I hope we will be able to resolve this concern and benefit a number of our citizens.

Mr. Acting Speaker: You have eight minutes left. Do you wish to reserve them?

Mr. Breithaupt: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bounsell: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased indeed to have the opportunity to rise in this House and speak once again, as I tend to do forever, on this bill.

As the parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General knows, this has become somewhat of an obsession with me, the intricacies of this bill and the various parts that are still not working. I look forward to the remarks which the next speaker, the parliamentary assistant, will make on this bill, and I agree with the person who presented this bill: I certainly hope what we will hear from the parliamentary assistant is that, with whatever minor amendment is required to achieve exactly the purpose desired, the government will support this on second reading and will have it put to committee for those small positive improvements which the member for Kitchener has mentioned. As a House, I am sure we will deal very speedily with this in committee and have this bill in law before Christmas.

This is certainly a positive amendment. I was very discouraged, when it occurred, to see the way the judges interpreted this section, disallowing the parent of a child for whom support had been ordered by the court from bringing an action forward in the absence of that child doing so, in fact indicating that the parent could not do so. This is what the amendment corrects.

It is a very small, straightforward, very reasonable amendment, which makes it clear to everybody in the province that support payments should be paid. It makes it clear that the clerk of the unified family court or the provincial family court must, upon the request of anyone involved, such as the parent of a dependent child supposedly to receive child support, shall enforce upon their request the order of the court.

I am a little surprised. The one amendment I would make, if it gets to committee, is to change the "may" to "shall." Then it would be unambiguous that we expect the unified family court or the provincial court, family division, whichever court is involved, shall, upon the request of any one of the three parties outlined in this bill, enforce that court order for support. There are simply far too many persons in our society who have court-ordered support payments on them who simply refuse by a whole host of means to meet and live up to those court-ordered support payments.

We have an interpretation of the present section of the act which makes it very difficult for those court orders to be enforced when the narrow reading of it caused a parent of a dependent child to not be able to go into court and have that order enforced.

We certainly support this amendment. I would prefer the "may" to be "shall," and we may well consider that as one of the amendments in what should be a very quick committee stage consideration of this bill. I certainly look forward to the parliamentary assistant speaking next and saying to us that members on the government side will accept this private member's bill, will bring it forward to committee before Christmas and remove this obvious loophole, the obvious anomaly in this section of the act, which would facilitate the collection and payment of the whole support section of this bill.

I am very disappointed in the number of cases across the province where the Ministry of Community and Social Services or the municipal corporations, those people referred to in section 18(3), do not take a hand. In my area when you say to these people that they can themselves go into court and request the support payments be made, they are not doing it. They are saying unequivocally they are going to make the person involved do it.

I would like to see the Ministry of the Attorney General make a survey, if they haven't done so. It would be interesting to see how many aren't doing it. Most of them aren't. I wouldn't want to see time consumed by the survey; but this government—maybe the Ministry of Community and Social Services, maybe the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, or both—should make it very clear to ComSoc itself and those municipal corporations that they are to go into court and help in the collection of those support payments. They are allowed to do so under the legislation, yet it is my perception they are refusing to do so right across this province.

Why are they refusing to do so? Why do they keep hassling the person on mother's allowance who has a court-ordered support payment from a deserting spouse on behalf of their children? Why do they continue to try to hassle them into court? This amendment will help clear that up. In order to collect support payments when the agencies involved can do it, we need some real action on the part of the officials concerned in this government to say to those agencies, "You go in there and you get it."

I know of a situation now where the Ministry of Community and Social Services is not using its legal staff. They have dragged their feet over the course of a year and a half in going into a Michigan court to collect over $7,000 from a spouse who is resident in the city of Detroit; they have a lawyer who would do it in Michigan on a percentage basis.

I cannot see why ComSoc is not interested in returning that money. That money would be returned to the Ministry of Community and Social Services. Why aren't they interested in receiving that money into the coffers of the province of Ontario? It is a disgrace. It's the public's money they are not collecting, which they could darn well easily collect if they went into that Michigan courtroom after it.

All the officials within the ministries concerned have to take a much more active role in the collection of court-ordered support money across this province. I would ask the parliamentary assistants and the ministers involved to take this point seriously and tell those agencies to get out there and collect the money.

There are other parts of this Family Law Reform Act which have an equal or even higher priority than this, although this is a matter which should be addressed, and addressed very quickly now, so that the intent of this bill is carried forward.

I can point to another couple of problem sections in the bill. It's because I'm lazy that I have not produced a private member's bill myself on these problems which should be addressed.

Of course I refer to section 11 of the present Family Law Reform Act, where we did exactly the wrong thing. We abolished the presumption of advancement and allowed the presumption of resulting trust to act both ways. We abolished the wrong presumption. We retained the presumption of resulting trust.

Take the example of a man giving a gift to his wife. That gift is not a gift, she is just holding it in trust for him. If I give my wife an angora sweater for Christmas or any other time, I'll make sure I get one big enough so I can wear it if there should be a marriage breakup, because it's mine. All she is doing is holding it in trust for me. That acts both ways, for every gift that transfers between spouses; they are, in fact, just loans to the spouse. That means in the event of a marriage breakup they can be collected back unless I so state at the time of the gift that this is indeed a gift to my wife irrespective of section 11 of the Family Law Reform Act.

We should have abolished the resulting trust presumption and put in place the presumption of advancement operating both ways which says any gift I give to my wife is hers—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has now expired.

Mr. Bounsall: —unless I so state otherwise; and any gift she gives to me is mine, unless she so states otherwise. That surely needs to be redressed and reversed in this Family Law Reform Act.

Mr. Sterling: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I welcome this opportunity to talk again on this matter of importance to all people in our province.

I would like to congratulate the member for Kitchener for bringing forward this particular amendment to the act. I think it is important to note that the ministry has not encountered a great many problems with this act and we have only a few areas where we would like to change a few sections, which we expect to do in the spring. Be that as it may, I understand the feelings of the member for Kitchener, who had this issue brought forward by someone living in his constituency.

When we look at the family act as a whole, and I'd like to talk about it as a whole for a short period of time, we have had very few conflicts or troubles or problems with this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Bounsall: It needs some improvement.

Mr. Sterling: In answer to the member for Windsor-Sandwich in talking about section 11, I would indicate some other very cogent reasoning has to be brought forward in terms of that particular section.

Mr. Bounsall: You never did it in committee and you never did it in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question period expired quite some time ago.

Mr. Sterling: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this bill has been used as an example for many other provinces. I think Prince Edward Island has virtually copied the bill word for word. British Columbia has also implemented large portions of this piece of legislation, as well as New Brunswick, I believe. Be that as it may, there are minor problems. We recognized when we were sitting in committee on this particular bill that because it was such a wholesale reform of the act we would expect these small problems would arise.

Actually, the fact that those small problems haven't arisen is really a credit to the process that went on during that whole hearing on that bill, which predated my tenure here in the Legislature. Many representatives from all parts of the province participated in this very important debate.

To review some of the positions that the court has taken on this particular Family Law Act, the Attorney General recently has presented that paper to the justice committee which is now sitting during his estimates. The courts, basically have adhered very strictly to the equal sharing of family assets and have departed from that only in unusual cases. Where the wife has discharged her home-making functions and has earned income and made financial contributions to the welfare of the family, while the husband did not make any substantial contributions in either area, the wife in some cases has received more than half of the family assets.

Where a husband has liquidated family assets in an attempt to defeat his wife's claim, the wife has again received more than half the family assets to compensate for the assets disposed of. The fact that property was acquired by gift or inheritance has reduced the share of one spouse but has not resulted in a complete exemption from sharing. In one case, unequalled sharing resulted from the acquisition by one spouse of assets bought before the marriage, which lasted only two and a half years.

In a great majority of cases, however, family assets have been divided equally. Furthermore, there have been several cases where the contributions of the spouse in work or money have received recognition up to the point of half a share in the business operation or farm where the efforts of spouses resembled a joint venture. Likewise, there have been cases where a wife has received a share of business assets for the homemaking services which permitted her husband to devote his undivided attention to his business endeavours.

In support orders, the courts have generally reached decisions based on evaluation of economic factors without regard to matrimonial misconduct. Support orders are now made with an awareness of the obligation of both spouses to take measures to become self-supporting. This has resulted in orders that are of a limited duration or that may be reduced over a period of time in some cases.

That brings us to the automatic enforcement provision of the bill and the specific intent of the member for Kitchener's bill. One of the features of the support provision of this act is the enforcement system contained in the act and in the rules and procedures of family courts across the province. The clerk of the court is empowered to enforce the orders at the request of the person receiving support. When the request is received, the court staff begins monitoring payments under the order and sends out reminders if payments fall behind.

Unfortunately the procedure varies across the 53 family courts in the province. This is due in some cases to the wishes of the family court judges, and in other cases it is due to staffing restraints.

It is interesting to note, though, that in cases where there is automatic telephone followup, where there is automatic monitoring of the account, there are significant increases in the collection rate.

At present, of the maintenance orders made, approximately 80 per cent are collected. I will pass along the concern of the member for Windsor-Sandwich to the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) in relation to the attitude of those officers in collection of payment.

I think his feeling might be that unless the person who has the order requests such help, then that help should not be given. I don't argue one way or the other on it because I haven't had an opportunity to discuss it with him, but I think that might be his attitude. If a debtor is called into court, the judge can decline to enforce an order if he is satisfied the debtor can't pay. He can make an alternate order if it is necessary and can secure the payment some way.

In some cases a spouse has been able to obtain an order for exclusive possession of the home. This is done when it is in the best interests of the child to provide a permanent shelter that is in the marriage environment.

Such an order results usually in the postponement of the sale of the matrimonial home until the order expires, that usually being the period of time when the children leave the matrimonial home. The cases where an exclusive possession order has been granted involve the need for stability.

Concerning section 27 of the act, there have been two court decisions which state that a parent cannot invoke the automatic enforcement support on behalf of the child; in other words, the child must invoke his own enforcement. One of the problems I have—and I would hope the member for Kitchener would have an opportunity to answer questions—is in that case—I think the children were 15 and 17 years of age—I couldn't quite understand—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. Sterling: I would like to indicate that we will support it. I would like to indicate that because of the nature of the bill, the fact it is a minor matter, not a matter of general government policy, that I have recommended to the House leader that he put it into committee of the whole House in the ensuing three weeks and that we eventually call it during this session for third and final reading.

Mr. Williams: The fact we don't have a normal sequence of speakers from the other parties I hope doesn't indicate a lack of interest in the bill we have before us today. Rather I hope there is unanimous support for the legislation that has been brought before us, to meet a specific situation presented to us by the sponsor of a bill which illustrates very clearly a problem that exists in the existing legislation.

I'm pleased to reinforce the government's support of this bill by rising to speak today. Like the rest of the members in the Legislature, I am greatly concerned about the quality of life for children in this province. There's no question but that in this day and age, when there is so much going on in our society, and where the family unit is no longer a total component but involves one-parent situations, this type of setting quite often creates, not only emotional, but financial hardships for the innocent children of these family breakdowns. It is important for us to try to resolve as best we can in legislation some of the problems that have arisen.

All of us, as parents, have the responsibility of raising and providing for the physical and also the spiritual needs of our children. We like to think that, ideally, both parents would always be available to care for and nurture their children in the way they best see fit. Unfortunately, for the reasons I stated a moment ago this is not the case.

The public attitudes towards the importance of the family unit and the whole social structure of our society have changed dramatically in recent years. The assurance of the continuation of the family unit and the availability of parents to provide care and guidance for their children is no longer assured as much today as it was in previous decades.

The family law legislation obviously recognizes those changes and was the primary reason for which it was brought about, not only to provide greater equity for those who have been in a marriage contract but also for the children who have been born out of that relationship.

In addition to this family law legislation, the Ontario government has instituted other laws and programs designed to protect the rights of children in other areas. My colleague has already mentioned that the Attorney General's office is working on changes that will benefit and strengthen this legislation as well.

There is no question that the topic of support payments and the enforcement of such payments is a highly emotional and complex issue and one that is not readily solvable. It's very easy to set out the guidelines and procedures in statute law but there is no more difficult type of legislation to enforce than that dealing with domestic matters where individual attitudes and emotions are so directly involved. For the courts to try to govern and control those in a legislative, legalistic manner is not always easily attainable. Each case has a different set of factors and variables that may or may not be solved to the satisfaction of the people involved.

The Ministry of Community and Social Services through its desertion services section, helps locate spouses who have deserted their families in order that support may be pursued. Its staff works with the family courts to facilitate enforcement procedures. The concern is that not only must payments be made, they must be made on a regular basis. If this is not possible in certain circumstances, the ministry will provide support payments to the family.

It does distress me, as I know it distresses the other members of the Legislature, that some people treat the demands of parenthood in a rather loose and light fashion and don't consider those responsibilities as seriously today as in the past, perhaps. I was most interested to listen to the reasons given by the sponsor of this bill for bringing this matter before the House in this way. He cited clearly and concisely the other options he had tried in an effort to bring a successful resolution to the very personal problem his constituent had experienced, which had attracted his attention to the whole matter. I think he has made it clear to the House that those several options were not readily available to him in assisting his constituent and in dealing with a very basic and fundamental problem, an obvious deficiency in the existing legislation. To deal with it expeditiously, the member has presented a convincing argument to this House this afternoon that this is the most appropriate course to pursue.

For this reason, I am pleased the parliamentary assistant has indicated this government would be prepared to support the legislation. I would not have expected him to say otherwise. Certainly, I am prepared to give that support, as I am sure are all members of this House.

It is quite clear that occasions will arise to illustrate our fallibility as legislators. We can make errors in dotting the i's and crossing the t's when we enact legislation in this House. It is apparent from a reading of the relevant sections in the existing statute that it cannot accomplish what was intended, and the courts have found this to be so as well. No one can question the decisions taken in those two cases that highlighted the deficiency. The sponsor of the bill spoke specifically to those two court decisions.

It is quite clear the courts of this land have shown the inadequacy of the wording in the existing statute, which runs contrary to what was intended. For these reasons I would simply conclude my remarks by saying the member for Kitchener is to be commended for having investigated this matter so thoroughly. After having exhausted all other options, he has chosen this way to bring the necessary equity to the situation, not just for his constituent but for the many innocent children who are also affected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. Williams: As I said earlier, I am pleased to support this bill before us today.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to be able to address myself to this bill. The previous speaker has mentioned that his party will be supporting this bill and I'm very pleased to hear that. But I suppose, as a lawyer and as an officer of the court, I really must express my absolute and total dismay at the callous disregard shown by the Attorney General when my colleague first brought this matter to his attention.

The information which I have, and which I understand is correct, is that the member for Kitchener brought the decision of Judge Douglas Bean to the attention of the Attorney General. I understand the Attorney General had been requested at that time either to amend the act to permit the parents or guardians to act on behalf of the children or to appeal the particular ruling.

In a letter to my colleague dated October 17 the Attorney General took a rather high-handed approach and said he wasn't prepared to do either of them at this time. I can only say that in my opinion that is a very callous and disrespectful attitude for an Attorney General to take, in view of something which obviously is so flagrant.

It certainly does please me very much to see that the members on the other side are going to support this bill. Had the Attorney General acted promptly when this matter was brought to his attention, perhaps we would not have been put through this exercise at all. I'm quite certain immediate action should have been taken by the Attorney General when this matter was drawn to his attention by the member for Kitchener.

Incidentally, I think the decision of that particular judge is as deficient as the section which presently deals with the enforcement of that order. When an order is made, the order is for payment to the parent on behalf of the children. In all of my years in court, in all of these family court matters in which I have appeared the order is always made "and the husband shall pay to the wife for the support of . . ." and then the children are listed and their ages given. To me the wrong interpretation was placed by this particular court on that particular section.

However, I suppose it is because of deficiencies of this nature that we do present this bill today. The member for Kitchener is certainly to be applauded for the immediate action which he has taken.

I think this brings us to a broader area with respect to children in family courts. The child in family court today is represented by the parent; that is to say the mother—or, now, the father—who applies to family court for support does so on behalf of the children. We are relying on that parent to give proper advice and to make proper representation on behalf of that child. Many times, where family court orders with respect to children were obtained in such a way, I've seen that the greater allotment of the money which was to be paid—In other words let's say the supporting parent is the father, who can pay only so many dollars, for example, $200 a month. What they will do is to apportion that money in such a way so the wife receives the greater amount.

I have said many times—and I've spoken about this in family court—that perhaps the day has arrived where the child in family court should be properly represented by the office of the official guardian.

There are so many of these cases coming to court now and in so many instances the rights of the children are not being adequately looked after. The day may very well have come, or it may very well come in the near future, when a child should not necessarily rely on the representations of the parent who is applying to family court on his behalf. Rather, there should be representation made on behalf of the child in the presence of the office of the official guardian to safeguard the best interests of the child.

It may very well be that this is cumbersome; it may very well be that this is costly; however, it could be that the agencies of the various family service societies which there are in various municipalities—many of them, incidentally, now have permanent counsel; they have permanent legal staff because of the complexities of the matters which have arisen in that branch of the law—should have a representative of those family services in court to see to it that the interests of the children are fully protected.

As I said, I have seen many instances where the pot is divided in such a way that it is the wife who gets the greatest portion of the moneys which are available and I just don't think it's fair. I don't think it's fair for the child. It's not fair for the children. I am addressing myself to that because I think it is an area of great concern and because it's an area which I believe deserves future consideration.

The whole idea of enforcement of orders in family courts can only be described—certainly in many respects—as frivolous. What usually happens is that the person who is ordered to pay falls into arrears. He may be in arrears for years, for two years or three years. He will appear in court on a show-cause summons or whatever mechanism brings him into court and the first thing that happens is that the arrears, whatever they are, are wiped off the books and they start all over again as though he has expiated his sins or his inability to pay or his unwillingness to pay. He comes to court and says, "I realize I am in arrears for $4,000 or $5,000 or $6,000, but I simply don't have it, so I am asking that the deficiency be wiped off the books." Often that is done. I find that the method of enforcement of orders in family court is cavalier and it certainly is not carried out in the manner in which it should be.

Again, I must compliment the member for Kitchener for bringing this private member's bill forward and, again, I also must take issue with the office of the Attorney General for being so lax and for not doing anything about this, even after it was brought to the attention of the Attorney General. It's a cavalier attitude: "We're not going to do anything. We're not going to appeal the judge's ruling and we're not going to bring in an amendment to the bill." That is precisely why the member for Kitchener has had to do this. As I said, it's a cavalier attitude which is demonstrated too often by that ministry.

In any event, it certainly has been my pleasure to rise and speak on this bill. I understand it is being supported by all members of the House and I think that in itself is quite complimentary.

Mr. McClellan: I am happy to rise and participate in the debate in support of the bill before us and to congratulate the member for Kitchener for bringing it forward.

I want first to continue in the same vein as the previous speaker with respect to the traditional attitude towards the enforcement of maintenance orders by the court and the agents of the court. This is one area of the law that is systematically treated as a joke. It is systematically held in contempt. There has never been any serious commitment to the enforcement of maintenance orders by the legal system—from the courts right down to the lowest minion of the courts. Enforcement orders are treated as matters of no account.

I have a copy of the study entitled, Family Law Enforcement of Maintenance Orders, prepared for the Law Reform Commission of Canada by Edward F. Ryan—I believe in 1976. He undertook a quite thorough study of the state of enforcement of maintenance orders at that time. One of the things he dealt with in the study is the fact that over half the maintenance orders throughout the country, on average, are never enforced; the payment is never made.

That has been documented here and in other studies. I don't know what the figures are for 1978. There is a reference in Mr. Ryan's study to the statistics—albeit for 1971 and 1972—that the amounts received pursuant to maintenance orders represented only 55 per cent of maintenance becoming due. This is in Ontario and in other provinces the percentage of—

Mr. Sterling: It is about 80 per cent here.

Mr. McClellan: Is it 80? I would be grateful, and I mean this sincerely, if the parliamentary assistant could provide us with some current statistics. The material we have been shown to date indicates an enormous amount of arrears—something in the order of $36 million in arrears on unpaid enforcement orders. The studies I have seen indicate the rates across the country vary upwards from 50 per cent—unenforced, not enforced.

Mr. Sterling: It depends how you look at it in dollar value.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, it does depend how you look at it in dollar value. I would like to know the basis of the parliamentary assistant's understanding of the situation.

Nevertheless, it is a truism to say that enforcement orders are not taken as seriously as any other matter that comes before the court—I think even including traffic tickets. I am not being flippant. I really think there is a very strange and, in some respects, malevolent attitude towards enforcement orders that needs to be addressed vigorously by the Solicitor General and the Attorney General, even if they are the same person.

We are pleased to see the amendment because it addresses an injustice that existed within the Family Law Reform Act. It now makes provision for dependants to have their rights to maintenance enforced and it jibes with the recommendations discussed by Mr. Ryan for the Law Reform Commission of Canada.

In his summary of solutions to the problem of non-enforcement, he starts by saying in his third recommendation, "Dependent children should have the independent right to enforce maintenance orders made in their favour." I think everybody here accepts the basic principle the member for Kitchener has spoken to and tried to deal with.

Let me deal with the matter contained in section 1(c), the business of other persons or agencies assuming the responsibility and onus of making sure maintenance orders are enforced. In Mr. Ryan's report he recommends on page 46 that "Techniques for court-initiated enforcement should be explored and existing programs carefully monitored. Assuming the initial success of such programs proved that they are as good as they appeared to be, court-initiated enforcement should replace enforcement by the defendant's spouse and children."

We haven't moved very far at all in that direction. The act clearly permits other persons or agencies referenced in section 18(3) to act on behalf of persons for whom a maintenance order is outstanding. Yet the Minister of Community and Social Services has chosen to take a very narrow view of his responsibility for ensuring enforcement of maintenance orders for welfare recipients and provincial family benefits recipients. He has a set of rather limited situations in which he is prepared to assume the responsibility for the enforcement. In most situations he leaves it up to the individual to try to plough his way through a court system which is simply not responsive.

The parliamentary assistant shakes his head in disgust, but I believe that is an accurate description of the current state of affairs. We had a lengthy discussion during the debate on the estimates of the Ministry of Community and Social Services in October of this year. We have asked for some data from the ministry with respect to the total number of maintenance orders outstanding on behalf of social assistance recipients in order that he can compare the total number with the number on which the ministry is acting as the enforcement agent. We haven't obtained this data yet.

The indication remains that the ministry allows most people to try to scramble as best they can through a court system and through officers of the court, which are unsympathetic and unresponsive to the issue of maintenance enforcement. That is why we have arrears of $36 million outstanding in 1979. That is the beginning and the end of the problem.

Until the government is prepared to take the onus of enforcement off the individual and place it where it belongs, either with the court or some appropriate agency of government, in the case of a social assistance recipient the Ministry of Community and Social Services, the problem will remain unsolved.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. MacBeth: If nobody else wishes to take the few remaining minutes on this bill, I would like to take those minutes myself and speak to this matter of private members' business.

First of all, I want to go on record with the other members who have spoken to this bill and say it is a good bill and one I am most happy to support. I am particularly pleased with the nature of its subject matter because I feel this is the proper kind of matter for a private member's bill.

As one who occasionally occupies the Speaker's chair, I am hesitant to get involved with controversial matters. As it turns out, this does not appear, at least at present, to be a controversial bill.

We try to deal too often with controversial bills in private members' hour. It's not that the House does not have a right to express its opinion on these things, it does. It is good to have discussion on them. But I believe they are best handled by way of resolution rather than trying to embarrass the government into changing government policy or dealing with major financial responsibilities.

This bill does not deal with financial responsibilities; nor does it try to change government policy in any way. I commend this bill to the members of the House, not just for its content, which of course I support, but also because of its nature. This is the kind of private members' public business we should have more often.

To get back to my main complaint, when private members' bills are introduced dealing with major matters and where we are trying to set government policy, members have only a limited time to discuss the issues. If one is getting into a private member's bill that deals with a major policy and we are limited to two or three members on each side of the House speaking for 10 minutes on that bill, it is unfair to the other members of the House who may wish to go on record as to why they are in favour or are against the bill and why they are voting the way they are.

My major objection to votes on private members' bills that deal with major policies is simply that it does not give adequate time for discussion by all members of the House.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the remarks of the six other members who have spoken this afternoon on Bill 159.

I believe that the support on all sides of the House will allow us to proceed to help some children who may otherwise have financial difficulties thrust upon them through no fault of their own.

This is an amendment which I hope will be helpful. I hope the time will be available for it to pass through the committee stage and be attended to within the next several weeks. We will be able to give a very nice Christmas present to a number of deserving people in this province.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

ENVIRONMENTAL LEGISLATION

336. Mr. Isaacs: Will the minister provide copies of all proposed amendments to the Environmental Protection Act and to the Environmental Assessment Act which are intended to reduce duplication of hearings and for which the minister, according to his statement to the standing committee on resources development on October 24, 1979 has received cabinet approval? (Tabled November 1, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Cabinet has agreed in principle to amendments to the relevant legislation for the purpose of eliminating duplicative hearings to the extent that is appropriate. In addition to possible amendments to the legislation for which I am responsible, important amendments will be required to legislation for which the ministries of Housing, Attorney General and Intergovernmental Affairs are responsible. These proposed amendments will be made available to the members of Legislature on their introduction for first reading.

337. Mr. Isaacs: Will the minister provide copies of all proposed amendments to the Environmental Protection Act and to the Environmental Assessment Act which are intended to permit parties other than the applicant to appeal orders of the director of environmental approvals and decisions or recommendations of the Environmental Assessment Board and which the minister, according to his statement in the Legislature during the afternoon of October 23, 1979 has coming forth in the not-too-distant future? (Tabled November 1, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Consideration is being given to amendments to the Environmental Protection Act and the Pesticides Act for the purpose of making appeal procedures uniform under these acts. These amendments will involve important changes to the Environmental Protection Act which have not been prepared at the present time. I also agreed, in the statement to the House referred to, that when these amendments are being prepared consideration will be given to the desirability of allowing the decisions under these acts also to be appealed or otherwise questioned by persons who are not technically parties to the appeal but who may be affected.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.
House in committee of the whole.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE OMBUDSMAN

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the recommendations contained in the seventh report of the select committee on the Ombudsman.

Mr. Chairman: There are a great number of recommendations in this report. I have gone through it and I see there are 17 recommendations. I would hope the committee would be agreeable to discuss those in order. If it is agreeable with the committee I will call each recommendation from 1 to 17. I call recommendation 1, which is on page 23.

Recommendation 1 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Recommendation 2, on page 29.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question? Where are you getting these recommendations from? Are they from the seventh report of the select committee?

Mr. Chairman: That's right, the seventh report. The second recommendation is on page 29. I could read it for the committee. Some of them are fairly lengthy.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, since there is some confusion as to where in the report you are starting, I wonder if we might start back on page—

Mr. Renwick: On page 29.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think there was some confusion as to whether we were starting later in the report and some members were a little confused.

Mr. M. N. Davison: We are on the second recommendation.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Could we start back? We were confused by the numbers. We were going by the back of the book and there seems to be a second summary of these items. Page 23, section B, item 1 is the particular item on which we would like to speak.

Mr. Chairman: That is the item I called for originally. The same recommendation is also on page 23 and it has been carried.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Chairman, with respect, you went rather quickly and we have been waiting to speak on that particular item. In all fairness, I think we should be able to speak on it.

Mr. Wildman: It was carried.

Mr. Chairman: I called the order. It would be up to the whole committee whether they would want to revert to recommendation 1.

Mr. M. N. Davison: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point raised by the member for Mississauga East: you very carefully and very slowly called the first item of business before the committee this evening. There was plenty of time for any member wishing to speak on it, to speak. No member chose to speak; quite properly you called the vote and the recommendation of the committee was carried. We should move on to the second recommendation of the select committee.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Speaking to that point of order, I recognize what the honourable member says is quite true. I admitted to him earlier that there was some confusion on our part as to which item was actually being talked about. I am asking for the forbearance of the honourable members to give this side of the House some consideration in dealing with these things. Their co-operation is really what I am requesting.

If it is the will of that particular party not to co-operate with us on it, that is up to them.

Mr. Martel: Graciously, we were about to accede to the member's request—

Mr. Renwick: It is just exactly that type of remark that prevents co-operation in this House, and you know it.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: —but that sort of conclusion leads us to suggest that we should not. If that is the attitude the member wants to take then we can accommodate him quite easily.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I asked for the member's consideration of this particular item. At a House leaders' meeting at noon today it was indicated to the House leader of the New Democratic Party—as a matter of fact he asked the question—that we would be questioning this particular point. As I'm saying I readily admit, and I don't too often admit it, I was totally confused when we first started dealing with this item. I ask for the consideration of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Renwick: You didn't give us a chance to reply before you used the usual tactic. You immediately said, "If that group wants to avoid co-operation, then fine."

Mr. Martel: You were being antagonistic.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Chairman, do I have the floor? I don't wish to argue with the honourable member and I don't wish to be antagonistic. I am merely asking for the forbearance of that party to allow us to consider this particular point.

Mr. Chairman: The request has been made to reconsider recommendation 1. I would have to say if there is unanimous consent of the committee that matter can be reopened; it was carried. Do I get unanimous consent?

Agreed to.

On recommendation 1:

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Thank you, Mr. Chairman; and I thank the honourable gentlemen for their consideration.

We have some concerns with this particular point. It really is one of being able to satisfy what this provision asks for. We certainly don't have a total objection to this committee's being allowed to sit while the House sits. We do feel it should be handled, by a vote of this Legislature in the same fashion we are handling sittings of the Hydro committee.

I'm quite sure the members will agree, if they speak to the chairman of the Hydro committee, there hasn't really been that much difficulty in arranging meetings for the Hydro committee. Because of the minority situation and shortage of people, in all parties really, we on this side of the House would prefer to deal with this item on the same basis as we deal with sittings of the Hydro committee while the House is sitting.

We just didn't want to leave it open-ended where it could arbitrarily sit at any time. This can cause some difficulties. We're certainly not of the opinion the Ombudsman committee should not sit at all during the session. Because committees tend to schedule sittings of all types, we do feel the House should have some control over when a particular committee sits. That was really our request.

Mr. Martel: Even if that motion were accepted, with greatest respect, I don't think it would really alter anything because a committee can only sit, based on the standing rules at the present time, when it's scheduled. For those extra sittings which occur, such as Hydro affairs, committees have to ask for permission to sit because it's only then, by resolution of the House, they can get authority to sit.

The Hydro committee at the present, as my friend knows, can only sit when we choose to bring that resolution forward; they might plead they want to, but if there's so much business going on, as occurs on Wednesdays when there are three major committees sitting, then the opportunity to say, "No, it's impossible," should, and does in fact, occur.

We have on occasion, as my friend knows—it happened just a week ago—refused the Hydro committee the authority to sit as on last Thursday afternoon. That still remains, whether this were to be carried or not.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: No.

Mr. Martel: Yes, very much so. It says: "The committee recommends that its order of reference be amended to include a provision whereby it is permitted to sit concurrently with the Legislature to consider from time to time interim reports tabled by the Ombudsman in the Legislature."

That doesn't say, nor is it anywhere in the rules, that it's going to be scheduled for any Wednesday, as the standing committees now are. All it recommends is it have the authority to sit concurrently, it doesn't say it has the authority to come to us and say, "We're sitting next Wednesday." Only by a resolution of this House would it get permission, by agreement from the three parties on a resolution, it would have to sit by resolution. I don't see where this gives them permission to say, "Despite the order of business, we're going to sit." It doesn't give them permission to do that at all, unless I misinterpret badly the recommendation that is before us.

I would concur with my friend. I don't think a committee which isn't scheduled to sit can come along and simply say, "Here we are, accept us whether you like it or not." There are occasions when it is impossible to do that because of the amount of business being considered by the various other committees. We try to use good sense. For example, we know we will move a number of motions to allow a third committee to sit next Wednesday afternoon as there are only two scheduled to sit at that time.

Only committees scheduled to sit can take it upon themselves to sit on a given occasion, as long as it conforms to the schedule we have adopted in this Legislature. If they are not scheduled to sit, they can't come and say, "Here we are, we're going to sit." They don't have that authority.

I would think my friend's fears are groundless. In the final analysis, they are going to have to get a motion through the House in order to get permission. That can only come if the various parties agree to allow the motion to be brought forward by the government House leader. We all know the difficulties in this regard. As my friend knows, we have objected on occasion to allowing committees to sit simply because there was too much going on. I wouldn't think this would alter that one jot.

Maybe my friend has reasons to think otherwise and I am prepared to listen to those reasons, but I don't see it happening.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I can only make my judgement and state my opinion in accordance with what I read. My honourable friend is entitled to his opinion when he says my fears are groundless. The relevant section reads, ". . . its order of reference be amended to include a provision whereby it is permitted to sit concurrently with the Legislature . . ." Period, that's it.

That simply means what it says, in my opinion, and I stand to be corrected; it says the committee can sit concurrently with the Legislature. That means the committee and the chairman of that committee have the right to call a meeting of that committee at any time the Legislature is sitting. My friend is shaking his head and saying I'm wrong. I would ask him to explain to me, then, if what I say is not true and the chairman of that committee called a meeting and said, "We're going to sit on Tuesday afternoon," how can we prevent that? Can he please explain it to me?

Mr. Martel: Let me draw the member's attention to those six words, "whereby it is permitted to sit." This House will determine when it is permitted to sit. It is not a regularly scheduled sitting day, as my friend knows. He and I worked to draft the schedule of when the various committees are to sit. He knows no other committee is allowed simply to jump in and say, "We're sitting then." Only those scheduled committees can do so.

These words are very clear. It says, "whereby it is permitted to sit concurrently." It has to get permission from this Legislature to sit.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: It doesn't say that.

Mr. Martel: What they are saying is they want to sit concurrently, provided they can get permission to sit.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: It doesn't say that.

Mr. Martel: Of course it does. It says, "whereby it is permitted to sit concurrently"—

Hon. Mr. Gregory: It says "to include a provision whereby it is permitted"—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury East has the floor.

[8:15]

Mr. Martel: Because it is not regularly scheduled it can only get permission to sit concurrently if we, as a Legislature, give it permission. If it is not regularly scheduled, there is no way they can interfere with the standing schedule we devised at the beginning of the session unless we give them that authority.

They can only get that authority when we bring forward a motion whereby the House accepts that it's going to sit.

I don't see where they get any authority to infringe on the schedule as it is drafted and adopted by the House; that's the schedule we're working by. It doesn't allow the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs to sit whenever it wants to. In fact, as my friend knows, even the other committees which are scheduled in certain time slots, if they want an additional time slot have to come back to the Legislature to get that time slot. The standing committee on social development, for example, can't decide it's going to sit on Thursday night, but if it needs Thursday night we could give it.

Perhaps my friend recalls the long debate this past spring on rent control. Whenever the standing general government committee which was studying rent control, wanted additional time to sit beyond that which was scheduled, it had to come back and get the agreement of this House to sit, even though it was scheduled to sit on Wednesdays. When it wanted to sit on Thursdays, that committee had to come back to the Legislature to get permission to sit on Thursdays. No chairman can simply take it upon himself to infringe on the schedule which has been adopted by this House.

I think my friend's fears are ungrounded, not only because of the wording of this, not only because of the schedule, but because of the common sense that prevails around here in scheduling. We know we can only schedule so many things in a given day and we have frequently said no. Conversely, we have frequently said yes when it was requested and could be worked in conveniently. I think that's all that is asked. I don't think that gives any committee—it certainly doesn't give this committee—the right to decide, "Yoo-hoo, we're here and we want to sit, and we're going to sit." They're going to need a motion to sit, because they're not anywhere in the schedule that was adopted by this House at the beginning of the session.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, we seem to have a misunderstanding. What has happened with the committee on the Ombudsman is that we have reports brought to us, sometimes they are very timely, and we feel there are occasions when we ought to have the right to seek the permission of the House to sit while the House is in session. Thus far, it has been taken for granted that we sit only in the off-period. This, on occasion, leads to our deliberations being very much in a vacuum because of the delay.

It is a fact there are many committees that have the right to sit, and indeed the obligation to sit, while the House is in session. But it does not mean—and I think the member for Mississauga East, above all others, ought to know this—that the chairman may call a meeting of that committee in an ad hoc fashion to conduct business. We all know that arrangements have to be made.

What this is seeking is simply the right to not always be blocked from sitting on the basis that we are relegated to sitting only when the House is not in session. To me it would be an absurdity—and I would hope the member for Mississauga East recognizes we are all responsible people here—to suggest that in seeking the approval of this recommendation the committee on the Ombudsman wanted to hare off in all directions and sit wherever and whenever it chose. That certainly was not our position.

We just felt there ought to be some provision where we could get into the line of the scheduling so that we might be given consideration with all the other committees entitled to sit when the House was in session and be scheduled in accordance with your normal scheduling practices.

I really believe there is a grave misunderstanding on the part of the government members as to what it is we are seeking. Surely we should have the right to stand in line to be scheduled if there are times available for us to sit when the House is in session. I would have thought it would have a great appeal for the government members, in this time of restraint and constraint, that we would be able to sit when we are not permitted to charge additional fees for sitting on this committee.

Truly, you have the scheduling in the hands of the House leaders; we would not have any part in that. I would suggest it couldn't be a disruptive thing to allow us to stand in line.

Mr. M. N. Davison: As a former chairman of that excellent and important committee, I would like to add another element to the discussion. I think what is really at issue is not whether the committee would be sitting on Monday nights when nobody else is around, or whether it would be sitting on Tuesday mornings or that kind of question, what is important is whether or not the committee will be able to sit when the House is in session.

That's how I read "concurrently." "Concurrently" in the context of a select committee means when the House is in session, not when there happen to be members sitting about in this chamber debating some point. I think it's important the government benches understand the context of the word "concurrently." Without the power being asked by the committee they are generally not allowed, except in very odd and peculiar circumstances, to sit when the House is in session. I think it important they be given that right.

Anybody who has served on the committee of committee chairmen, as I did at that time, would remember there was a very well worked-out arrangement as to when committees would be sitting. In the rules of the House there are time slots for various committees. We can all work that out.

There is another element to this that is fairly important and I would like the government to pay attention to it. There are two committees in this assembly which I view, hopefully traditionally, as opposition committees, committees that are chaired by opposition members regardless of the circumstances. One is the public accounts committee and the other is the select committee on the Ombudsman. Both deal with servants of the Legislature rather than issues or other matters that revolve more around the government. So it is important that we understand it is a committee dealing with the problems and issues that concern the Legislature collectively.

I think it's a very reasonable recommendation and I don't know why the government is so up tight about it. These members of the committee aren't going to want to sit all the time. There is a reason why they have asked for this and I think I can put it to the government fairly simply and fairly clearly. It is this: Up until this time the Ombudsman in Ontario has reported to the Legislative Assembly through the Speaker twice a year. Even though the Ombudsman's Act only requires an annual report, the Ombudsman was reporting twice a year, which meant there was never more than a six-month time lag involved in a particular case because of a reporting period.

The committee then could deal with issues and cases that came out of that report during the winter break or during the summer break and it worked out very nicely. What happened, though, is that the Ombudsman, with some good reason, has moved to a new reporting system. The Ombudsman will now be reporting on an annual basis. There are benefits in that there is no need for the select committee to review the statistical analysis of the office and a lot of other things that go on at the office on a basis of twice a year, once a year will serve. But the Ombudsman understands that there is a certain urgency involved in some of his recommendations. I will talk about that in a minute.

As well as moving to an annual report, what the Ombudsman is doing is telling the Legislature that he will, from time to time, present the assembly with interim reports, reports that need special and immediate attention.

I can't read into that what the Ombudsman will do. My guess would be that some of those reports may well be recommendations denied, that the Ombudsman will come to the Legislative Assembly with. I think in those cases it is important that the assembly deal with them as expeditiously as possible. The way you do that is to have a committee like the select committee, or perhaps eventually we will make this a standing committee of the assembly which can sit when the House is in session on that kind of basis to deal with interim reports.

I ask you, please, to look at the recommendation in terms of qualifications. There is a very important qualification in that recommendation, and it is contained in the words "interim reports." The committee will not be asking, or wanting, to sit during the session to study an annual report of the Ombudsman but rather a special or interim report of the Ombudsman, which I suspect will be dealing with a case in which there is a recommendation denied.

If that sounds a bit dry, consider what it means in more human terms. The majority of recommendations denied when I was on the committee involved the Workmen's Compensation Board, and I suspect still do. I would ask members to think about their constituents who might be in the position that we are talking about. A constituent has had an industrial accident and, perhaps with the assistance of his or her MPP, has gone through the entire appeal procedure at the Workmen's Compensation Board. In spite of the fact the constituent was right, the MPP has referred that case, after the rejection by the board, to the Ombudsman. We go through another lengthy process there, and we then have an Ombudsman report that says, "Yes, the constituent is right, the constituent deserves and merits compensation," and the board rejects it. Then it is going to go to the Legislative Assembly and eventually to the select committee.

If we don't pass this, what you are in fact saying is, "Well, it is okay for that constituent to wait six months or a year, another six months or another year to have his case heard, to have the case brought to the floor of the Legislative Assembly." That's wrong; and think about it in terms of one of your constituents.

I feel very strongly about these matters because I represent an industrial riding and I have a lot of compensation cases. I know that the Workmen's Compensation Board is imperfect and that they make some mistakes. They make them with my constituents. You are asking members to go back to their ridings, to talk to a worker whose livelihood has been lost because of an accident, who has been badly treated by an institution, by the Workmen's Compensation Board, and to say, "It is okay for you to wait another six months, because we have got this pleasant rule in the assembly that doesn't permit this special committee, because it is a select committee, to sit and deal with your problem."

I think the government should understand that because the Ombudsman moved to this new procedure it is important the committee have the flexibility to deal with those cases. I wouldn't want to vote against this recommendation, then go back and explain to one of my constituents why they are going to have to wait six months for justice. I don't think members in the government want to do that either.

I think if they look at it in the context of the individual—and that is what we are talking about when we are talking about Ombudsman cases and Ombudsman recommendations, individual constituents—when you look at it in that light, I think the members of the government can agree it would be a good idea to provide that kind of flexibility to this committee so that citizens in the province could be better served. I hope the government will reconsider its doubts about this.

It is going to be up to the assembly as to when committees can sit and the timing. That committee is not going to want to be sitting all the time, they are only going to be dealing with these special cases. I think it is a good recommendation; I think the government should join with the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party in supporting it.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I would like to thank the members of the opposition parties for enlightening me in explaining their particular viewpoints regarding this clause. I am still having some difficulty with it, in the way it is worded and the explanation of the member for Hamilton Centre that it still requires the permission of the Legislature in order to sit. Perhaps the members of the opposition would consider amending that recommendation so that it reads somewhat in this fashion: "Recommends that its order of reference be amended to include a provision whereby, with the agreement of the Legislature, it is permitted to sit concurrently with the Legislature," et cetera.

Mr. Martel: Permission of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I am merely asking if you could consider amending that particular section that way.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If you are asking for a response I would be glad to give you one.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: All right.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I tried to make this point earlier. The Ombudsman select committee is a special committee because we are dealing with a servant of the Legislature, not of the government. It is important that the committee operate in that framework of a group of legislators working together. There is no question of government members, opposition members, there is none of the creative tension that normally goes on in this kind of forum.

What you are asking is that because of the strange ways in which this House works the government House leader is going to have to get up and move a motion. I think it is easier just to leave it as it is worded by the committee.

Obviously the committee, which is composed of members of all three parties, had considered it very carefully over the past few months. I think they have a good recommendation, I think the wording is perfectly workable and I think we should pass it as it is.

Mr. Nixon: I have a feeling that the honourable minister, the government whip, is more concerned about this than is necessary. I think the members of all parties have made it clear that their understanding of this motion is that it would still be at the motion of the Legislature that the meetings of the committee would be scheduled, just as any other committee.

My own feeling is I would hope the Legislature would move to change the status of the Ombudsman's select committee and make it a standing committee some time, the sooner the better as far as I am concerned.

I agree with the honourable member who spoke a few moments ago, that it has the same importance in the House, and particularly to the opposition, as the public accounts committee; that while they are responsible to the Legislature rather than the government, still the opposition plays a special role in public accounts and to some extent does as well in the Ombudsman's committee.

I believe the understanding has been expressed, and certainly it suits me, is that what the committee is asking for is the right to sit during the sessions of the Legislature and not be relegated only to the periods between sessions. That would mean they would be slotted in our committee activities the same way other committees are.

For example, as a possibility, the Ombudsman's committee might expect to have permission from the House to sit regularly every Thursday morning. The honourable minister, the whip of the Tory party might, from his allocation of members, find that inconvenient; and if that is so, certainly some other suitable time could surely be found.

My own experience is that while there are four committees meeting on Thursday morning, the committees are small; the work they are doing may at times be under great pressure and certainly be the centre of much public attention, still on an ordinary Thursday-to-Thursday order of business not many members are involved, the work tends to be routine; and as a matter of fact many of the members of the House—maybe I am wrong in this—do not consider Thursday morning a time that commands a good deal of their committee involvement. For a few, of course, the opposite is true; but my own feeling is that another committee could be scheduled there regularly quite readily. The Ombudsman committee would certainly be the one to be so scheduled.

This motion simply wants the Ombudsman committee to be treated like a standing committee and for that reason I hope there is going to be agreement here. As far as I am concerned, since it is a general understanding that the scheduling of all committees is by order of the House, and while it doesn't depend on agreement of the House leaders the House leaders' committee is more or less a facilitation through which the various caucuses can express their views—the House will eventually decide the order of business—I would have no objection to the inclusion of the amendment that the honourable minister has suggested.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, as a new member of the committee and one who probably doesn't understand the full import of committee activities on things like North Pickering, I must say that I was impressed on going into the committee that the Ombudsman presented to us some suggestions for cutting down the bureaucracy, for cutting down the amount of paperwork, and for facilitating the flow of business.

We were to have moved from two reports a year to one, and we were to deal with specific recommendations denied whenever the Ombudsman felt that it was appropriate to bring them to the attention of this House. That, as has been explained so well by a couple of my colleagues, is the reason for this amendment. It's a simple smoothing of the bureaucratic process by which recommendations from the Ombudsman are dealt with.

One does suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the suggestion made by the member for Mississauga East that the consent of the House has to be given every time this committee wishes to sit, is almost a negative to the recommendation before us. The recommendation is that the committee be empowered to sit and the member is suggesting that every time it wishes to sit it has to come here to seek permission. If it has to do that, we don't need this recommendation because it can do that anyway.

I am sure we all consider the committee chairman and the members of the committee will act in a responsible manner. I don't understand the fears of the member for Mississauga East. I don't understand what the committee might attempt to do that would frustrate government business. It seems to me that the committee can only sit when there is an interim report from the Ombudsman. The committee cannot influence the Ombudsman to bring forward an interim report because it wishes to disrupt the business of the House.

We are left with a procedure that smooths the flow of business, that leaves those few recommendations-denied cases that have to be brought before this House into a smoother flow of business, enables us to deal with them, enables us to avoid the situation where members of the public who feel they have been aggrieved are told they will have to wait six or nine months or maybe even more, until the committee gets around to dealing with their particular cases.

It is a smoothing of the work flow and I do not understand why the government is standing in its way. I just don't see what the issue is.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: I note the suggestion has been made that we amend the recommendation and I would like to be absolutely certain as to the legality of that procedure.

It is true we are going through this report in a clause-by-clause way because the committee has felt for some time that we did not give sufficient attention to the recommendations when they were passed as a general report. But this is a report of a committee; this is a recommendation of a committee none the less, and I would like to have a ruling as to whether we can, in fact, amend the recommendation of the committee as it comes to this House. It would seem to me that we either approve the recommendation or deny it.

Mr. Chairman: I would say to the member for St. George on her point of order, this report is being handled in the same manner as a bill before the Legislature. This House and, particularly in this case, in committee of the whole House, has the right to do as it sees fit. If any member of the committee wishes to make an amendment, I would feel it is the responsibility of the chair to accept the amendment and then the committee can deal with that as they see fit.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Chairman, may I then move that amendment? I haven't completed writing it. Perhaps I could read it to you and then deliver it to you.

I move that item 1, section B be amended by adding the words "with the agreement of the Legislature" between "whereby" and "it," so it reads:

"... its order of reference be amended to include a provision whereby, with the agreement of the Legislature, it is permitted to sit concurrently with the Legislature to consider from time to time interim reports tabled by the Ombudsman in the Legislature."

Mr. Chairman: I hope you will send that in writing to the table.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I will complete it right now.

Mr. Renwick: With some reluctance and with the hope that I won't confuse the situation any further I can well understand the concern the chief whip of the government party is expressing about this matter, because of the obvious principle that a select committee can sit both when the House is in session and when the House is not in session. That distinguishes it from a standing committee, even though in our procedure on most occasions the select committee sits only when the House is not in session, but it is of the nature of a select committee that it is not subject to the same impediment as a standing committee.

Therefore, it seems to me the chief government whip's concern is not an unreasonable concern, that if that is so, why do we have to have this particular clarification and that it could sit on the call of the chairman, subject of course to the usual rules of the House with respect to the ordering of business.

I think it is helpful, however, in view of the actual specific words of this recommendation, that we take it as a step to clarify the procedure as requested by the select committee on the Ombudsman. Therefore I am quite prepared to accept an appropriate amendment. I had hoped to get to my feet a moment or two before the chief government whip moved his amendment, because I don't want to cavil about it and I think we now want to reach an agreement about what the amendment should say.

My concern about the actual language the government whip has used is that someone could construe it to mean that it required the consent of all the members of the House. When you say it requires the agreement of the House, someone could say in that situation you need the consent of every member. I think what the chief whip of the government is concerned about is that the proposed change in the order of reference in the committee be clearly subject to the usual ordering of business of the House. I think it would be much more appropriate if instead of the rather abrupt wording of the government whip it said in substance that its order of reference be amended to include a provision whereby, subject to the usual procedures for the ordering of the business of the Legislature, "it is permitted to sit concurrently with the Legislature to consider from time to time . . ."

I take it that is exactly what you want to be able to accomplish, that the orderly procedures of the House mean the House leaders meet, they work out whatever the ordering of the business is, and if the chairman of the select committee on the Ombudsman comes and says, "We have an interim report of the Ombudsman, and we want to consider it," the House leaders will take it into consideration and in due course the government House leader will stand and move that the select committee on the Ombudsman be authorized to sit concurrently with the Legislature. That is what I understand the problem is.

I can understand the concern of the government whip. I would hope some language such as I have suggested, rather than the actual language proposed by the government whip, would perhaps more adequately meet the situation.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Gregory has moved that item 1 of section B be amended by adding the words "with the agreement of the Legislature" after the word "whereby" in the second line.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Perhaps I can try once more to clarify the difference between standing and select committees, and how and why this proposal is here and why the government whip's amendment to it is not appropriate.

The essential difference between a standing and a select committee lies in when those committees can sit. A standing committee can sit only when the assembly is in session; a select committee, on the other hand, can sit only when the assembly is not in session. In both cases there's a procedure determined as to the slotting of committees.

So there are two elements involved; the first is when a committee can sit and the second is the time slot in that period. There are the processes whereby one goes through the committee of select committee chairmen at the beginning of each of those periods when the House isn't in session and through the House leaders of each of the parties when the House is in session.

With the resolution of the assembly, any select committee can sit when the House is in session but it requires a resolution of the assembly. Under the procedures suggested by the recommendation of the committee it won't require a resolution of the assembly but will involve only the normal procedures for slotting. So when we give permission to sit concurrently, what it means is we give permission to sit during the session.

As to the slotting, which is the real concern of the government whip, we will have to go through the normal procedures anyway. I just don't see the necessity of an amendment which says: ". . . with the agreement of the Legislative Assembly."

Mr. Nixon: I was listening to the comments of the member for Riverdale. For him to suggest the wording of the amendment as it now is suggests somehow that every member of the Legislature would have to approve, doesn't make sense to my untrained mind. I don't want to get into an argument with anybody; I just feel it really would be a waste of our time, since we want to deal with all the recommendations in this report tonight, if we couldn't just get on with the thing.

Frankly, I feel the amendment, abrupt though it may be, simply says the committee will sit at its own behest but with the approval of the Legislature. We know very well that whether it's in the rules or not the Legislature is really the final authority on which committee sits and when it sits.

I personally don't want any specific reference that even implies the role of the House leaders in this—that we're supposed to attempt to facilitate—but essentially whatever the House leaders may decide, with the advice they get from their caucuses—

Mr. Renwick: Don't try to cow me.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, shoot, my intention is not to cow the honourable member. I thought when the rather simple and abrupt amendment came forward, we could simply pass the thing. The only reason I felt I wanted to make a comment was that I thought the member for Riverdale—and since he says I cowed him, I have a great deal more self-respect than I had before because I certainly never cowed him before—all I'm suggesting is that the amendment, abrupt perhaps and simple though it may be, has a very clear meaning and it simply reinforces what we all understand. Certainly, I hope we can just get on with it and approve it.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Just one final question, Mr. Chairman. How is the agreement of the Legislative Assembly achieved? Is it achieved by way of resolution? If so, that's exactly the situation the committee is in now and that's exactly the situation it would like to alter. If that's the case, if that is how agreement is achieved by way of resolution—then I'm not supporting the amendment because it frustrates the purpose of the resolution.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments or questions on the amendment? Is the committee ready for the amendment?

Those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Recommendation 1, as amended, agreed to.

Recommendations 2 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

On recommendation 9:

Hon. Mrs. Birch: On behalf of the Minister of Community and Social Services, we agree with this recommendation in principle. Accommodation has been made to carry out the intent of this particular recommendation.

Recommendation 9 agreed to.

Recommendation 10 agreed to.

On recommendation 11:

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Chairman, at the time of the deliberations of the select committee, the concerns of the Ministry of Health with respect to the original recommendation of the Ombudsman and the revised recommendation of the committee were made known. It is written in such a way that it is a recommendation we will certainly keep in mind in those few, very difficult instances where a particular procedure is either not available in Ontario or not permitted in Ontario and not, therefore, listed in the schedule.

The procedure now is to consult the Ontario Medical Association as to what would be an appropriate fee if it were, first, a service that would be provided in the province and would be agreed on as a medically necessary service and, second, what its value would be.

Mr. Nixon: Are there many of those?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, there are not. There are very few but, nevertheless, they are very difficult to appraise. They are very few and far between, particularly when you take into account that in the United States—and it's primarily the States we're talking about—people who would be going to clinics or facilities in the United States face a schedule of fees in some parts of that country which tends to be two, three or four times what the fees are here.

Mr. Nixon: They don't have our advantages.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That's right, they don't. But they soon will, by all accounts.

Mr. Nixon: They say this is the best in the world.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We will certainly bear this in mind.

Recommendation 11 agreed to.

On recommendation 12:

Mr. Chairman: Recommendation 12 is also found on page 102, schedule 9.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I wish to indicate that the Workmen's Compensation Board has accepted the recommendation and will evaluate the gentleman for permanent disability assistance.

Mr. Nixon: Did you say "evaluate" or "grant"?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: He has been accepted. Prior to this time, he had not been accepted as someone eligible for evaluation. In other words, the board has accepted the recommendation.

Recommendation 12 agreed to.

On recommendations 13 to 17 inclusive:

Mr. Chairman: Recommendation 13 is found on page 106, schedule 9, part B, number 13.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, with your permission I would like to ramble a little on two or three of these because they all deal with the same thing basically, the psychiatric assessments involving compensation cases—whether it's recommendation 13, or the following one as well. They deal basically with the same sort of problems.

Mr. Chairman: Under those circumstances, I'm sure the committee will allow you to ramble.

Mr. Rotenberg: Since when did you get permission to ramble?

Mr. Martel: I always respect the chair, my friend.

I want to indicate to the minister some displeasure with respect to the manner in which the Workmen's Compensation Board deals with psychiatric assessments and the problems affecting workers who, first, have been injured physically and who subsequently develop some sort of psychiatric problem.

As a member who, in a five-month period this year, dealt with 290 claims I have come across a substantial number of men who have been injured, back injuries particularly. These men who work in the mines, as my friend knows, develop a lot of back problems. Frequently there is a delay in assessment, there is the length of time doctors allow to try—if I can use the word—conservative treatments, and then ultimately there is the decision to perform surgery. Finally, with the time that elapses before we start rehabilitation, it's been my experience that worker after worker who has developed that sort of back problem, with all of the delays that go with it, also develops psychiatric problems—in fact, many, many of them do.

I've encouraged the board over the years to try to deal with these men much more quickly. As I've said, even if they were just playing around with widgets to get their minds off the injury, it's my opinion we might not see the psychiatric problem developing as seriously as it does. When that problem develops we're really into it.

The Workmen's Compensation Board in their wisdom—or lack of wisdom—do a number of things. After the physical disablement has reached the point where it's not going to get any better, the board says the worker is capable of resuming some form of modified work in conjunction with the attending physician, frequently without the concurrence of the attending physician, and you have that psychiatric problem that develops.

When that psychiatric problem develops and at this stage the board determines it is going to give the worker a pension, occasionally it will give a supplement but usually it bases the pension solely on the physical disability. It might give him a 20 per cent disability because it's one vertebra or two vertebrae, but invariably it gives 20 or 25 per cent. That worker who is psychologically impaired is supposed to try to support a family on 25 per cent and go to work.

I have men in a number of cases I have dealt with. I think of one in particular who walked with two canes. The doctors say he is only 20 per cent disabled physically, but psychologically he is completely disabled, and then you try to relate it to the physical impairment.

I wish I could get the minister's attention. Maybe if I could get the minister's attention, it would help.

Mr. Bounsall: I'm translating for him, Elie.

Mr. Martel: He might need some help. Let me pick it up again.

When the worker is given a 20 per cent disability pension, when the worker is assessed a physical impairment of 20 per cent and he walks with two canes and he can't work, you then go up to the compensation board and say, "But psychiatrically he can't return to work; nobody is going to hire him." He himself is convinced he is totally disabled. He might well not need the two canes to walk with if he were functioning properly, mentally. We can't get through to the Workmen's Compensation Board that as far as earning and returning to work is concerned he is totally disabled. They say, "He is only 20 per cent disabled and we will give him 20 per cent for his psychological impairment."

Well, he has now got 40 per cent. I ask the minister, because I don't know, surely when a person reaches that stage of psychiatric disorder he is totally disabled. He can't perform any meaningful work. It might be fear that prevents him from returning.

I have a case now of a man who is fearful of returning to work. When I sit and chat with him by the hour he keeps telling me he is prepared to try; then you suggest something to him and he says, "But I'm totally disabled." The board says, "He is only 20 per cent disabled but we'll give him a supplement," and so he is in the process of losing his home.

But isn't he totally disabled? If he did not have that problem before he was injured and it came along as a result of depression or something after that physical disability and he was capable of carrying on before that, surely there's a responsibility to treat him psychiatrically. It's very difficult to get the board to agree to it, although they will say yes, it's very difficult. They still always want to pay the 20 per cent; they'll give you a supplement, but the worker for all intents and purposes is totally disabled, although only 20 per cent physically maybe.

Somebody has to answer for me, if he could perform before he was injured, what it is that triggers him to become so psychiatrically disabled. What is it that triggers that? Is it the accident, the depression from the accident? He was normal before and if he is not after, then surely it led from that accident—as a result of that accident. It wasn't the accident that did it all, I am the first one to agree, but something disabled him psychiatrically that wasn't there prior to his injury.

I don't know how we get that across to the Workmen's Compensation Board because there are literally hundreds of men who are in that position as are the cases before us. I don't know how to deal with it, because if one talks to the Injured Workmen's Consultants, if one talks to the Union of Injured Workers, in my opinion—and I'm no doctor—most of those men are suffering from that sort of condition.

Sooner or later in this province we have to grapple with that problem because, you see, they then go on the welfare roll to survive. But they should not be the responsibility of the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), because it would appear to me as a layman—and if I am wrong, tell me—that all of their problems started from the day he or she got injured and progressed from there. Physically they got better to a point where there was a permanent disability, but at the same time or some months later the psychiatric problem developed.

I just think it is time that the minister said to the Workmen's Compensation Board, in his capacity as the one to whom they report, that they have to grapple with that problem seriously. Maybe they are doing some work on it; in my opinion they aren't. If one looks at the Ombudsman's report about a year ago, similar cases were there. If one looks at it now, similar cases are there. If one were to talk to the Union of Injured Workers or to colleagues in this House, my friend's colleague—his friend to his right has a full series of problems of the same nature. I suspect rather strongly that if we could sort out the clean breaks—the broken arm, the broken leg—from that type of injury, we would find that of the group made up of those workers whom we find in the Union of Injured Workers and so on, most of the four per cent of the cases where we have difficulty are in that category.

I well recall a constituent of mine a number of years ago. He was the highest-paid bonus miner at the Falconbridge Nickel Mine and after his back injury he became a virtual vegetable. His pension, I believe, was $100 a month.

A man doesn't go from being the highest-paid bonus worker at Falconbridge—because that is hard work underground—to trying to survive on $100. This man would fall on the floor and they would have to pick him up; he couldn't get up off the floor.

I can show the minister dozens of files. As I say, in the first five months of this year my office handled 290 compensation claims alone. Invariably I could tell those who had this type of problem when they walked into my office. You reach a point where you don't even have to ask them. You just listen to the rambling in the first three or four minutes after they sit down and you can almost say to them, "You have a low back problem," the answer would be yes.

It just repeats itself over and over. The cases keep showing up here, but we never grapple with the problem. What bothers me is we will resolve these few problems but we never deal with the large number that are out there—people who have had tremendous work histories, great earning capacities, good supporters of their families who ultimately end up on the welfare rolls and who are just totally destroyed as people.

This is the problem that is before us; this history is there. You look at it quickly, as I did over the dinner hour. It started in 1971 and continued to now. If you were to talk to that man I presume he would give you a litany of the doctors he has seen and who have shafted him in the process; it is just so repetitive and so obvious. We can never get it resolved.

I guess my frustration in dealing with the compensation cases I have is not so much that you can't get decisions ultimately that are favourable if you have time to go to half a dozen doctors who have looked at him. The OHIP costs for those people have got to be astronomical. Once the board says, "You are no longer our responsibility," then they start making the rounds charging it to OHIP. It is just endless. The number of specialists you can write to on any one of these cases is stupendous. No matter how often we plead for this type of case, nothing ever changes.

Surely it is time we started to deal with these problems, if need be having psychiatrists deal with them, sooner than we are doing—before they have reached a point beyond hope.

Recently I received a letter from the psychiatrist on a case who said, "It is too late. There is nothing I can do for him any more." The man is only about 38. If we started to deal with those cases quicker, get to whether he is going to have to have surgery, get it done, get him back on his feet with rehab quicker, make sure he has an adequate income while he is being rehabilitated and do the things that would prevent that psychological problem. If it then developed we were not going to be able to help him, then we would have to assess whether the injury, followed by the psychiatric disorder, is making him totally incapacitated.

I am no doctor, but having dealt with many of these cases I happen to believe they become disabled psychiatrically stemming from the original injury. That has to be grappled with and grappling with it one case at a time is no good.

I would like to hear the minister's comments because as a doctor he has dealt with this field. He understands the problem.

We simply have to deal with it now. To put it off any longer would be irresponsible. All of us over here would support the minister if he said we were going to deal with this problem and get to the bottom of it once and for all. I think everyone would be absolutely delighted to hear that from the minister tonight.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, the member and I have had the privilege on many occasions of discussing this and other problems related to injured workmen. I venture to say there aren't many areas about which we disagree. He touched on one. He alluded to it because I told him earlier, that recommendations 13, 14 and 15 have been accepted by the board. So I might say that with regard to this select committee's report, each and every recommendation has been accepted in toto. In the case of the benefit-of-doubt recommendation, it has been sent to committee for review, which is quite in keeping with the wishes of the committee and the Ombudsman.

The matter the honourable member has referred to is a matter which is not new to him, not new to this Legislature and not new to any physician in the province. As a neurosurgeon I suppose it would be unusual for me to attend any medical meeting and not have one of the presenters give a paper on the untreatable back or the ultimate minority of back patients that end up in the untreatable category. They have gone through all the rehabilitation, all of the surgery, all the psychiatric treatment that is available to modern medicine, yet there still remains this hard core of people who, for some unexplained reason, don't seem to respond to the treatment.

Perhaps we don't understand enough. One day we may understand more. We are better than we were 10 years ago and far many times better than we were in 1930, when we didn't even understand there was a disc that could pop out. Things change, and perhaps this is an area that will change.

I don't know what the answer is, but I like to think for every case the member and others see where this is the problem, the psychological overlay to an underlying organic problem is in the minority. Certainly, in my own experience in practice that's true. If one gets into the rehabilitation process at an early phase with the reassurance of an individual's future and his relationships with his fellow man in society in my experience rehabilitation is usually possible.

The member is quite right. The key to it is early rehabilitation and early encouragement of an individual that his life isn't through because he has had such an injury to his back. I don't know really whether the cases we are seeing are just that core that can't be helped or not. Each individual who has a back injury will have a reaction to it that is a function of what he was before the accident and a function of what happens to him after the accident. Both of those two components are always there. They form the basis of our individual reactions to our individual problems.

The member well knows, as he hobbled around this building four months ago and as he pitied me a month ago as I hobbled around with a back problem, we all try to handle it in our own way. There does remain this hard core, and I don't know what the answer is. I like to think the majority of them are being handled in a very adequate way by the board and the few we are talking about now, if they are true cases, as the member suggests, have slipped through the system.

In any event, I would agree with him if there are people who are not being treated adequately by the board in terms of compensation, rehabilitation and vocational assistance, we should make every human endeavour possible to reassess on a regular and periodic basis the criteria which we use for psychological evaluation and compensation on the basis of a psychological aspect.

I will do everything in my power to make sure the board, if it is not already doing so, which I must find out first, does have this regular review of the criteria it uses so that sort of sensitivity which is so important to that particular type of problem is always present and always available for the board in its dealings with injured workers.

Mr. Martel: I am trying to defer it for a moment because there is still something that is disturbing me. Suppose a worker suffers a physical disability and, let us say, the board assesses him as 20 per cent disabled because, as my friend knows, the board goes for some time and waits until the worker reaches a level where it feels there will be no more improvement and then it assesses a pension rating.

Let's say they give him 20 per cent, but he becomes psychologically impaired. In other words to cite a case, the man is now using two canes but the doctors tell me he doesn't need them. The psychiatrist I wrote to said, "He's reached a point where we really can't do much for him." The board then gives 20 per cent more.

The question is how disabled is he? Is he 20 per cent physically disabled and only eligible for a 20 per cent supplement, adding another 20 per cent to his disability? Or is he, in fact, totally disabled from the accident—not totally physically disabled, but psychologically disabled as well? That's how the problem lies in trying to get recognition of that. Can we get recognition, let me put it that way, of the fact that he has become 100 per cent disabled of which maybe 80 per cent is psychological, but he simply can't work?

That's where my difference lies with the board, which comes along and gives him 20 per cent more. The question is, is he totally disabled? That's what we can never grapple with, I am anything but an expert, but when I see these people and when I talk to them and listen to them, I know there is no way of getting them back to work. The man gets another 20 per cent. But is he 100 per cent disabled medically when you combine the physical and the psychological impairment?

Or the silly 40 per cent figure that comes up. How do you determine the guy is 40 per cent disabled if psychologically he is not capable of working again? I am sure my friend has seen them. To what do we attribute that extra amount that makes him totally disabled? How do we arrive at a 40 per cent pension? I am not sure. I guess what I am saying is, is he 100 per cent disabled?

I don't know the answer. All I know is he is not going back to work and we see all kinds of people who end up on Canada pension. Thank goodness Canada pension is a little more receptive to the problem the man has in dealing with the board. Maybe the minister can tell me: can we blame the psychiatric problem on the physical problem and, if so, how do we determine he is only an additional 20 per cent disabled? Or is he 100 per cent disabled? Maybe the minister could tell me.

Mrs. Campbell: I would like to address my remarks to the minister in a somewhat different vein. As the minister knows, we at the Ombudsman committee have been wrestling with the whole doctrine of reasonable doubt. It seemed to me that following along the lines of the argument of the member for Sudbury East, we were getting to the point of a philosophical overview of many of these cases which up until now have fallen because the Workmen's Compensation Board was not really addressing itself to the question of reasonable doubt.

I have welcomed the minister's very sympathetic review of the recommendations of the Ombudsman and, in turn, of the committee. If the minister would only look at these cases, having in mind at least the doctrine of reasonable doubt, it might be another approach to dealing with the group rather than resolving, in a rather inefficient fashion, one case at a time.

I think what the member for Sudbury East is saying is, can we not get to the root of this basic problem? I have to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that while I don't handle anything like the number of cases he does, I do have cases which fall into this same category and I recognize there are problems. It isn't an easy thing because we do have to prove at least in a prima facie way that there is a psychological or psychiatric overtone to the problem. It seems to me that having accepted the position of the Ombudsman on the matter of reasonable doubt to a large degree, the Workmen's Compensation Board seems to have put aside this one section to be dealt with in a different fashion.

I would hope the minister would try to review with the board the positions they see with reference to these very real cases. To me they're tragic in that we know it's possible that something may be done. To lose that chance through a lack of any real effort is troublesome to me.

Perhaps from that point of view, apart from any other point of view, we might take a fresh look. There isn't any doubt on the part of any member in this House dealing with workmen's compensation cases, including the minister, I'm sure, that this is one of the surviving in-depth problems of the Workmen's Compensation Board.

I have felt this board has come a long way with the efforts of the Ombudsmen and the select committee. I don't like to see us moving so haltingly, case by case, as we are doing with this group. I do recognize that the cases must stand on their own merit but there must be some guidelines that can be referred to in order to try to assist those with the psychological and psychiatric problems. In these days of all our experts it really isn't too difficult for us to ascertain those with the real problems in this area and those who perhaps don't have a problem. The work record prior to the accident surely should be one of the very real criteria for examining these cases.

I just add my voice to that of the member for Sudbury East because I too have experienced it. I don't think one has to look very far anywhere in this House not to see others who would corroborate what both of us have said.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lane: Mr. Chairman, I think we all appreciate the volume of business the compensation board handles. I think it has come a long way in the eight years I've been around here, compared with what it used to be.

I'd like to pay tribute to the member for Sudbury East for his contribution. I think he's made not only a contribution to this House, but also a substantial contribution to the board in resolving some of the very sad situations they're faced with on a daily basis.

I don't pretend to handle the number of claims my friend from Sudbury East does but I certainly have my share of the claims because of the industrial activities in both Espanola and Elliot Lake. We talk to the board on a daily basis, I would think, and visit it less frequently. However, my friend is right: it's a sad situation that we have to resolve these situations one at a time, when there are many that never would be brought to the attention of anybody and never will be resolved.

Many of these people are very proud and hardworking. Even though, through various avenues of income, they may eventually get enough to keep the family together and supply their livelihood, we've taken away that pride they had in providing home and livelihood for their family.

The one thing I would like to contribute, if there's something I could contribute, would be to say that the greater the speed these claims can be handled, the less likelihood of this mental state my friend from Sudbury East talks about will develop. So if there's any way the board can, with the volume of business that it does, act more rapidly and give that person the peace of mind he deserves at an earlier date, so that he realizes he's going to be looked after reasonably well and he's not going to have to depend on welfare, move into a cheaper neighbourhood, or not let his son go to college, whatever the case may be, if he is getting only half the money he earned when he was out working hard for a living, then I think we can avoid the mental state often found in people who have not only suffered injury but also the frustration of not knowing when, if ever, their claims are going to be resolved.

I like to think the Workmen's Compensation Board might in some way speed up its processing of claims, especially those kinds of cases my friend from Sudbury East has mentioned. I know a back injury is very hard to define. Thinking back to the days when I was in the insurance business, I recall we were paying compensation under an insurance policy to a man injured in an automobile accident. The company would ask me, "How much longer were we going to pay this guy?" I would tell the doctor, "We have been paying the man for six months and he seems to be all right." The doctor would say, "It is pretty hard to tell. It's his back, not mine and he says he has pain." So we continued to pay him for a further period of time.

I know it is very difficult in the medical profession to zero in and say, "Yes, this is one that deserves attention and this one is a make-believe situation." I know that is what the board is faced with. But if we can speed up the processing of claims to prevent the frustration and worry that so often occurs, I think we will have gone a long way towards resolving the problems my friend has brought to the attention of the House.

Mr. Charlton: I would like to add a couple of brief comments to what has been said and respond in a way to what the minister said in his initial response to the member for Sudbury East. The minister mentioned that these kinds of situations had to be dealt with sensitively and if we found they were not being dealt with in that way, perhaps the criteria by which they are judged should be reviewed.

I would suggest that at least in a fair number of cases people at the board are extremely reluctant to make a judgement on psychological problems. I am not sure what the reasoning behind that is. I attended an appeal hearing today at one o'clock. The situation in this case was one where almost everybody involved, all of the attending physicians and almost all the board doctors, had said in a number of reports over the years that there was a psychological component to the claimant's disability.

At one point a claims adjudicator even recommended that because of the psychological component the claimant be awarded compensation for the psychological component in the form of a supplement for two years and that it be reviewed thereafter. There were all kinds of evidence in the woman's file about the psychological component of her disability yet at no point was the award granted. Possibly after a decision on the hearing today is made she will be granted entitlement on those grounds.

However, I want to make the point to the minister that perhaps his "perhaps" should be carried out. Perhaps we should be having a very careful look at how and why. And perhaps the problem with the employees at the board is a lack of effective ways of judging, effective guidelines. I am not sure exactly what the problem is but there seems to be a serious reluctance there. It is something that should be looked at.

Mr. Mancini: I really welcome the opportunity on any occasion to express my concerns about the Workmen's Compensation Board. Having had firsthand contact with the board after I was elected in 1975 I understand just how very real and very large many of the problems at the board are.

It certainly is good for the injured workers of Ontario to have someone like the Ontario Ombudsman review the procedures of the Workmen's Compensation Board, and it certainly is good to have his recommendations in front of the Legislature.

There are two points I would like to touch on in the few moments I have to comment. One is the area of reasonable doubt; the second is the area of adequate pensions.

When an injured worker files a claim, and the claim goes through the review process, is turned down at different levels and finally gets to the appeal board, the worker may or may not have the workmen's adviser there, he may or may not have representation there and he may or may not have enough facts to win his case. The area of reasonable doubt, in my view, is too vague and the area of reasonable doubt, in my view, is not used often enough.

I draw this to the attention of the minister, solely because I believe many injured workers in this province are not receiving a penny, not a single penny, from the Workmen's Compensation Board because the area of allowing them reasonable doubt for their injuries is too vague. I'm sure the appeal board people who sit behind a desk and listen to the worker are sympathetic, but their guidelines in this area of reasonable doubt are not strict enough.

I have a blatant case in my own riding—where a seriously injured worker—

Mr. Laughren: You are a blatant case.

Mr. Mancini: I know the member of Nickel Belt is as concerned about this worker as I am, and that's why he's listening very attentively.

Mr. Laughren: What about the minimum wage? What are your views on the minimum wage?

Mr. Mancini: We can talk about the minimum wage after, as far as the member for Nickel Belt is concerned. The area of reasonable doubt: What does the worker do? What does the injured worker do? I know the member for Nickel Belt is listening. What does the injured worker do when he feels this has not been used, when the tool of reasonable doubt has not been used? What alternative is left to the injured worker, I ask the minister? Nothing. There's nothing at all left.

What is the only thing an injured worker can do after he's gone through the system from top to bottom, taking a whole year to go through the process, and has found that his case has been denied, and has found that the tool of reasonable doubt has not been used? What tools are at his disposal for him to seek recourse? He has to go to the Ombudsman, and we have to start all over again. That is another long procedure. That procedure is not good enough. That procedure has to be dealt with all over again, if need be. When I see legitimate injured workers who have families to support, who have worked for many years and who go through a process from one review to another and come up with nil, I think we have to have something better for them at the end of the road.

Take, for example, an injured worker who may be between 45 and 50 years old, who has worked for 20 or 25 years and who has proved that there is a reasonable doubt that his injury is compensable. What does a worker have to do to prove to the board that there is reasonable doubt?

I have a worker who was injured on the job. He was injured on a construction job and he could no longer do that work. What he did was take employment at less pay, in a lighter working atmosphere where he didn't have to lift up blocks, et cetera. I have an injured worker who has taken pay cuts two and three times because he wasn't able to do heavy-duty work.

We placed this evidence before the Workmen's Compensation Board at the final appeal hearing. They said that was not enough evidence to give the worker the benefit of the doubt. When an injured worker takes a less well-paying job and lowers his standard of living, that should be enough to give him the benefit of the doubt. That's why I say there is too much vagueness in that phrase. We're going to have to change, if need be, whatever guidelines the minister gives to the board because, frankly, I haven't seen any guidelines he has sent to the board concerning this very important issue of giving the worker the reasonable doubt in case of an injury.

I consider the treatment of these injured workmen extremely unfair. They are too young to collect from anywhere. Where are they supposed to obtain funds to maintain their families? To what agency are they to apply, after having been refused by the board a single penny for compensation and after having taken almost a whole year, if not a little longer, to go through the whole process? That's very unjust.

I would hope the Minister of Labour, who has been in his position now for about a year, would look into that area, would issue some specific instructions and would possibly have them tabled in the House to indicate what he intends to do with this problem, because the injured worker who is not given the reasonable doubt for his injury is far worse off than the worker who at least gets something.

Members can well recall all the debates we have had in the Workmen's Compensation Board estimates. We're probably just repeating again all of the things we said there. The reason we do so is that when a person's livelihood is taken away from him, it's the most serious thing, I believe, that can happen to a person in his life.

I personally believe most people want to be productive, want to go to work, want to receive their pay cheque, want to pay their bills and want to improve their living environment. However, this all falls apart when a person becomes an injured worker.

We have heard the story from one Minister of Labour, previous to the present minister's appointment, that they are given something, et cetera, but that's not the point. We also have heard this is possibly the best workmen's compensation system. I don't know where; they usually say North America. That is still not a good enough answer. I have heard that comment many times from the previous minister. I have sat in committee after committee and have heard that.

If anyone will check the records, I am sure with no trouble at all he will find we were told what a great system we have. Maybe it's true, but we're pointing out to the minister the inequities in the system. Just because it's better than someone else's system doesn't mean it is treating the injured workers properly. This vague idea about giving someone the benefit of the doubt is not working well enough, in my view. I hope the minister will address many hours of his time to this particular problem. I hope some time in the near future he will be able to report to the House exactly what actions are going to be taken to alleviate some of these problems.

It is shameful the way some of these people are treated. Basically, their lives are completely ruined. We, as members, see this unfolding before us time and time again. Frankly, we have a feeling of helplessness when the injured worker has gone through the system while we have assisted them along, taking a whole year to do it, yet he ends up with nil when he is legitimately injured. The benefit of the doubt, that vague idea the minister and his predecessor before him has espoused, is not working.

That is the first area I want to touch on, Mr. Chairman. The second area is the idea of pension, and some type of reward for the amount of disability, and that is what it comes down to. You reward people for the amount of disability.

I address these comments to the minister's predecessor. If you have a bus driver who has injured his back and can't turn the wheel, and you assess the man at 35 per cent disability, where and how is he supposed to pick up the rest? If he can't do the job he was doing, why and how could he be classified as 35 per cent disabled?

These are questions that we have asked before; the answers are not forthcoming; the injured workers are still treated like lepers. We give them just enough to carry on some type of existence, hopefully just enough money that they won't create any kind of disruption; and the system carries on.

Frankly, it is getting a little tiresome on this side of the House to address these concerns to the Minister of Labour, and when we have the opportunity, to the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board.

We don't believe that the minister doesn't care; don't believe the minister and the chairman want to be cruel people and want to withhold benefits. But we start to become curious after a great deal of time passes and changes are not implemented; we start to become very concerned when injured workers do not receive yearly increases in their pensions and yearly increases in their benefits. We do not understand how the minister would expect them to be able to maintain some semblance of family life when he denies them yearly increases, when he classifies them as 35 per cent disabled and when, if appeals come through, he will probably throw in another 10 per cent for some kind of psychological disorder.

Frankly, no, I don't have all the answers. I am sure the minister and the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board have the money and authority and prestige at their disposal that they could hire sufficient people to help them solve many of these problems.

By ignoring the problem it is not going to go away. By giving a person a 35 per cent pension, when he is totally disabled, is not going to solve the problem. By letting the injured worker go through a slew of appeals only to be given an answer that is really unsatisfactory when all facts are considered, is not going to make the problem go away.

So I leave these thoughts with the minister. Sometimes I get a little emotional when I speak of this matter concerning injured workers, but the reason I do is because it is very difficult to witness people in your own community who have worked hard and, through no fault of their own, have suffered injury and see their whole life fall down around them.

I can well understand, after having been here in the Legislature for a little over four and a half years, having watched up close some of these injured workmen. I can well understand why psychological disorders occur, because if I had to go through the system that they had to go through, and go for months at a time without pay and not know where to turn, I think that would affect all of us.

I just wish the minister would give further consideration to these problems that have been outlined by many members of the House, and whatever—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I might remind the member he is being very repetitive. I don't wish to detract from what he is saying, but I think he has said the same thing over and over again.

Mr. Mancini: I just wanted to make my point with the minister, Mr. Chairman. I didn't realize I was so repetitive. The minister was looking so intently I thought it was all new stuff. I would just hope the minister would think of somehow streamlining the process.

With those few comments, I will take my seat.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I have just two points I want to make. My experience in recent months with the Workmen's Compensation Board, limited as it is, tells me the time has come when a commissioner should look at the board. There are some serious problems there. We have been talking forever about what the minister refers to as hard core cases. The way they are dealt with is inequitable. I think the commissioner has to be a man of the equivalent calibre of Stephen Lewis, the former leader of this party, or Stephen Lewis himself, if he were available, to look into what is happening at that board.

The second thing I want to say is that I am going to take the minister at his word; it is going to occupy a bit of his time but I know he will give it that time. I had occasion this year to try to deal with about half a dozen cases dealing with psychiatric disability as a component of the overall disability of the cases—a range of situations involved in it. I was shocked at the files at the board. I spent an immense amount of time going through the files to try to sort out what had happened to these men's claims. Each of them is at various stages of appeal. Some of them are concluded in most unhappy circumstances. On a couple I wait forever for reports to come in.

I am not complaining about delay as such. That is not my point. I am going to send him, if he will take the time, a transcript of one of the cases wherein the hearing took, for practical purposes, all day. It represented the equivalent, I suppose, of about four or five days' time in preparation for that case. I tried to put before the board what happened from the time this man was injured, and we are still fighting the case.

There is something seriously wrong in the procedure. When you take it to the appeal process it is almost as if that is another step in the quagmire, not a step in the resolution of the problem. Now we have the Ombudsman and we have added another step in the quagmire for these difficult cases; they take an interminable amount of time. One doesn't have to be Sigmund Freud to understand that psychiatric disabilities become more and more entrenched as time goes on, in many instances.

I know the minister understands it and is well aware of it. I don't think I can add to his sense of the dimension of the problem. But I think somehow or other someone is going to have to take a look at that board—someone who is not one of Her Majesty's judges. It should be some person with the skill and ability to take a number of these cases as sample cases, take the time to go through them and work out what is wrong. There are any number of cases that are duplicated.

That doesn't take away from the fact that statistically there are a tremendous number of claims that the board settles quite expeditiously over a period of time. We are talking about the cases that come to the members of this assembly because they have nowhere else to go. They have been through the mill, usually before we as members get them. Then we are constantly fighting the same battles. There must be some better way of dealing with them than this constant head-on collision about what can be done.

When I have the transcript of that one case I will send it over to you and ask if you will be good enough to pore through it and ruminate on it and perhaps then we could discuss it.

Mr. Martel: Is the minister not going to respond?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I appreciate many of the remarks made. I don't think anybody is under the illusion we all aren't seeing the same sort of difficult parts of our problems.

I do have some reservations about the remarks of the member for Essex South when he suggests he hasn't seen any guidelines that I have forwarded to the board. I tell the member in all sincerity, that is not my job, nor does the act allow me to do that, nor do I hope he thinks the act would allow me to do that. That is one of the functions of the board and the corporate board under the act. It's not my job to prepare guidelines, nor would it be proper for me to do so.

I think the member for St. George and other members have referred to the doctrine of reasonable doubt. As has already been mentioned, a changing concept of reasonable doubt is under consideration by a committee of the board. I hope out of that and out of the efforts that led to that, mainly prompted by the select committee and the Ombudsman, that we will achieve a concept of reasonable doubt that will alleviate some of the problems that confront us and confront injured workers.

The member for Sudbury East put a question to me regarding what is the answer. I don't know the answer. I think he knows that and he knows that nobody really has that answer. He knows the case that's presented as well as I do. It's a person who has had an injury, who makes some sort of recovery from the injury but has a psychological overlay. The decision then is, as the member for Riverdale said, is this an unremitting, permanent, psychological overlay with absolutely no hope of rehabilitation and the longer the situation goes on, the more likely that is so; or is this someone who by all objective tests still has the capacity to return to work but this psychological problem interferes with him, and is there still some hope that he can be encouraged to do so? Where the dividing line is I don't know. That is one of the problems the board faces.

But certainly I think the comments tonight have been helpful and if I could answer it more directly and more exactly, I would.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1979

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, signed by her own hand.

Mr. Speaker: By her own hand, Pauline M. McGibbon, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, transmits supplementary estimates of certain additional sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1980, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, November 23, 1979.

MINISTER'S COMMENT

Mr. Stong: Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the last question during the oral questions of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, in the confusion I thought he had withdrawn his imputation of motivation. However, on check of Hansard, he has not. The comments he made in his answer indicate that I was, and I quote from Hansard, "by way of his interjections inadvertently, if not intentionally, misleading this House." Mr. Speaker, that language, being unparliamentary and being inaccurate, I would ask that the chair rule the Minister of Transportation and Communications withdraw forthwith.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the Hansard but I do recall saying the member may be inadvertently misleading the House. I certainly would not indicate that he would intentionally do so. If I said he may have intentionally misled the House, I withdraw that of course.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that yesterday the Niagara Escarpment Commission announced a proposed plan for the Niagara Escarpment. This document represents the culmination of a substantial effort on the part of the commission and its staff, as well as the contribution of local authorities and interest groups. I would like to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation—

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Does the honourable member have a copy of that statement?

Mrs. Campbell: In accordance with the rules.

Mr. Speaker: The standing orders make it quite clear that if a minister is going to make a ministerial statement copies of it be distributed either at the time, or preferably in advance of its delivery. The logistics of living up to that standing order shouldn't be too difficult.

Mr. S. Smith: They arrived just as you were speaking, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I would like to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation to all concerned for their hard and dedicated work in preparing this important document.

I also wish to take this opportunity to advise the House of the procedures that will apply for public review and discussion of the proposed plan before it is submitted to the minister.

First, the Niagara Escarpment Planning and Development Act requires the proposed plan to be circulated to each local municipality within, or partly within, the Niagara Escarpment planning area. Councils will be invited to make comments on the plan to the council of the county or regional municipality within three months of receiving it. The act anticipates that county councils, regional councils and members of the public will respond to the commission with their comments within four months.

In the four months' time, the act requires the commission to appoint hearing officers to conduct public hearings into the proposed plan. I expect the hearings to commence early next April. At the hearings, all interested persons can make representations and ask questions on the contents of the proposed plans.

Three months following the completion of the hearings, the inquiry officers are required to submit a summary of the representations to the commission. In their report, the officers will state whether the plan should be accepted, rejected or modified.

After giving consideration to the hearing officers' report, the commission will submit a proposed plan to the minister. Following an analysis of this document, the minister will submit the proposed plan with recommendations to the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

It is difficult to predict when the proposed plan for the Niagara Escarpment will be submitted. This is because of the uncertainty regarding the length of time involved with the public hearings. In the coming weeks, I intend to consult with the commission to determine the locations at which the hearings will take place and what length of time is considered to be appropriate. Further details on these arrangements will be announced by the commission before the hearings commence.

My current thoughts on the matter are that the four months of public review preceding the public hearings is ample time for participants to prepare their representations. Given this opportunity for preparation, I would expect the hearings to be over by the end of next summer, which then makes it possible for the proposed plan to be submitted to the minister about a year from now.

With regard to the immediate situation, I understand copies of the preliminary proposals have been distributed to all municipalities along the Niagara Escarpment and to most of the interest groups involved.

In the coming weeks, the Niagara Escarpment Commission will be arranging briefing sessions for local authorities and interest groups. Drop-in centres will also be established in a number of communities along the Niagara Escarpment and in the Macdonald building, Queen's Park. Commission staff will be available at the drop-in centres to answer questions about the proposed plan.

In the coming months, I expect the proposed plan for the Niagara Escarpment to receive extensive discussion. The participation by all interested parties in the process I have described is an essential ingredient in the development of a satisfactory plan for the preservation of the Niagara Escarpment. The government is encouraged by the intensive work of the commission in preparing the preliminary proposals and looks forward to the full expression of views by all concerned.

GEORGE BELCHER

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the House this morning the fact that a very remarkable, dedicated and distinguished public servant has retired after 50 years—a half century—of service to the government of Ontario and to the people of this province.

The person I refer to is Mr. George Belcher of the theatres branch or the censor board; a man who came to work for that board and for this government on November 18, 1929, and has been faithful, efficient, and indeed all of the things that have really exemplified the quality of the public service in this province during that half century.

For the sake of the record, Mr. Belcher joined the public service during the time of Premier G. Howard Ferguson. He has served under 10 Premiers, countless deputy ministers, and heaven knows how many hundreds of members of this assembly.

I think it is significant that at the ceremonies marking his retirement the common denominator of his service, in addition to the things we have come to expect from Mr. Belcher, was his good nature, his cheerfulness, and his ability to provide service, particularly to the film industry, at times when it really was above and beyond the call of duty.

I'm sure that other members of the House will want to join with me in wishing him our sincere good wishes in the 50 years of his second career.

[Later (10:18):]

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would also like to express my best wishes to Mr. Belcher. It is not everyone who survives 50 years of public service at any level of government. George Belcher has done it extremely well. I extend my personal best wishes to him as he continues whatever career he decides to pursue. [Reverting (10:13):]

DEATH OF FRED SGAMBATI

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is with regret that I draw to the attention of the House this morning the death of a very distinguished constituent, Mr. Fred Sgambati. I know there have been in Mr. Sgambati's life a great number of honours, not the least of which was a very high honour that was bestowed upon him just before his untimely death. I know that in the next few days undoubtedly the remarkable career he had will be chronicled most accurately and, indeed, there will probably be, in the way of tributes and accords, even more honours.

I think what I would like to draw to the attention of the House is the tremendous comfort and hope that Mr. Sgambati was able to bring to so many people, notwithstanding the fact that he had been extremely ill for a number of years. He strove valiantly back to work and performed as efficiently as he always did, despite the sometimes intense physical difficulties and the other difficulties that are so often associated with the knowledge that one has a terminal illness.

Because of the way he acted, his cheerfulness, his business-as-usual type of conduct, I'm quite sure, across this province and country he did indeed bring comfort to those afflicted with the same ailment. Indeed, by the fact that he was able to carry on in the most public of forums, he brought hope to those for whom I'm sure all members of the Legislature sincerely hope medical science, in time, will be able to produce some type of remedy.

It is that indomitable spirit of Mr. Sgambati that will surmount all of the so justly deserved public honours that he will receive. I'm sure the honourable members will join with me in condolences and sympathy to his family.

Mr. S. Smith: On behalf of members on this side, I do want to join with the minister in offering condolences to Mr. Sgambati's family.

To put the matter briefly, Mr. Sgambati added immeasurably to our enjoyment of life throughout his life. At the end, he left us a legacy even more important than that: He taught us in a singular way how to face death. He did so in a way that will be an encouragement and an example to everyone in this province and this country. For that, we have to thank him perhaps even more than for all the great contributions he made during the rest of his lifetime. He was singularly able to encourage us by his own way of handling this very difficult human condition. We salute his memory and offer condolences to his family.

Mr. Foulds: On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I would like to lend our support to what has just been said.

Fred Sgambati was unique in that sports broadcasting is a particularly difficult task to do well and sensibly. Mr. Sgambati did it not only well and sensibly, but he did it with style and panache. He is a credit to sport, to broadcasting and to Ontario. He displayed courage during his career and during his illness. For that, we must all salute him.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I wanted to add a personal word about Mr. Sgambati. I knew the late Mr. Sgambati longer than almost anyone in this House, with the possible exception of the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry). We were friends for many years in spite of what he did to the Premier of this province many years ago. Mr. Sgambati isn't necessarily unique, but without any question on this occasion he had the last word with the Premier of this province, which isn't always easy to do.

I used to play, not well, a little bit of football. Mr. Sgambati, in one of his early involvements in the sporting community, was acting as referee. I argued a call with him one day—I won't say where or whom we were playing—and Mr. Sgambati used his authority to suggest to the now Premier of this province that he vacate the field, that he no longer continue to compete in that game. I had no alternative but to accept his judgement and I had to leave the field under Mr. Sgambati's direction.

I knew him personally quite well. I was a great admirer of his and understood what he was going through during the past period. I wrote Mr. Sgambati a personal note some three or four days ago to say a few things to him. But I would like to express here, in a personal way, my condolences to his family and to say, as one who understood to a certain extent what he had gone through, how much I appreciated the example he had set to so many people in this country. We will miss Fred Sgambati.

JUNIOR HOCKEY COMMITMENT

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Is the Premier aware of a situation where it appears that Canada will be reneging on an international ice hockey commitment to send a team to the world junior championships in Finland? Is he also aware that, as a consequence of reneging on this—and this is a matter of some urgency since the tournament is scheduled for next month—Canada may be fined and relegated to the second division in junior hockey?

Has the Premier had a chance to learn the facts of this matter? Can he, in view of the fact the team to be sent is the Peterborough Petes, which is mostly composed of Ontario boys, take some action to make sure Canada does in fact let Finland know immediately that we will send a team, and that we will not renege on our commitment? Can the Ontario government provide, perhaps from the lotteries or from the Ministry of Culture and Recreation, some financial assistance so this team, bolstered by some suitable junior players, would be able to compete and maintain our reputation in international ice hockey, so whether we win or lose, at least we can be counted on to co-operate and keep our commitments?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of all the circumstances. I have asked for some information on this. The Minister of Culture and Recreation may have some more up-to-date information than I have. I expect to be able to say something, or the minister will, on Monday.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: It may assist the Premier to know I have been in touch with Mr. Costello, of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, and I gather the problem was the bolstering of the team. They had money from Sport Canada, about $25,000, to send the Petes, but to bolster them with eight suitable players requires a disproportionately high amount of money, given insurance policies and one thing or another on these star players.

Will the province make a commitment today that it will be willing to do at least its share, or pay a share, of the financial support so the Peterborough Petes can go, so these boys can have the trip they've anticipated, and can represent Canada, so we can avoid relegation and so we can, most importantly, keep the commitments this country has made in international ice hockey?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Although I don't want to get into what commitments other countries may make in this particular field over the years, I am one who has always supported Canadian participation in international events, whether it be ice hockey or anything else. As I say to the Leader of the Opposition, I can't give a commitment this will be solved. I have already asked for information on this, Mr. Speaker, and I expect to have a report for the House on Monday.

Mr. S. Smith: I thank the Premier for that response and look forward to the report on Monday.

MISSISSAUGA TRAIN FIRE

Mr. S. Smith: A question to the Attorney General: I return, reluctantly, to the matter of the CP Rail waiver and all the legal ramifications of the recent derailment in Mississauga.

Will the Attorney General explain why it is that the government has basically done nothing of substance to help the people of Mississauga to deal with the legal ramifications of this derailment? In the first place, can he say why so far the government has shown no willingness to change the class action laws to make it more suitable and to make it a little easier for class action to succeed in this case? Can he explain why private groups are now growing up in Mississauga, taking fees from people in order to give certain advice, and to take legal action? Why isn't the government helping to co-ordinate this?

Finally, with regard to the infamous waiver, why is it that waiver is still continuing and there is still no government lawyer there? Why is it there is still no report of the Premier having met with the president of CP, and no real muscle being used with that company? The legal aid clinic that is there is on the other side of the street completely, totally divorced from the situation where the waivers are being signed, and there's not even a sign to indicate there is a legal aid clinic available.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Unfortunately, the Leader of the Opposition is very badly misinformed in so far as the role of the government in assisting the citizens of Mississauga in this matter. I would like to advise briefly what we have done.

Mr. S. Smith: Please correct me if I'm wrong.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I certainly will, Mr. Speaker.

In the early days of the emergency in Mississauga I spoke to the executive vice-president of CP, Mr. William Stinson, before the immediate emergency was resolved, and indicated to him I would hope CP would make some considerable effort to resolve the expenses so many thousands of Mississaugans have been put to as a result of this emergency. Mr. Stinson indicated a willingness to do this. As a result, the claims operation was established in Mississauga.

Obviously, we are not happy about the form of release, but I can tell the Leader of the Opposition that given the history of this type of problem on the North American continent, their claims operation, in settling these claims in the expeditious manner they have done most of them, is really quite without precedent.

The next step I took in this matter was to contact a local solicitor, Mr. Willson McTavish, vice-president of the local law association. I asked him to bring together a group of lawyers, along with voluntary legal assistance to assist the citizens of Mississauga. This was widely publicized in the area. The mavor herself has made a number of statements about this.

Furthermore, when it was brought to my attention by Mr. McTavish that the local lawyers were not able to provide sufficient amount of legal advice, I made a personal request of the Law Society of Upper Canada, who administer the provincial legal aid plan, to send out additional resources to assist with the giving of legal advice to the members of the community. The legal aid plan made a decision earlier in the week to send out additional lawyers, to assist in a legal aid office, which they opened for that purpose in Square One, indicating at the same time that if the demands exceeded those legal resources, they would look with favour, in so far as providing additional legal resources was concerned.

As I've already mentioned in this House, we indicated our concern with respect to the form of waiver or release. The Premier of this province has had at least three conversations with the president of Canadian Pacific Railway in relation to modifying their position with respect to the release form. CPR have indicated they are going to continue to use this form, on the advice of their lawyers. We don't think it's necessary. We think it's unwise, as I've already said, because we don't think it's necessary. We think it is, perhaps, just injecting a problem that should not have been part of this process.

I can tell the members that the mayor of Mississauga and many other people are unhappy about this form of release as well. They've indicated to me that they're very anxious for this claims office to continue, and while they would prefer to have it continue without that form of release, they don't want to do anything, and they don't want us to do anything, to encourage the CPR simply to close down this operation altogether. Certainly that is the message I have received from the mayor of Mississauga.

I have also indicated to this House that should it turn out, because of the use of this release, that any injustices do occur, there are other legal options open to the government. I don't intend to discuss those legal options at this particular time. But I think it is totally inaccurate and quite unfair of the Leader of the Opposition to state that the government has not been very much involved.

I have to say there are some in the legal profession who feel an Attorney General has no role to play in relation to private disputes between private citizens and private corporations, and they are concerned about our role in this respect. Notwithstanding that, I feel we do have a role to play, and I think we've played it as effectively as any government could have done in the circumstances.

Mr. S. Smith: I have a supplementary re-directed to the Premier. Since the Attorney General said the Premier has had at least three conversations with the president of CPR, presumably on the subject of the waiver, will the Premier tell this House the nature of those conversations, and how he feels about the fact that the president of CPR seems to have ignored the Premier's request that this waiver be eliminated or drastically altered?

What clout has the Premier in any way suggested he might use as a resort, if necessary, if CP refuses to comply with what is basic fairness and reasonableness—which is all they are being asked to do—in getting rid of that waiver and substituting a proper receipt form?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this with the president of CP. I am just going to tell you what he feels about this particular situation.

First, I think it is fair to assume that CP isn't accepting liability. On the advice of their solicitors and those of the insurance companies, it is understandable that their position will be, at this stage at least, non-acceptance of liability.

CP felt—and some may feel they were wrong in this—they were doing the right thing by moving in immediately and compensating those people who had been affected, for out-of-pocket expenses. I've learned something about situations in other countries where they have had these sorts of situations, and I think in fairness CP has moved in a way that a lot of companies would not have, under the circumstances.

However, they were receiving very strong advice from their legal counsel—while it is easy to single out a corporation, or a president of a corporation, directors do have some responsibilities under the law in terms of what they can and cannot do as it relates to their shareholders. CP thought their motivation was right and that they were and are performing a service.

I am informed that the average claim at this moment is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $200 to $250. They have processed now, I think, several thousand claims. The reaction to CP from the majority of those who have been served in this fashion has been very complimentary.

I made it quite clear to Mr. Sinclair I was concerned that the waiver provision might put some people in a position, in terms of employment or what have you, where they might be prejudiced. He pointed out to me that he understood this. However, as I understand the law, the application of this waiver may not be as effective as the lawyers, who are advising CP, suggest. I am not passing any legal judgement.

What I am concerned about is that if there is extensive criticism of this policy of CP, their legal advice probably would be that they would be better off getting out of this sort of program to assist those people with out-of-pocket expenses. I think this was the concern expressed by the mayor of Mississauga to the Attorney General, and I think it is one that every member in this House would share.

I would hate to see people wait for the litigation. There is bound to be litigation, and the lawyers opposite would understand that probably one is talking two, three, maybe even four years before this matter would be determined by the courts—whether it is by way of class action or in any other fashion. I would be reluctant to see those people who put out money not being able to get these funds in the short term.

I have had these conversations with Mr. Sinclair. He understands the concerns we have expressed with respect to the waiver, but he says to me very simply that without it they would have to deny liability. I would assume the legal people who will be acting for the insurance companies have given CP the advice that they probably should not be doing it, period. His own legal people have told him that if the waiver were to be removed from the form itself, then CP would seriously have to consider suggesting that in their view they don't have liability. At this moment there is no court decision saying they have liability. This would mean they would have to terminate the program, and I think that would be unfortunate.

I honestly believe as this thing sorts itself out over a period of time, people are being cautioned with respect to this. A lot of people legitimately only have those out-of-pocket expenses—people who weren't too close to where the accident itself took place. I think it is fair to state that a lot of people are satisfied with the program that CP has instituted.

I think there are other possibilities. If we find, somewhere down the road, that people have been prejudiced in any way, I think there are ways and means of rectifying it. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition and the citizens of Mississauga, if we find that is the case, if there are things we need to do as this thing moves further along, we will be prepared to do them.

Mr. Renwick: Supplementary: in the possibility that there may be an immediate likelihood for the Premier or for the Attorney General to take in connection with this matter, I am pleased that the Premier referred to the insurance companies' role in this particular problem. It is my guess that is where the problem has arisen.

Since I understand Lloyds of London, which is authorized to carry on business in this province, is likely carrying the excess insurance coverage, and may well have been faced with the problem of dictating this kind of waiver requirement on CP, will the Premier or the Attorney General bypass the representative of Lloyds of London in Ontario, speak to the chairman of Lloyds in London, England, invite him to send a representative here who would meet with the Premier or Attorney General, the president of CP and the representative of whatever other insurance company is here, to see whether or not there is some possibility of making certain a waiver can be drafted or a document can be prepared in such a way as to ensure, without waiving any future liability claims that may be made, that the immediate out-of-pocket and wage loss expenses can be paid in an orderly way, which is, I think, what the Premier and the Attorney General and all of us wish would be the solution to the problem?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General has been pursuing all possibilities for the government. I reiterate to the member for Riverdale, I am not sure whether Lloyds has it or not. We can make those inquiries and find out, because we are most anxious to find out if people's claims are being prejudiced. Those options are open to us, they are here, or they can be here.

I think the majority of people in Mississauga have only out-of-pocket expense claims. We are most anxious that that process not be prejudiced, and that people's claims not be held up because of whatever machinations we may get into, or the legal people for the insurance companies or CPR. I can assure the member for Riverdale, we will pursue every avenue. But we are anxious for all of us to understand that as a government we would like to see this program continue. We don't want to see the people prejudiced. I think we can make sure that they are not.

Mr. Kennedy: Supplementary: Inasmuch as there have now been large numbers of these claims paid for out-of-pocket expenses, and that all who have received funds from CPR have signed a waiver of one sort or another—some have signed releases with conditions; including some small businesses—and that it seems to me that the remedies mentioned by the Solicitor General are very likely to come into play, is the government looking at this possibility right now?

The Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry) has said he doesn't wish to discuss them at the moment, but it seems to me there is a real possibility that these will be invoked, or efforts made. Will the government be ready at an early time to inform these claimants what remedies might be available to them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I repeat to the member for Mississauga South what I have said here, and what I have said to a number of his constituents in a very personal way. CPR has introduced this program to compensate immediately for out-of-pocket expenses on advice from its legal people; whether it is CPR or through the insurance companies, they are taking the position at present. I am anxious that program not be interfered with, but I give the member for Mississauga South and the people of Mississauga generally my assurance that in no way will their longer-term rights, if they have them in law, be prejudiced because of whatever program exists at present.

I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, because my own guess is that in terms of whatever litigation emerges from this, it will take not just weeks, but months and probably years, before ultimate liability is determined and what might flow then from that. I would hate to see the people from Mississauga not receive those expenses they have incurred to date paid by CP.

Mr. Speaker: We have spent nearly 20 minutes on this. If the member has a brief final supplementary, I'll hear it.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Do I understand the Premier to have just said he gives his personal assurance that the signing of these waivers by people will not prejudice their longer-term rights to future payments, future possible claims with respect to wages, health, whatever?

Does the Premier feel confident he can give an assurance that the signing of these waivers is really, in effect, nothing more than giving a receipt and does not have the power the Solicitor General must have thought the receipts would have because he advised everyone not to sign them?

If the Premier is giving his personal assurance that the signing of these waivers will not, in fact, prejudice any future claims and they are not what they seem to be, why has he not said this earlier at least to contradict what the Solicitor General said in advising people not to sign? Why don't we just forget the whole matter and let people sign the whole thing?

Could he tell us by what route he intends to guarantee their future rights? Could he tell us by what route he intends to guarantee that the waiver will have no force at all?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, of course I didn't say what the Leader of the Opposition is saying I said, nor did the Attorney General say what the Leader of the Opposition is saying he said. He shouldn't look so angry, he shouldn't shake his head. I am just telling him what I said, and I happened to be here when the Attorney General said what he said.

Certainly there is a potential that the waiver form has an effect in law; there is no question about that. What I have said to the member for Riverdale and what I said to the member for Mississauga South is that there are options available to us if we find there is any prejudice to people who have signed these waivers. I am just saying that if we find this to be so—and I say "if," because I think one can exaggerate the potential of this beyond that which is reasonable, and I think it is incumbent upon us not to do that—the options are available to us.

The Attorney General never said the waivers could not have an effect; I am not saying they don't have an effect. What I am saying, and what I heard the Attorney General say, was that there are options available to us if we find there is a prejudice with respect to those who have signed them.

TRANSPORTATION SERVICES FOR HANDICAPPED

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications relating to the rights of the handicapped.

Since the proposed bill on the rights of the handicapped states in section 1 that "no person shall knowingly discriminate against a person on the ground of a handicap so as to deny or qualify the equal enjoyment by that person of services, goods and facilities," would the minister explain to us what impact that legislation will have on the government's separate but equal policy for the transportation of handicapped people on public transportation?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I have a little trouble in following what the leader of the New Democratic Party is getting at. It is my understanding that the plan at present in place by the government in supplying or making available assistance to municipalities to supply public transportation for the handicapped meets the requirements of the bill introduced by my colleague yesterday.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Could the minister explain, if the government is committed to making public facilities accessible and to implementing section 1 of this new bill affecting the handicapped, why it is that the government has consistently refused to provide for the additional funding required to make the Scarborough light rapid transit line accessible to persons who are handicapped?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I think that particular question considers a lot of sides. We have said to Metropolitan Toronto that many things they wish to do as far as public transit facilities are concerned, in order to make them more accessible within certain reason, are eligible for subsidy and we have not refused subsidy on that basis.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Supplementary: Since the Life Together report, which formed much of the basis of yesterday's human rights' announcement, stated "that provincial and municipal governments can and should provide transportation which is accessible to all," and given the fact that transportation planners agree that parallel systems are only useful as interim measures, will the minister take action similar to that of the United States in its Rehabilitation Act, which ties financial assistance for transit to development of local policies for total accessibility?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker. I cannot give that commitment because I don't believe it is possible or feasible and I don't believe the system that the member is referring to in the United States is working in any way.

Mr. S. Smith: Has the minister yet come to the conclusion that in Scarborough it's necessary to have a publicly funded form of transportation for the handicapped, over and above the access which, in my view, certainly should exist on the regular TTC vehicles? Has he yet come to the conclusion that it is not likely the private sector in Scarborough will be able to run properly a system of transportation for the handicapped and is he prepared to make sure the funding is available so that the public sector can do so?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have some trouble understanding what the Leader of the Opposition is talking about. Funding is available right now—and has been for approximately two years—for the public sector, the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto, which I believe to be the public sector, to operate transportation for the physically handicapped within Metropolitan Toronto. In fact, for the last several months it has been available to every municipality that applies for it in Ontario.

That the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto or its arm, the TTC, has chosen, as have many other municipalities, to contract the service to a private operator, is their right and privilege to do so. Some municipalities, I believe, are operating it themselves but I believe most municipalities have chosen to operate it on a contract basis. Some municipalities operate their public transportation, their normal public transportation, on a contract basis; quite a number within the province. We subsidize those on the same basis as the municipalities that choose to run their own transit system and that is in place and working well right now.

Mr. S. Smith: Not in Scarborough.

Hon. Mr. Snow: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the honourable leader says, "Not in Scarborough." To my knowledge, Scarborough is part of Metropolitan Toronto and comes under the Metropolitan Toronto system.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister not aware that the rejection of the principles of accessibility to public transit that he has just delivered to this Legislature is quite specifically the knowing discrimination against the handicapped that his colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie), is seeking to outlaw in the proposed amendments in order to protect the rights of the handicapped?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with that.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development relating to the implementation of the plans for the Niagara Escarpment on which he commented briefly this morning.

In view of the vital importance of land acquisition in the Niagara Escarpment Commission's proposals that were published yesterday, specifically that some 30,000 acres of land must be acquired in order to protect the escarpment as a continuous natural area, could we have a commitment from the government that the escarpment commission's recommendations for $25 million worth of land acquisition over the next five years will, in fact, be implemented by the government?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: This government has acquired thousands of acres in the past few years. There is money in the Ministry of Natural Resources for land purchasing and land purchasing will be done on a priority basis.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since there is no commitment there, would the minister explain what credibility his references to acquire land on a priority basis has when, in fact, in 1978 and 1979 there was no land acquired and no money spent for land acquisition in the escarpment area by the ministry, when in 1977 there was less than an acre acquired at a cost of $12,000 by the ministry and when, also in 1978, the ministry cut its proportion of shared costs with conservation authorities in the area from 75 per cent to 50 per cent? Is there a commitment or isn't there? If there is a commitment, will the government say when and by how much it will increase its acquisition funds for land in the escarpment area from the present sum of zero dollars a year?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, there is a commitment to purchase lands in the Niagara Escarpment Commission area, and there are funds in the 1980-81 estimates which will be forthcoming.

Mr. Swart: Does the minister not realize the new plan that has been tabled permits many new lots to be developed in some of these areas? Does he not realize the proposal permits in excess of 10,000 new lots for development in the escarpment protection area and the escarpment rural areas? Does he not realize the escarpment commission, in the years since 1975, has given permits for development on more than 90 per cent of the applications, and if this power is given to municipalities the percentage will go even higher?

In view of the fact the escarpment plan has been reduced to only 37 per cent of what it was originally, doesn't the minister think the grand principles of escarpment protection outlined in the principles and objectives of the Niagara Escarpment Development Act are rapidly being scuttled?

Will he recommend to the government that their land is going to be purchased? Will he assure us that he will keep those principles and objectives in the act? Will he give consideration to firmer zoning in place of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Swart: —pressure point uncontrolled development, and will he remove the automatic provision for one or two new lots in every 100 acres?

Mr. Speaker: I must remind the honourable member that it is against the rules of this House to read at great length from documents. This is the question period.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The commission has acted very responsibly in keeping the objectives of the act and it will continue to do so.

Mr. Cassidy: Final supplementary: If the commission has acted responsibly, can we have an assurance that the government will act responsibly? Will it listen to what the commission is saying when it points out it will not be possible to protect the escarpment if the funding is not available to ensure that land acquisition, where required, can be carried out? To quote Ivor McMullin, the chairman, "If the province won't buy the land we will have to say it is all right for current owners to go ahead and build." Is that not the current situation when no money is being spent on land acquisition, and when will that policy change?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I would like to repeat to the leader of the NDP that there are funds for land acquisition.

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Bradley: I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications, Mr. Speaker. During the Mississauga crisis, with motorists forced to detour around the quarantine area for obvious reasons, could the minister inform us why in these circumstances his work crews would still be out on the Burlington Skyway doing routine maintenance work and reducing it to one lane? Could he inform the House why all major detour routes were not free of construction work during the crisis and all possible lanes utilized to facilitate the movement of traffic?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I realize the tremendous problem created by closing three major highways—highway 2, the Queen Elizabeth Way and highway 5—as well as all the municipal streets. There is a very heavy volume of traffic that travels through that Lakeshore corridor and through the city of Mississauga, and it created an overload on highway 401. I don't relate that to something that might or might not be happening on the Burlington Skyway. I know the honourable member feels there should be no maintenance done on our highways—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Snow: He has said that. The honourable member has said that to me in letters—that we should not be resurfacing the Queen Elizabeth. The other day I got a letter saying we should not be repairing the guard rail that had been knocked out on the highway. We did the job between nine o'clock in the morning and three o'clock in the afternoon, and that is not in the rush hour in that area. I don't really know how some of the honourable members of the opposition expect us to maintain our highway system when they do not want us on the highway doing the maintenance.

In the particular situation to which the honourable member is referring about construction taking place on the detour routes, I'm not aware of the location to which he is referring. I'm sure there was no maintenance. I'm almost positive, but I would have to check, there were no maintenance operations being carried out on those detour routes at that particular time.

He may be referring to the construction on highway 401 between Mississauga Road and Trafalgar Road. In that particular situation there are only a few days left to pave between now or then, and the closing down of paving operations for this fall. It is most important for that paving to be finished on that section of 401, otherwise it will be in a horrendous condition for the whole winter.

There were very few days available to do that work and I would presume the contractors, because of the very tight schedule did not cut down resurfacing on that job. If he had, it would probably not have been available to be used for traffic in any case, but there were, I'm sure, and there has been throughout all that construction two full lanes of traffic maintained. There has really been an excellent job done by the contractor in maintaining traffic in that section of 401 all summer. The job is well ahead of schedule.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Could the minister inform us when he is going to extend the GO train service around to the other side of Burlington Bay—the south side of Hamilton—so the traffic problems that exist on the Queen Elizabeth Way can be alleviated?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member knows very well there are no plans to extend the GO train service around the other side of Hamilton.

WATER RESCUE SERVICE

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to respond to a question the member for Quinte (Mr. O'Neil) asked a few days ago.

In response to the honourable member's question of November 9, regarding the use of ambulance frequencies for privately owned rescue boats, I've looked into this matter with the federal department of communications which has responsibility for assigning all radio frequencies.

Under Canadian policy—and as a result of an international agreement—land mobile frequencies, which include ambulance frequencies, are not assigned to marine use. Marine radio frequencies are available, however, to those who go through the normal licensing process applying to the department of communications in Ottawa for such a licence.

I understand these marine frequencies can be linked with the land and water agencies responsible for search and rescue operations but that, I presume, would not be the frequencies of an ambulance operation which is really not search and rescue.

SUPERMARKET PRICING AND CHECKOUT SYSTEMS

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Does he recall when the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and I urged him to take action to prevent the supermarkets from eliminating the individual price tags on their products when they introduce the universal product code, as Loblaws has done in Ottawa? Does he recall he told the House he was unhappy they had not followed the guidelines and, I quote, "in a very brief period of time" he'd come to the House and tell the members what he intended to do about it "in a very positive way"?

May I remind him it has now been five weeks. Can he tell the House today what steps he's taking to ensure the retention of those individual price tags?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Quite frankly, if it weren't for my informing the honourable member in the estimates, the matter probably wouldn't have arisen.

When I said I would be back in the House in a relatively brief period of time with a very positive approach to the matter, I meant before the end of the House session. If the member wants an elaboration on that, he should understand that before one does anything one wants to see how the system is working. I did not want to be put in the position of making a judgement on certain situations in the beginning or formative stage.

I have met the Consumers' Association of Canada and other groups concerning this matter. They know my route plan and they endorse it.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware of two other Loblaws stores, one in London and one in Stony Creek, who have changed to the universal product code and eliminated the individual pricing on their products? Is he not also aware that the consumers' association on November 1, since we asked him to do something about it, launched a boycott of those stores? Does he not know the Canadian Food and Commercial Workers Union objects to the elimination of those price tags, although they are going along with the new technology otherwise?

Surely the minister must understand that the removal of the stickers further breaks down the price consciousness of the consumers, and provides a potential for huge windfall inventory profits, because it is so easy to mark up the products? Will he bring in legislation to prohibit the removal of price stickers?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I know which stores are using the electronic checkout without individual prices. I can assure members I know almost before they begin to operate—

Mr. Mackenzie: That's a start for the minister.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will repeat something once again. If it were not for my sharing my information with that party, they would never have found out about it.

Interjections.

Mr. Mackenzie: What is the minister going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is a matter of record that one week before any question was asked in this House—I am looking at the Liberal critic; he was there—I went to great lengths in my estimates, something I didn't have to do. I said I wanted to share this information with all members. The particular member raising such vehement objections said, "I thank you very much. I would never have known about it."

To come back to the main point, as I said when I was asked this on a previous occasion, I will be bringing into the House a very positive program to deal with this matter. As I said just a moment ago, it will be before the end of the legislative session.

The boycotts and whatever else is being done by the Consumers' Association of Canada, as referred to by the member, I assume is happening in the Ottawa area. I meet constantly with the Consumers' Association of Canada in my office. I have been privy to their plans and attitudes in this matter, and that will be reflected in what I bring back to the House.

ART GALLERY OF ONTARIO

Hon. Mr. Baetz: On November 16, the member for Oakwood asked a question. As honourable members know, the Ontario Public Service Employees Union has applied to the Ontario Labour Relations Board for certification as the bargaining agent for employees of the Art Gallery of Ontario.

As honourable members also know, certain matters in respect of that application process have been studied and commented upon by the labour relations board. On November 16, the member for Oakwood implied that the art gallery had spent $30,000 on legal fees to "fight charges to deprive workers of their legal rights."

I agreed to look into this matter. I have now been advised by the Art Gallery of Ontario that in the past five and a half months the art gallery has spent approximately $17,500 on legal fees. Counsel was hired to deal with a number of matters:

First, in that OPSEU has applied for certification, the regular personnel policies and procedures of the gallery have been frozen in accordance with the provisions of the Labour Relations Act.

Among other things, this freeze has meant that until the certification application is decided upon, the art gallery could not hire any new staff. The art gallery's presentation, the Treasures of Tut, has required the short-term hiring of some 300 persons. The art gallery has therefore had to negotiate conditions for contracts for some of those persons with the Ontario Public Service Employees Union and retain legal counsel for this.

Second, it is OPSEU's preferred practice to conduct labour negotiations through legal counsel. It is therefore normal practice for the art gallery to be represented by legal counsel in such negotiations.

Third, legal counsel was required for the drafting of management contracts for management personnel.

I have been assured by the art gallery that it has not spent any money on legal fees to "fight charges to deprive workers of their legal rights," as the member for Oakwood has implied.

Mr. Grande: Then would the minister tell us, or find out for us, who paid the money for the legal fees on behalf of the Art Gallery of Ontario to fight those charges before the labour relations board?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Once again, I shall check with the management of the art gallery and come back with the details. But I'm under the impression that has been covered under the $17,500 and that it does not constitute union-busting or efforts to stop the negotiations.

LIE DETECTOR TESTS

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. As the courts in Ontario cannot convict or acquit an individual through the use of a lie detector or polygraph, and yet lie detectors and voice-stress analysers are said to be used by employers in their selection of employees, and as 19 states in the United States have already banned or limited the use of the polygraph, what has the minister developed in relation to a policy concerning the use of lie detectors?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I assume the honourable member is talking about the use of these lie detectors, polygraph machines, in employment situations. I have indicated my concern about the use of these machines in such situations. I have discussed the matter with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie), in whose jurisdiction the matter lies so far as employment is concerned. I really think the question should be directed to the Minister of Labour as to what, if any, action they intend to take at this time.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: Is the minister aware there are serious doubts as to the accuracy of the polygraph or lie detector, as it only measures psychological signs of stress, blood pressure, skin sensitivity? Is he aware that now arriving on the scene are such devices as psychological testing and handwriting analysis and that these are an invasion of privacy? Will the minister develop a policy concerning the use of the other devices, not only in relation to employment?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't understand the question in relation to these other devices. I indicated some time ago, in response to a question from the honourable member, my own concern with respect to the polygraph. I agree with his observations in relation to the polygraph.

I would be very distressed if anybody's employment depended on a polygraph machine. I would think that would be most unfair. I happened to be involved in an inquiry before I became a member of this Legislature that dealt in some detail with the usefulness of the polygraph machine. I share the member's concerns in that regard and have communicated them to the Ministry of Labour.

I wonder if the member could give me further particulars with respect to this handwriting analysis he speaks of. That hasn't come to my attention before and I would be interested to have further particulars

FILM CENSORSHIP

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. The question regards this government's paternalistic attitude on the question of film censorship. Does the minister not agree the decision to view or not to view films in Ontario is one that should rightly belong to the parents and families in the province, rather than to the state? Therefore, would he not consider, once again, getting rid of the banning and cutting mandate of the censorship board, leaving that board with a mandate to classify films and to issue warnings?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I can't understand the minister's addiction to state control in these matters, Mr. Speaker.

I'd like to ask a supplementary in two parts: Given his opposition to that change, (1) will he make public the working guidelines of the censorship board in Ontario, and also make sure that when the board does cut or ban a film they publicly issue their reasons for doing so; (2) would the minister inform the House as to what action he's decided to take to widen the representation of the board so it more adequately and appropriately reflects the makeup of the citizens of Ontario, especially the question of the domination of that board by people of Anglo-Saxon descent?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware people of Anglo-Saxon descent posed a significant threat in this province. I must admit that's a new one on me.

Mr. M. N. Davison: We were aware; we talked about it in the minister's estimates.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not being an Anglo-Saxon, and I assure the member I am not Anglo-Saxon, I haven't regarded them as a threat.

Mr. Conway: Tell us about your Celtic background.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's right, absolutely right.

I don't know what's going through the mind that produced that form of question—so I'm going to answer it this way, Mr. Speaker, so the House won't become involved in a rather lengthy dialogue, since the bulk of that question was asked in the estimates.

Number one, there will be no changes in the present censorship procedures of the censorship board of Ontario.

Mr. Cassidy: That's shameful.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will tell the member if he goes out on the street and he says that is shameful he will have to run for cover because the people of this province want censorship in films exactly the way it is being provided.

If the member wants to go out and advocate that we're going to run classification with "O" for obscene or "W" for weird or "P" for pornographic, then the member should just march right outside that door and see what kind of an audience he gets, because, I will tell the member, he is living in a dreamworld.

The people of Ontario, on every occasion where they have been consulted, have made it abundantly plain that they want the present censorship of films and all of the procedures to continue exactly as they are. Therefore there will be no change.

With regard to the final part of the member's question to what I was doing about the composition of the board, I will repeat what I said in my estimates. I've said it on at least two occasions. Broadening the base of the board is constantly on my mind. I am looking for ways to do it. I have taken under advisement a suggestion by the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) as to how to do it. I am looking into the matter, and I think that is a sufficient answer. That is exactly what I said in my estimates some time in the month of October. I don't change.

POLICING OF DETROIT RIVER

Mr. Mancini: I have a question of the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. The minister may or may not be aware that during this past summer there were several fatal boating accidents along the Detroit River. A great deal of concern has been expressed by all of the municipalities with waterfront property along the Detroit River that there is not adequate policing on that strip of water.

[11:15]

Would the Solicitor General undertake to form an internal committee of his ministry whereby all the municipalities and the federal government could be contacted? Then it would be possible to set up a proper policing force to handle the traffic on the Detroit River, which is one of the busiest seaways in the world, and hopefully prevent some of the fatalities that occurred over this past summer.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The member is correct; I am not aware of those fatalities. As the member appreciates, the jurisdiction in matters of water policing is complex, particularly where there aren't any harbour commissions and where we are talking about an international waterway. The responsibility of the OPP in this area is questionable.

I certainly will look into the matter and report back to the member whether or not there is any useful initiative I can take. I would like to explore the situation before committing myself further.

Mr. B. Newman: Would the minister also look into the possibility of licensing the individual driver of the motorized boat? This would be so that we would not have youngsters at the ages of eight, nine and 10 driving boats through the areas in which there are a substantial number of swimmers and also a fairly large number of boats.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think all the members of the Legislature are concerned about water safety in this regard. There certainly has been a large increase in the number of boats and the boating population has certainly increased considerably in recent years. With respect to the government moving in and requiring all operators to have a licence, this is a move I am not necessarily prepared to support at this time.

I want to make it very clear that I share the member's concern about the reckless use of boats by people of all ages. There is a much larger number of charges being laid. The Criminal Code was amended not so many years ago to provide for a reckless driving section with respect to boating and a number of charges have been laid.

Given our resources, we would like to see increased patrols where the OPP clearly do have jurisdiction, but when it comes to requiring every citizen who operates a boat to have a licence, I am just not prepared at this point to state that is the best way to deal with what is, undoubtedly, a situation that does concern us all.

TELEPHONE RATES

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications concerning the Ontario Telephone Service Commission. Is the minister aware that the Community Telephone Company of Ontario Limited serves 21,000 telephone users across Ontario, including many in the Hamilton-Wentworth and Haldimand-Norfolk areas? Given that the federal government provided funding to those who intervened with the CRTC to oppose proposed Bell Canada rate increases, will the minister provide similar funding to those who wish to intervene against the proposed Community Telephone rate increases? The proposed increase will mean almost a doubling of telephone rates for many of those 21,000 telephone users.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of providing funds for interveners. There is a normal process almost every year with the 35 or 36 private and municipal telephone companies in the province applying to the Ontario Telephone Service Commission for rate increases or other regulatory matters. It has not been the policy to fund those who wish to appear before the commission and I don't suggest that I am prepared to initiate that type of assistance.

I realize there has been a very large increase applied for by this particular company. Of course, at this moment that is only an application. The commission has not considered that application in any way as yet. I realize that in some areas served by this company there are considerable complaints about the service level. This was discussed at great length at the last hearing when a rate increase was applied for.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF REVENUE

Hon. Mr. Maccek: Before we enter the debate on the vote dealing with assessments, I would like to inform the members who may not already know that one of the senior members of my staff, with whom I am sure they have dealt on many occasions with regard to assessment, Mr. Pat Gillis, who was my executive director in the assessment division, passed away on Wednesday night. Certainly, we are going to miss him around this building and around the government. I just want to pass the information on to the members that the funeral will be tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, for those who would like to attend and it's at St. Gregory's Church at 122 Rathburn Road at the corner of Kipling Avenue and Rathburn Road in Toronto.

I can't let this opportunity go by without saying how much assistance Mr. Gillis has given to me, as a Minister of Revenue, and I am sure to all of the members of this Legislature, and, to all of the municipalities, the clerks, reeves and councillors who knew Mr. Gillis very well and who have dealt with him over a great period of years. I thought the members would like to be made aware of his passing.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, we were very shocked to hear of Mr. Gillis' death. In my case I believe it was yesterday I heard about it.

He really was an extremely useful public servant. I remember just a few months ago when it was decided that certain townships were going to have the benefit of a section 86 reassessment he undertook, I am sure with the minister's concurrence, to be sure the members involved were fully instructed as to its ramifications. I really appreciated that at the time and I felt he approached the job not only with a very broad base of knowledge—probably broader than anybody else in the province—but also with a very good spirit to assist those perhaps less knowledgeable than himself, but obviously with very good humour and with the very best attitude of co-operation.

It's a very sad thing indeed that he has died at such an early age. Not only will we be deprived of his advice and assistance, but we have lost a very good man.

Mr. Charlton: I would just like to make a few brief comments as well. Mr. Gillis was not only a very capable civil servant but was one who provided a very definite and distinct amount of leadership in what's happened in property tax movement in Ontario in the last 15 years or so.

My personal association with Mr. Gillis, both as a civil servant, since I have been here, and as my boss in my former employment created for me a great deal of respect for the man. His loss to this province and to this Legislature and to the Ministry of Revenue I think will be felt in a very significant way.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Chairman, I can recall some 10 years ago—the minister probably isn't aware of this—I spent a summer working in assessment for the Ministry of Revenue in Sudbury after the province had taken over assessment from municipalities. In those days, as now, when anyone talked about property tax or property tax reform, with all due respect, they never mentioned the names of Terry Russell or Lorne Maeck or any other officials; it was always Pat Gillis.

He was always very helpful. In particular, I can recall the enormous amount of work he did in trying to sort out mining taxes and how mining companies should pay taxes to the municipalities and to the province and so forth. Just the other night I was down at the Ontario mining association function at the Royal York hotel and it had just been announced that Mr. Gillis had died. Several people from the mining industry expressed very great sadness because he had been extremely helpful and very constructive in attempting to sort some order out of that whole question of property taxes that should be paid by mining installations. So it's not any one particular section of Ontario that will miss Mr. Gillis but a great many people in the province.

On vote 804, municipal assessment program:

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, on the municipal assessment program, the minister is aware that back about a week or two I wrote him a letter concerning a resolution passed by the city of Windsor council. It asked the minister to reconsider his decision to discontinue the printing of complete and comprehensive property descriptions on the assessment rolls in view of the additional cost and inconvenience this would cause all municipalities. Has the minister reconsidered that or has he some information that he may provide the House at this time?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, that matter is still under consideration. As the member probably knows, we have just recently revamped all of our system and the data that's put on the assessment tapes. We felt at the time that we had all the necessary information there. Indeed, we have more information in most regards than what was there to start with. We have just gone through all of these changes and we really feel the information that's now on the tapes should be sufficient for the municipalities.

I wouldn't be anticipating any changes to our procedure now because we really just made those changes and it has been with the advice of municipalities and so on. We had a committee that worked on that for quite a long time and there was input from the municipalities and other groups dealing with property taxes all the time. We thought we had covered pretty well all the information that would be necessary. As a matter of fact, we did include more information than was on the original tapes.

The details the member is referring to are not really fresh in my mind. I am not sure exactly what the city of Windsor is requesting, but I think it would be very difficult for me to make a commitment to change the information on the tapes at this point, because of all of the intensive work. It has been a matter of a couple of years. There has been a great amount of intensive work done before we developed our new system and it would be rather difficult now to make changes.

Mr. B. Newman: There's some misapprehension that shouldn't exist with the municipalities. If I may, Mr. Minister, I would like to read this into the record so your officials could look at it and see if the municipality is justified in its complaints. This was a resolution adopted by the city council on October 29 of this year:

"Whereas the Minister of Revenue has decided to discontinue the use of complete and comprehensive property descriptions and, in due course, will also eliminate the depth of property from the assessment rolls which are prepared by the regional assessment office for distribution to municipalities annually;

"And whereas the following major procedures undertaken by municipalities involving the examination of assessment rolls require that detailed property descriptions be available:

"(a) preparation of property lists used by the city departments in connection with zoning amendments, street and alley closings, committee of adjustment applications, improvement areas, local improvement assessments;

"(b) the calculation of local improvement assessments which are determined on the basis of property dimensions;

"(c) responding to requests received by the public, including real estate offices, lawyers, building contractors, investment firms, banks, as well as all municipal departments;

"(d) establishing new polling subdivision boundaries for municipal election purposes;

"(e) determine ownership and property dimensions for weed-cutting charges;

"(f) to ascertain the existence or otherwise of alley or street allowances;

"(g) preparation of petitions for local improvements;

"(h) preparation of petitions for street and alley closings;

"And whereas the only alternative to municipalities is that they prepare Mylar plans which would contain the dimensions of each property in the municipality which would have to be cross-referenced with the assessment rolls;

"And whereas the preparation and updating of these plans by all municipalities would entail a considerable amount of work and in many instances additional staff would be required;

"And whereas all information has in the past been available from the assessment roll and in the future will require an examination of both the assessment roll and the plan prepared by the municipality;

"And whereas the additional cost to the municipality to gather and update this information does not appear to be justified when it is now available at the regional assessment office, but not printed on the assessment rolls;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the Minister of Revenue be asked to reconsider his ministry's decision to discontinue the printing of complete and comprehensive property descriptions on the assessment rolls, in view of the additional cost and inconvenience this would cause to all municipalities."

That is the extent of the resolution, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The gist of the whole thing seems to be that the city of Windsor feels we already have the information and we are just not putting it on the assessment rolls. I will look into that situation to see if there is a possible way of doing it, but I would warn the member that the responsibility of the Ministry of Revenue and the assessment division is not to correct all of the situations that the municipality is concerned with, but to assess for property tax purposes. We could extend our services way beyond our mandate by getting all kinds of information that is not related to property taxes.

While we want to co-operate with the municipalities as much as we can, there has to be a cutoff point on the amount of information we gather, because we don't have a mandate to go beyond assessing property for taxation purposes. Municipalities can use much of the information we gather for our needs and we are certainly prepared to give it to them, but we really don't want to extend our program beyond what we are supposed to be doing in order to facilitate some other needs.

I will look at it, however, and if it is the case we do already have the information and it is only a matter of putting it on the rolls, if that is possible certainly I will consider it.

Mr. B. Newman: The ministry has provided the municipalities with all of that in the past, I assume, so it is simply a matter of continuing the policy you had.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That's true, except, as the member knows, on the assessment rolls there is only so much room to print things. While we have added other information which was necessary for assessment purposes, we may need the space on the assessment roll for that purpose rather than for information that really is not relevant to assessment or property taxes. But we will look at it.

Mr. B. Newman: If the municipality has to do something that has already been done by your offices, why have the taxpayers got to pay twice for the information requested?

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise two items with the minister. The first concerns section 86 reassessments—and I'll be very brief because we've covered a lot of this ground before.

In recent weeks I've been meeting with many elected and appointed municipal officials, discussing the matter of section 86. It's coming before them again now—those who have opted for the study—and they are being faced with a difficult decision.

I think it's fair to say that almost without exception municipalities are considering a section 86, not because they regard it as putting in place a tax system which is any more fair or any more sensible, but because of the problem of assessment appeals by large property owners, both multiresidential and, in some cases, industrial and commercial as well. It seems to me that to go through this process and to have a new section 86 system of assessment in place in a municipality, with all the hassles that that entails and all the problems it creates for the residential and commercial taxpayers within that municipality, simply to deal with the matter of assessment appeals is a very complex and not very reasonable way to proceed, especially since it now appears that for 1981 we'll be moving into some new system which may or may not require a section 86.

I seek the minister's response to that. It bothers me greatly that it's being done for completely the wrong reasons.

Second; on section 86 there seems to be some difficulty facing municipal councils when they are considering now whether or not to proceed with that reassessment for next year. They are being given advice—and I'm not sure whether it's from staff of the minister or whether it's from the municipal solicitors out there—that if the meeting is held in the open and if they decide that they do not wish to proceed with the section 86 reassessment, then the municipality may be subject to very expensive and serious lawsuits.

It seems to me that because they have not proceeded the appeals will then have a ground on which they can go to the assessment appeal and have their taxes reduced very, very substantially because the municipality didn't implement section 86. This would undoubtedly result in action by the municipality to try to recover its lost taxes in some other way. It would have to go to the courts.

It seems to me that it's very unfortunate—if the advice the municipalities are getting is indeed correct and I have a hunch it probably is—that the system is forcing municipal councils to conduct very important business in closed meetings and to refusing to give the people who elected them the reasons for whatever decision they make. I really cannot support that; I would appreciate your response to it.

I would hope that your staff and yourself can advise municipalities of a way around that problem so that a council's decision as to whether or not to proceed with section 86 can be held in an open meeting so the citizens of that municipality can know what the municipal council is doing and why it is doing it.

One final matter on section 86: we now have a situation within counties and regions where some municipalities within the same upper-tier municipality have opted for section 86 and some have not. Even if all municipalities within the upper tier had opted for section 86 the factors applied to each class of property will be different from one municipality to another; that seems to me to be increasing the inequity in terms of the apportionment of regional or county costs.

It means that in one municipality residential taxpayers may be paying on the basis of 20 per cent of their market value for their share of regional or county costs. In another municipality in the same region, because of the buffering of the equalization factors which comes into this as well they may only be paying 15 per cent on their market value for the apportionment of regional or county costs. Thus there is inequity within the upper-tier municipalities.

It seems to me you might want to consider whether section 86 should not have been done across an entire upper-tier municipality rather than being kept at the lower tier. I recognize the legislation doesn't presently permit that, but I wonder whether that is something you have been looking at.

My other two questions relate to the new equalization factor. I am still very confused as to why we got into the difficult situation we are in. The only argument I have heard that makes any sense at all is the law required the new equalization factor. Yet in my perhaps overly simplistic way of looking at things—although I don't think it is—it seems to me we are here to make the law and if it became apparent to you and to your staff that the new equalization factors were going to create a very serious problem, as they have done, why weren't we asked to change the law so we could avoid the mess we are now into?

It seems to me to be very clear, after talking to the municipal representatives, that while the new equalization factors may be better for some and worse for others than what we had before, when viewed as a whole the system is no more fair and equitable—and in fact for some may be less fair and less equitable—than the factors we had in the past.

It is agreed they were unfair. There is no doubt about it. But I'm not convinced the new factors, with the new buffering and everything else that is wrapped up into the package now that the disaster or near disaster has occurred, are any better than what we had before.

I would appreciate your response to that. I believe you recognize that and I believe your colleague, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), recognizes that too. I assume that is why we have a commitment for a new system for 1981. But I would appreciate confirmation of my beliefs and I would appreciate any further clarification you may be able to give us. I know you were not able to give my colleague from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton) too much on Monday, but if you have some further clarification about the kind of thing we can expect in 1981, whether it be a completely new property tax structure or whether it is to be more tinkering with what we have got, I would appreciate that kind of clarification.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, I will deal with the items as the member has brought them up.

He first spoke about section 86 and he talked about the fact he didn't feel section 86 was any more fair than it was before we started the exercise and it was only there to accommodate the matter of the loss of assessment appeals.

I do not deny that is one of the reasons the municipalities are requesting section 86, but it certainly is not the only reason. Certainly, when we are finished with this section 86 exercise, there is a lot more equity and fairness within the property classes than there was before we began. To state it very simply, if in a municipality there are two houses valued at $50,000, I believe each one of those property tax payers should pay the same amount of tax.

That isn't what was happening in those municipalities which are already under section 86 and those who have requested it. Our investigations and the program itself have revealed there were some grave inequities, not just with residences but with commercial buildings, industrial buildings and so on, and there were many inequities and a lot of unfairness out in those municipalities.

I don't think it's quite right to say the only reason municipalities have asked for section 86 is because of the fact they were losing appeals. However, that follows as well. If there are inequities they are bound to lose the appeals because the appeals are based on what other people are paying for similar property in that same vicinity. If they're losing appeals it's very obvious something is out of whack with the assessment. If it's out of whack, it's unfair. I just want to clarify that I don't agree with the member's idea about it being only because of the loss of appeals.

The member indicated it was being done for the wrong reasons. I think it's being done for the right reasons—to get some equity within those property classes so people who are paying their taxes are going to pay the same amount for property of the same value in that municipality.

The member was also concerned about the presentation on section 86 to the municipalities. I have instructed my staff to go whichever way the municipality requests. If the municipality requests the impact study information in camera, that's the way it would be given. I would prefer it to be public and we do suggest that to the municipalities. But we don't want to dictate to them.

I think the other thing the member was concerned about may be a little bit of a misinterpretation of what has been going on. To explain it in detail, if a municipality were to ask us during the impact study presentation for the names and addresses of each resident and each property owner and the amount their taxes would go up or down, then later, should the municipality reject the application of section 86, that information would then be public. Then everyone whose taxes were going to go down would, obviously, next year appeal their taxes based on this information and the shift would take place through the courts instead of through the program.

When we talk about that aspect I think that's what we're referring to. We do not give the details of each property—as to the names, the addresses and so on—because we want to leave the municipalities the freedom to make their own choice, based on what the impact will be in general terms.

I don't know if the member has seen an impact study; I'm sure he probably has and knows the detail that's in it. It doesn't list each property.

My concern is if we go beyond that with the municipalities—and some municipalities have asked to know how it is going to affect each property individually in the municipality—if the municipalities demand this kind of information they had also better be prepared to implement section 86, because the appeals the following year will do it for them anyway. Then it would only bog down the courts. That's the danger of giving detailed information.

Maybe that's the kind of thing the member has been hearing from councils. I'm not sure, but it probably is.

The member talked about the inequities between the upper-tier municipalities because some are under section 86 and some are not; some are based on a certain percentage of the assessment, while others are based on a different percentage. I really think he must have been referring to lower-tier municipalities, rather than upper. I would think he is talking about the municipalities within a region, so it would be really the lower-tier municipalities.

That is the reason we have equalization factors. The purpose of the factor is to equalize those differences. If we were on 100 per cent market value assessment throughout the province we wouldn't need the factor. But the factor is developed to account for those differences in percentages of assessment in each municipality within that region. That's the reason they're there.

The other thing the member talked about was the equalization factors themselves. As I said earlier, we have developed those factors using the same act and the same criteria from which the old factors were developed. What they do is reflect the changes in assessment during that nine-year period when they were frozen from 1970 to 1979.

It's very difficult to develop a different factor if there are going to be adjustments made if we feel it's unfair. I'm one who probably does feel if we went to the raw factors it would be very unfair—the kind of burden imposed upon the small rural municipalities particularly. I don't think anybody in this House wants to see that kind of burden. That is why the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs and the Ministry of Education announced the other phasing-in type program with the five per cent and 10 per cent raises in grants for the school boards in the municipalities.

I have to reiterate that my responsibility as the Minister of Revenue is to develop the factors. There are not too many municipalities complaining about the factors themselves. They know the factors are developed properly under the act and they're not complaining about the factors themselves. What they're concerned about is what those factors do and the shifts they create.

As I said earlier in the debate, the ministries of Intergovernmental Affairs, Education, Treasury and Economics and others are looking to find some sort of equitable program for 1981. We have announced only the phasing-in program and the adjustment for 1980.

Hopefully, those answers will be forthcoming. I would like to see them come as quickly as possible because I understand the municipalities have to plan for the future and they want to know where they're going. I can understand why they're upset about not knowing what's going to happen beyond 1980. So I hope the ministries involved will move in that direction as quickly as possible and get some information on it to the municipalities.

That pretty well answers the inquiries the member made.

Mr. Isaacs: I have one minor comment. Yes, I appreciate the minister's answers. It certainly provides an answer although I may disagree with him in certain areas.

On section 86, the minister indicated that section provides more equity within classes. I don't dispute that, but I would suggest that in many cases it provides less equity between classes. It may well be that under the old system, by accident and not by design, a commercial property worth $100,000 was assessed the same as a residential property with the market value of $100,000, but when you implement section 86, that disappears.

I agree it would only be by chance that situation would arise, but you move from a system that may or may not have some equity in it by chance to one that has equity for certain groups but not for people within different groups. I don't see that as any big improvement at all, but I think that's somewhat of a difference of opinion and I'll leave it at that.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would like to make a very brief reply. It will not mean less equity between the classes, because when we do the section 86 exercise part of it is that each class will have the same total amount of assessment as before we started. So we're not permitting any shift at all between classes. They're not going up or down; they have the same amount of assessment in each class when we're finished as they did when we started. So it doesn't allow any shift. It's purposely that way because, as I'm sure the member realizes, if we went to 100 per cent market value and allowed the shifts that would take place in each class, residential property taxes in Ontario might go up as high as double what they are now. Of course none of us can permit that to happen. That's why I feel rather comfortable with section 86; we're not allowing those shifts to take place.

It's not the final answer, but at least I think it's a much better situation than those municipalities had before we started.

Mr. Gaunt: There is one matter I wanted to raise briefly with the minister, Mr. Chairman. It's a matter we've discussed on numerous occasions. My friend the minister has been most co-operative in dealing with this situation. I just wanted to ask a question and get his view with respect to this whole matter of the assessment procedure on mobile homes.

In my area, we are having a little difficulty with this. I should mention to the minister that we have a number of mobile home parks which have sprung up, mainly because of Douglas Point. The great influx of construction workers, a lot of whom have opted for this type of housing, certainly has caused a greater than normal problem in this regard in so far as the assessment procedures that apply to mobile homes are concerned.

The minister has indicated that under the definition of land in the Assessment Act, once a mobile home is installed on a piece of property and services are provided, for property tax and assessment purposes the unit becomes part of the land and consequently is assessed, with the land, to the owner. That is quite correct. The minister suggested there was really no relief under the Assessment Act, although there may be under the Municipal Act if a municipality wanted to pass a bylaw enabling it to enter the names of the tenants on the tax collectors roll. The taxes could then be payable by the tenant under the terms of the lease.

Until now the municipality hasn't been inclined to do that; in fact it has resisted doing so and a constituent of mine is still left with the problem. There is a further problem because of the new landlord and tenant legislation and its implications, whereby a landlord is locked into the six per cent. Where the tax increases go beyond that then it does create a problem, particularly in terms of the interim tax bill.

In this case the owner of the mobile home park has to pay an interim tax bill without knowing what his final bill is going to be, so all he can do is guess at the amount. If he guesses wrong he is going to have to carry the can, so to speak, for the additional amount for that period, until he is able to get it back from his tenants.

I understand he may apply to the commission; he may be able to estimate those tax increases over and above the six per cent and hope the commission would be sympathetic to his case based on, perhaps a past record of what he had been paying as far as the interim and final tax bills were concerned.

My question to the minister really is does he anticipate, when he brings in his tax reform package—whenever, if and when—there will be any thought that the definition of land under the Assessment Act would be changed to take into account these problems being experienced by my constituents, and I am sure by many other people who are owners of mobile home parks in this province?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, the problem outlined by the member for Huron-Bruce is one I have had inquiries about from other members as well.

The major problem, of course, is that municipalities do not want to pass that bylaw. The simple fact is that mobile homes are mobile. It is fine to assess someone who is leasing or renting a space in a mobile home area as long as the person stays there, but they are mobile and they can move. That is why the municipalities leave it to the owner of the property to assess these taxes from those people.

I can very well understand that, and I can very well understand why a municipality would be very hesitant to go the other route. That is not to say all people in mobile homes are crooks by any means; but they are easily moved, they can be moved overnight. When they are gone, who pays the taxes?

It is possible, I suppose, that municipalities could pass a bylaw under which they could assess, but in the final analysis if they weren't paid the owner would then be responsible. However, that is something that could be looked at.

I think at one time the whole matter of property tax reform was addressed, as were some of these problems, by the commissions which sat. I think mobile homes were discussed. I don't think any final decision was taken on it; it is a problem we really have to look at again. When we bring in a package, if it happens to be the type of package I think most members would like to see and that is total property tax reform—whether we can ever develop one that is acceptable to all members of the House is rather difficult to say—but if we go that route perhaps this is one area that should be looked at again.

I understand the difficulties of your constituent. You and I have already agreed to sit down and discuss it with your constituent, but in this case there aren't any easy answers. The municipality, of course, wants to collect taxes on the property. They are going to collect them from the person they know is going to be there and the person they can hold responsible.

You and I had a discussion about condominiums, but really you can't compare condominiums with mobile homes because condominiums stay in the same location all the time. They are registered in the registry office under a legal registration to the owner. I am not too familiar with the Condominium Act, but I understand they jointly own the land on which the building sits. It is all in their deed, it is all registered.

The mobile homes are much more difficult to administer. Perhaps something could be done in the area I suggested whereby a municipality could pass a bylaw that if a person moved and didn't pay, in the final analysis the owner of the property would be responsible. That might be the direction to go.

Mr. Gaunt: Just to respond to that, Mr. Chairman, in this case the owner has already indicated he would be quite prepared to assume that responsibility. He has indicated if the township would put the names of the tenants on the tax collector's roll, in the event one of them did leave without paying his or her taxes he would ultimately be responsible. He is quite prepared to accept that responsibility—willingly, gladly—as long as he can overcome the main burden with which he is saddled at the moment, given the condition we have described.

It seems to me where you have a person such as we have in this instance—and I am sure most owners are this way; very sincere, very dedicated to providing a service to that community and to the people in his mobile home park. He runs a good operation; I have never had one complaint from any tenant of a home park operated by my constituent, Mr. Cormier, never. I did get one complaint having to do with the entrance to the mobile home park, but that was because of the road superintendent who overlooked grading the entrance in the spring and it became a real problem to get into the home park. But that was readily rectified and that is the only complaint I have ever had.

Under these conditions, where you have a person who is providing this kind of service and who is prepared to do everything reasonable to accommodate the people and the township, it seems to me unfortunate that he can't get some relief for the financial burden with which he is faced; perhaps we can work it out somehow.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I was just talking to my staff while you were speaking. The suggestion I made regarding the tenants being assessed and the owner of the land being responsible finally if they didn't pay would pose no problems for our assessors at all, or our ministry; but I guess we would have to check with the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), who administers the Municipal Act, to see whether that type of thing is permissible under their act. I'd be happy to have our staff look into that before we meet with your constituent so we would have that information.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, could I bring to the minister's attention complaints that I have received, and I think they are quite widespread across northern Ontario, having to do with Ministry of Natural Resources policy to allow cottage owners to purchase their lot which was formerly leased. The lease entered into some years ago was at an annual rental of 10 per cent of the assessed value. New evaluations are now coming through and this poses difficulties.

One problem that came to my attention was a person who had a lease and was paying $180 a year rent. This was 10 per cent of the assessed value, which was $1,800. That lease is about four or five years old. It has a 10-year life, but the change of the government's policy has given him the option to purchase. The price now coming through on the new assessed value is four times higher than what it was when the original lease was entered into.

For instance, this $1,800 assessed value four years ago is now coming through at about $8,000. These people feel they are being put in a corner in that they have an investment. There have been improvements put on that lot to the tune of $20,000, so in order to protect the $20,000 of building improvements they now must expend $8,000; or conversely, continue with the lease to the end of 10 years, and then at the end of the 10 years they will have to pay a rental of 10 per cent of the new assessed value which would equal $800 in this case.

I know land values have gone up in four years, but have they increased to the tune of 400 per cent in that time? I think either the values were wrong four years ago or they are wrong now. I don't know which end of the stick is wrong, but certainly they don't balance out.

I also am aware that in the last lottery draw in the district of Sudbury, only last June, 32 lots were drawn and they sold or were leased at an assessed value between $2,200 and $3,000. These people who are now getting the figure of $8,000 know what happened last June when these lots went for less than $3,000.

Obviously there are wide discrepancies; I wonder if the minister could bring some light on the subject and tell us where we are as far as cottage lot assessments are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, this is a matter I have discussed with the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) and others who have experienced the same problem you are talking about. I think in some cases the people who are doing the appraisals or the assessments are looking at the lot today after a considerable amount of work has been done to improve the appearance of it, as compared to the time it was first leased to the lessee as raw land, probably with no work done. Obviously when you look at it after they have brushed it out, cleaned it up and done all of these things it looks more valuable.

I don't think they should be including that. They shouldn't be including any improvements the owner or the lessee has made in the value of that lot. I think that is high, if they are being assessed at $8,000 up in your area; although I don't expect they should still be assessed at $1,800, I don't think that's reasonable to expect.

I have just been told by my staff that our ministry is doing the assessment on this. I wasn't aware we did the appraisals as well, but apparently they are taking our assessment as an appraisal, is that right? If that's the case I will instruct my staff to look again. The story you are telling me indicates to me the assessment could be high.

I will ask our staff to look at it again with a view to being a little more realistic; bearing in mind of course the other part of the statement you made about the lots that were put up for auction; did you say they went for $2,200 in that vicinity? Those would be raw lots, I suppose, they wouldn't be lots that had any work whatsoever done on them. Would they be lots that had roads leading to them or would they be water lots? I wonder if the member could advise me on that?

Mr. Germa: The particular problem I was posing to the minister was in the Espanola area where these assessments are coming through at that rate. I compared the price there, but the lots in the Sudbury district would be more desirable on account of their proximity. Despite that, the lot in the Espanola area was coming through at the high price; further the lot I was talking about was accessible by water only, so there were no improvements whatsoever in that regard. Of the other 32 lots, I am not aware whether or not they had highway access or whether there was strictly access by water.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We will certainly look into it and see if there are some adjustments that can be made, because the way the honourable member has presented it to me it appears to me our appraisals may be high. This is where complications arise. We assess at market value, or a percentage thereof, but we take into consideration all of the improvements that have been put on the property. It may be that Natural Resources should be reverting it back to the status it had before the lessee or owner improved it, maybe that's where the problem lies. I will certainly look into it. I think there are some problems there that have to be resolved.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, the minister will recall that during my opening statement and during my comments last Monday, we got into a rather lengthy discussion about leadership and about where we are going from here with property taxation. I would like to get into that a little bit again today.

Just before I do that, though, I would like to make some comments to the minister about some of the things he said earlier about section 86 and try to relate that to some of the things I have said. As I have said in the past, I understand and I agree there are some improvements that result from section 86. The minister made it quite clear this morning that the losses municipalities were suffering in the review courts indicated the inequities that existed in the current system, and that is quite correct. Obviously, if the system is equitable and fair people don't win appeals.

That raises the question, though, of what losses in appeals in an area that was done on section 86 this year indicate about how far we have gone towards real equity with section 86. I don't have current Hamilton figures with me, I didn't intend to raise this until I heard his comments this morning, but early in September I got the figures in Hamilton, when they were approximately halfway through the appeal process. They had about 8,000 appeals this year. They had not yet heard any of the major appeals, the major commercial, industrial or apartment appeals.

Most of what they had heard at that point were residential appeals and small business appeals, the less complicated appeals that were also a lot smaller in terms of assessment dollars, and therefore in terms of losses in assessment dollars per appeal. At that stage we had already lost, in Hamilton, half as much as we had lost last year under the old system.

I suppose my point is simply that section 86 has some value, but that it is not in any way, shape or form what we are looking for in terms of real, effective fair and equitable property tax reform in this province. I haven't been over what has happened since September—although I could make some good guesses. I suppose—but I had a look at some of the kinds of things that were being lost in those appeals. I guess what it really boils down to is when you take something that is imperfect, as in a very inequitable assessment system, and try to match it to something that is supposed to be at least more perfect, as in relative market value, you still have a lot of problems left over.

I think the minister is going to find in the appeal process—and it will vary from area to area obviously—that after section 86 the assessment review boards will still to a fairly large degree reflect a fairly substantial number of inequities existing in the system. I think the appeal courts will reflect that this year, next year and the year after.

For example, I think what is happening in Hamilton with residential and land appeals will set some precedents that will win additional appeals next year, which is the same kind of process that was going on under the old system. It may not be quite as substantial in extent, there may be some improvements, but I think you will find there is still a fairly substantial number of inequities in the system. I will leave that, but it is just something I would like the minister to think seriously about and have a serious look at.

I want to get back on to the leadership thing. I think the minister may have taken some of my earlier comments a little too personally and perhaps even some of his staff did. I want to try to make the kind of thing that I was talking about a little clearer. I have piles of file folders all over my desk today, most of them filled with newspaper clippings.

In Ontario we probably get somewhere between 10 and 15 times more publicity about the property tax sectors than on all the other taxes in this country put together. That indicates to me there is not only a very serious resentment by the public, but very serious misunderstanding and a very serious lack of knowledge. To all intents and purposes there is very little if any, valuable leadership from this government, not just from the Ministry of Revenue but from Treasury, Intergovernmental Affairs, and Education—leadership in the sense of involving the opposition members of this Legislature, the other members of the government party, and the public in the process of working towards property tax reform.

When we consider other jurisdictions in this country, British Columbia, for example, there is no question in my mind that the system they went to in 1974 is imperfect; it has its problems, it didn't solve all of the problems in the property tax sector. They went to a system very similar to that which the minister is attempting to do, in a voluntary way under section 86. They went to it province-wide though.

They are confronted with the same kinds of problems we have here in Ontario; the same kinds of public reactions, the same kinds of shifts in property value, I would imagine. Obviously there was some extra ingredient. There have been other places, not necessarily in Canada, but in the United States that we've all read about and that the assessment staff in the ministry use as examples or refer to in comments when they're briefing assessment staff on certain matters.

In all of those other jurisdictions, all of the kinds of problems that we're confronted with here, existed—to a greater or lesser degree. Those problems existed as they exist for us. The difference seems to be that there was some ingredient in those jurisdictions which allowed them to proceed—an ingredient which for some reason we don't seem to have here. I suppose I'm suggesting that in large measure that ingredient has to be leadership.

The minister and I have discussed the assessment situation on a number of occasions, perhaps more frequently than we sometimes like to remember, and his staff have been through it a hundred times more frequently than he has. We've discussed the fact that he has difficulty talking to or selling anything regarding assessments and property tax reform to the government caucus and to the cabinet.

We've also discussed the fact that both opposition parties have the same problem and lack of understanding, in terms of what we've been presented with to date, of understanding in an effective and useful way and of where we should be going from here.

The minister knows there aren't more than two or three people in this House who really have a useful feel for the kind of things that are going on in assessment and property taxation—maybe as many as five, but that would be pushing it.

Since we've been at this game for 10 or 15 years now—I guess probably closer to 15 if you take into account the time we spent studying before we jumped—that indicates to me a lack of leadership.

There should be by this point not only a universal understanding in here of what is going on—what we are confronted with and precisely what the problems are that we have to solve—but there should be a reasonably good understanding out there in the public after the reams and reams of publicity we have had on this topic. Yet not only are we really no closer to effective, fair, province-wide property tax reform than we were 10 years ago, we are no closer to having the people to whom we should be talking about it understanding not only the problems we are faced with but the direction we have to head in in order to find some answers.

That is what I was getting at, I suppose to the largest degree, when I was talking about leadership. There is no question the staff in the assessment division are competent and understand what they are doing. There is no question that your staff met regularly with Treasury staff or Education staff or Intergovernmental Affairs staff and pass things back and forth and discuss them. That's not what I'm talking about as leadership. That's not what I'm talking about as input either, because the system is far bigger than a four-ministry interrelationship.

The system includes this Legislature and the system includes all of the property taxpayers in the province. One thing for certain, you would have real difficulty finding a property taxpayer in this province who would say they can see any real leadership on the part of this government in sorting out the property tax sector.

I think that's true even for the members of this House. If all this misunderstanding and mistrust about property tax reform exists among members you would have a difficult time finding members on your own side or on this side who could honestly say they can see any real leadership. Again I am not talking about leadership in terms of understanding and expertise on the part of your staff. I am talking about the kind of political leadership that is required to go any further than what we have gone.

That, I suppose, is why I felt I had to go through this thing again so that the minister might more clearly understand what I was getting at. I have suggested to the minister a number of times over the last couple of years a number of things which I felt had to happen before we would really make any serious progress. Yet still none of those things have happened.

The minister has been particularly open and useful in his relationship with me as a critic, and probably the same is true for the Liberal critic—I don't know if that is true but I would imagine it is. The minister has been helpful to me and I think even on occasion I have been helpful to the minister, but that's not going to solve our problems in terms of property tax reform because the minister and I can sit down and discuss things reasonably openly.

I suggested two years ago to the minister that before we could get over the hump, the rut that we are in in terms of property tax reform, there had to be some reasonably good understanding in this Legislature. As I have already suggested I think even more than that, we've got to go beyond that and effectively go out to the public. This place is a good place to start, yet, we've made no progress in terms of the members of this Legislature and I think it's time. Although I have a reasonably good understanding of what's been happening and what goes on—I talk to the minister regularly, and I even talk to fairly substantial numbers of his staff regularly since I still have acquaintances in the ministry—even I don't have a good overall sense, because I don't have the data. I don't have the access to it, nor do the Liberals, nor do most of the people in the Conservative caucus.

As I suggested two years ago, I think it's time we, as a Legislature, made a commitment to get on with the job. It's time the government made a commitment, the minister made a commitment, the Treasurer made a commitment, and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs made a commitment that we would sit down together to teach each other and to help each other to work towards the solution. It isn't going to happen unless we do. I think as time goes on, you are becoming more and more aware of that.

I'm raising it again today because I raised it two years ago when you were new and perhaps not as familiar with the roadblocks that confront us as you are now. I raise it again because before we can effectively do anything, we have to pass this hurdle. The minister has to pass the hurdle in his own party. Each of us over here has to pass the hurdles with our fellow members in terms of finding an acceptable package.

You talk about packages, and we've been talking about packages, but we're no closer to anybody understanding what should even be in the final package to make it acceptable. We've got to get beyond this stage, and part of that process has to be leadership. Part of that process has to be somebody providing the leadership in this House so we can sit down and understand what it is we're up against and what it is we're doing to try to overcome that. I don't see it happening.

For these reasons—because your ministry is the place where the expertise exists, or at least should exist, and I believe it does exist—to that degree I have to level the criticism at you. I understand the bind you're in; I understand the Treasurer has certain policy responsibilities, and I understand the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs and the Minister of Education have a fair stake in this as well. At some point we have to get beyond the stage we're at, and I think that has to be done through co-operation, through information, through consultation and questioning.

I suppose what I'm doing is pleading with the minister so at some point in the very near future we can get over these horrendous piles of newspaper stories on property taxes, all of which reflect a very serious understanding of the whole system and all of which never seem to improve in terms of their view of that tax structure.

Vote 804 agreed to.

PQ WHITE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, it has been about three weeks since the government of Quebec presented its long-awaited white paper on sovereignty-association.

This House will recall the Premier of this province (Mr. Davis) has already spoken for this government in expressing our fundamental disagreement with the white paper proposals regarding sovereignty-association. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you were glad, as I was glad, to see the views that were expressed here were endorsed by the Leader of the Opposition in this House (Mr. S. Smith) and by the leader of the third party (Mr. Cassidy).

I hope this statement today, made on behalf of the government, will make clear to members and other Ontarians the specific reasons why sovereignty-association is not in our best interests or in their best interests, and why this government will continue to reject any notion of negotiating such an arrangement with the government of Quebec.

It seems to us that the white paper is based on three fundamental misconceptions.

First, the white paper asserts the only choices facing Quebecers in terms of their relationship with Canada are either sovereignty-association or the status quo. This, of course, is just not so. Virtually all governments in Canada, provincial and federal, are in a realistic mood to renew federalism and are seriously prepared to accommodate many contemporary interests—some regional, some economic, some social, some linguistic and cultural.

Second, the white paper says it is directed exclusively to Quebecers, but it is not merely a blueprint for Quebec. It is a blueprint for Ontario and indeed for the whole of Canada, and it is not an acceptable one. This is our country the white paper is proposing to divide. Moreover, if there are advantages for the people of Quebec in its proposals, and this I would say is indeed a very big "if," there are unquestionably some very large disadvantages for the people of Ontario and the rest of Canada.

Third, the white paper states sovereignty and association are inseparable. Logically, then, if economic association cannot be achieved, the whole proposition should crumble. However, the paper refuses to come to this conclusion. Therefore, we can only conclude that sovereignty itself, the political independence of Quebec, is the ultimate goal the white paper is pursuing.

In addition to these basic criticisms, we note that the white paper is a smooth piece of political persuasion, written by Quebecers to appeal to Quebecers and, of course, pro-Quebec all the way. However, this approach provides a too-simple analysis of a very complex problem.

Possibly the most obvious aspect of the proposal for sovereignty-association, which Ontarians and other Canadians should note, is the implicit assumption in the white paper that Canadians outside Quebec will calmly accept the dismemberment of their country and will then sit down willingly and work out economic arrangements with the very government that caused the rupture in the first place. Ontarians have worked closely with Quebecers, as have their governments, on many matters of common concern to us, as Canadians, over the years. Even though we would continue to be geographic neighbours, it would be naive to expect the same spirit of co-operation would automatically continue.

We believe we speak for the vast majority of Ontario residents when we say no kind of separation of Quebec from Canada could be amicable. The Parti Quebecois is fooling itself if it believes that life would be "business as usual" after such a drastic event. Ontarians are not unemotional when challenged on matters about which they care deeply, such as their country.

Even if it were possible to overcome these deep emotions, we would have to ask ourselves if sovereignty-association were attractive in terms of the political and economic interests of Ontario. The answer, we say, is a clear no.

There are 10 provincial partners in Confederation, each with varying populations and economic strengths, but 10 partners nonetheless. At the intergovernmental conference table, everybody has an equal voice. The white paper would make representation 50:50—50 per cent Quebec and 50 per cent all the rest of Canada. The attraction of such an arrangement to Quebec is obvious, but there is no attraction to Ontario. Nothing would compel us to accept. Yet that is exactly what the white paper concludes. It does so because it makes, I think, two very debatable assumptions.

First, it assumes that political relationships must be based almost exclusively on linguistic and cultural communities. The proposal for an economic association of two politically independent states then flows from this assumption. The definition of political units and relationships has to take into consideration social and economic interests, as well as those which are linguistic and cultural.

Second, the white paper compounds this error by downplaying the real differences in economic and other interests that exist among Canadians outside Quebec. The current debate over oil and gas pricing is but one example of the significance of these differences. According to the white paper, Ontario and the eight other provinces, with the government of Canada, are expected to resolve any differences among them and come up with a single Canadian position. This position would then have to be further compromised to accommodate Quebec's interests.

Even if our concerns regarding our interests could be overcome, which they cannot, we would have to ask ourselves whether the particular proposals put forward by the white paper make practical sense. In our view, the answer is, again, no, because the white paper sets out a model of economic association that simply will not work. The proposed new joint institutions, such as the community council and the commission on experts, are a recipe for deadlock, indecision and disastrous delay. Policies could not be determined if the two governments could not agree. There would be stalemate in the absence of any authoritative institution to resolve such policy disputes.

The authors of the white paper try to meet this objection by suggesting that in spite of the political and legal equality of the two governments in the economic association, in practice, one or the other would exercise predominant influence on particular issues. Asbestos is put forward as an example of an issue where the Quebec partner would likely predominate, whereas an example of a concern where the Canadian partner would lead is wheat.

Yet, elsewhere in the white paper, the wheat and grain policy is cited as an issue where the present federal system has allegedly discriminated against Quebec's interests. If the white paper's authors believe their own analysis, we must doubt that the Canadian partner would be permitted to have the major influence over wheat policy.

If the potential for conflict is so apparent in an area where the white paper already concedes predominance to one partner, the difficulties that could arise over truly contentious matters such as tariff policy or transportation priorities are obvious. In each case there would be no mechanism to settle any disagreement or to break any deadlock.

The white paper also tries to anticipate this objection with regard to the joint monetary authority. Each partner is represented on the authority in proportion to the relative size of its economy. This would mean the Canadian partner would have majority representation.

According to the white paper, this would pose no problem because the monetary policy interests of Canada and Quebec would not differ to any significant degree. Yet only a few months ago, in its blueprint for the Quebec economy entitled Batir le Quebec (Challenges for Quebec), the Quebec government was highly critical of current federal monetary policy because of its orientation towards the problems of inflation and the exchange rate. We question how the white paper's proposed solution would resolve such differences.

If differences in policy exist now, surely we can expect that they will arise in the future. If so, how long will the Quebec partner be willing to play second fiddle on the monetary authority? If it demands equality, how will policy differences between the partners be settled?

The emotional atmosphere surrounding the political rupture of Canada would ensure that no Ontario government would be inclined to negotiate sovereignty-association. In any event, it would not be in our interests to do so, and the proposal, as it has been put forward before us, simply will not work. On this basis of workability alone, we might rest our case.

However, the white paper appeals to Quebecers to make a critical decision, but in doing so, it does not put all the salient facts before them. It is unclear on far too many issues, it is one-sided on others, and it simply ignores still others.

The white paper claims that federal policy has regularly disregarded Quebec's interests, citing as an example the auto pact. This claim simply ignores the fact that the auto industry was established in Ontario long before the auto pact. Moreover, its concentration in our province had little to do with government policy, federal or provincial. Rather, its presence here is explained by our geographical proximity to the focus of this industry in the United States. There is nothing about sovereignty-association that would change this reality.

The white paper implies that Quebec alone has been the champion of respect for provincial responsibilities within the federal system. One need only consider Ontario's leadership with regard to deconditionalizing several of the major shared-cost programs, and with regard to disentangling federal and provincial responsibilities, to determine that Quebec has rarely, if ever, been alone in this regard. Readers would never know from the white paper about the increase in flexibility the provinces have now obtained, for example, as a result of the Established Programs Financing Act which came into effect in 1977.

The white paper says nothing about how the fiscal transfers from the federal government to Quebec will be replaced. Transfers for this fiscal year to the Quebec government alone are projected to be $4.9 billion. Add to this the estimated $1.6 billion to be paid to Quebec workers by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the $1.4 billion oil parity payments on behalf of Quebec consumers.

Federal funds for these purposes are obviously raised in Quebec as well as in other provinces, but such payments as a whole amount to a net transfer to Quebec of wealth created elsewhere in Canada. We share willingly now because it is our obligation as fellow citizens. We must ask if this obligation would be consistent with the existence of two politically separate countries.

The white paper contrives to picture federalism as an inflexible, uncompromising system of government. However, the distinct Canada and Quebec pension plans, the different approaches Quebec takes to family allowances, the opting-out provisions of the major shared-cost programs, and the federal-Quebec immigration agreement are all examples of how particular Quebec interests have been accommodated within the federal system.

The white paper proposes in one breath that sovereignty-association include broad mobility of goods, capital, labour and services, and in the next breath it speaks of introducing exemptions in such areas as agriculture, investment and categories of labour. If Quebec is to be allowed such exceptions, it must also expect that the Canadian partner will put forward its list of exceptions. We fear the association would soon be one in name only.

Finally, the white paper is highly selective in its use of statistics. For example, it states that Quebec has 0.9 miles of railways per 1,000 population against Ontario's 1.2. The implication is that Quebec has somehow been discriminated against. However, it is easy to find statistics that prove exactly the opposite point.

Consider the fact that Quebec has 4.8 railway workers per 1,000 population, whereas Ontario has only 3.7. Or consider that in Montreal, both major railways maintain commuter services without federal or provincial assistance, whereas in Toronto, the Ontario government has been obliged to finance its own GO commuter bus and rail service. We do not believe it would be logical to conclude from these examples that Confederation has been a bad deal for Ontario, or for Quebec.

In sum, there is nothing compelling in the white paper itself or in the arguments put forward by its proponents that could lead to the conclusion that Ontario would enter into an economic association with a separate Quebec state. It would amount not to a new deal but a bad deal for all.

This government is convinced we can achieve within federalism new and fair arrangements. This is the only constructive course for Canada. This conviction is not new to the government of Ontario. In November 1977 the Premier spoke to the members of the Task Force on Canadian Unity here in Toronto. He reasserted to them his view that a wide range of constitutional change was necessary, that what the circumstances demanded was, in effect, a new constitution.

During the past few years, the government of Ontario has specifically supported constitutional change on the following matters:

1. Measures to eliminate barriers to the free flow of people, goods and services across the country so as to enhance the economic ties within Confederation;
2. A more precise definition of the essential powers needed by the federal government to run the national economy;

3. A clearer provincial responsibility in social and cultural matters, such as family law and cable communications;

4. The clarification of provincial ownership and legislative powers over natural resources;

5. A clear commitment to the enlargement of regional economic opportunities as a goal of Confederation and as a test of national policies;

6. Provisions that would allow for more flexibility in certain areas of jurisdiction so that some provinces, such as Quebec, could take on more responsibilities than the others if they so desired;

7. A provincial role in determining where the federal spending power could be exercised in areas directly affecting the provinces;

8. The entrenchment of the fundamental and democratic rights of Canadians;

9. The recognition of English and French as the two official languages of Canada, including the entrenchment of the right to minority language education in all provinces;

10. The reform of existing national institutions, such as the Senate, to allow for the fuller expression of regional or provincial interests;

11. Provincial participation in the appointment of judges to the Supreme Court of Canada, and

12. Patriation of the constitution and a relatively flexible formula for constitutional amendment.

I think this list clearly illustrates the breadth and scope of our commitment, and indicates without reservation that this province believes Canada's constituent parts can be strengthened, while the country as a whole can be kept most effective on those matters of concern to us all.

I think it also needs to be said we are not alone in our commitment to change. Among the constitutional proposals being considered today, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland—indeed, virtually all of the provinces—have put forward their ideas for change to reflect more effectively what each regards as Canada's current needs and interests.

Another significant contribution to the process of constitutional reform has been the report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity. It is inaccurate to state, as does the white paper, that the report has been shelved in the rest of the country. To the contrary, the main tenor of its recommendations is clearly representative of concerns expressed in many parts of Canada and is reflected in the intergovernmental discussions on the constitution.

We recognize fully the task force's conclusion that any renewed federal arrangements must acknowledge both the regional and dual elements in this country's makeup, and must ensure that we have a federal government that can speak for Canada on matters of national importance.

Furthermore, Quebec federalists are now in the process of preparing their proposals for constitutional change in Canada. We look forward to these proposals, as I know all members of the House do, as an important contribution to the debate and as a thoughtful basis for serious discussion.

Our real choice as Canadians, as Jean-Luc Pepin and John Robarts so aptly put it, is a future together. It is the choice of continuing to work together to share a common future within a renewed Canadian federation.

We will not always agree; we will not always have our particular interests realized; we will not always get our own way. But we will continue to experience success and adversity together, sharing our advantages when we have them and being helped by our co-citizens when we are in need.

The challenge we face is working together within Confederation. This is the common purpose we all should now pursue.

Mr. Breithaupt: Point of order, Mr. Speaker: with respect to the tabling of a compendium of background information, as rule 26(c) suggests should occur after the making of a statement, can the minister advise if such a compendium will be tabled? Also, can he say whether or not it will include any results of public opinion polls that have been commissioned with respect to the subject matters referred to in the statement?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding and belief that the compendium required for this statement was the Quebec white paper. That has been sent to all the members of this House. This statement was prepared without the use of any particular public opinion polls.

ALGOMA CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of personal privilege arising from comments made by the Minister of Community and Social Services about my position on the children's aid society strike in Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma. This is a situation that has degenerated to the point where, according to the Sault Ste. Marie Star, the Ontario Humane Society has had to provide food for two neglected children because the CAS could not respond to their needs.

These comments by the minister were quoted in Friday's edition of the Sault Star. In response to a question of a reporter about the position of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 1880, that the minister's advice to the Algoma CAS board to hire outside social workers constitutes strike-breaking, Mr. Norton stated I had taken the same position in this House. He tried to leave the impression I am opposed to his carrying out his mandate to protect the children at risk.

In fact, I have repeatedly stated in this House and elsewhere that the minister and the CAS were not fulfilling their respective mandates during this dispute, which has been prolonged by the use of outside workers. I've stated they should use the funds used for these outside workers to bring about a resolution of the dispute and to get the striking workers back to work, protecting children at risk rather than having their needs met by an agency like the humane society.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I may be incorrect, and if I am, I apologize to the honourable member but my recollection is that the honourable member has, on occasion in this House, made reference to the role of my ministry in providing support assistance to ensure the children's aid society in Algoma was able to minimize the risk to which children might be exposed during the period of this labour dispute.

My comment to the press was simply that if it was felt our actions were inappropriate, there was an alternative open to the honourable member. That was that he could take action to relieve me of my responsibility under the act by introducing a private member's bill that would have that effect in terms of amending the legislation. That comment was made in response, as I recall it, to his raising a very serious concern about the role of the ministry in providing some assistance to this children's aid society so they might meet their obligations.

With respect, specifically, to his reference to the involvement of the humane society, that was a story that was brought to my attention. It seems to me there were some very serious inaccuracies in the specific case to which the newspaper article referred and the one in which the Canadian Union of Public Employees' administrator from that area communicated to me on Friday, I believe, by telegram.

It is my information that during the time the report was made to the children's aid society, on two occasions within one week children's aid society workers visited those children in that family and on neither occasion did they find the children to be in need, abandoned or without food. I believe it was subsequent to those two visits then that the principal of one of the schools in the area—I don't know whether he had feedback indicating those two visits had taken place—but apparently a call was placed to the humane society asking it to check to see whether the pets were being adequately fed. That then gave rise to the visits from the humane society.

But there was not a lack of response from the children's aid society. In fact, I am told there were two visits within less than a week following the report.

SUPERMARKET PRICING AND CHECKOUT SYSTEMS

Mr. Swart: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: It concerns comments made by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations last Friday. I realize he is not in his seat today but I believe it is incumbent upon me to bring it before the House at the first opportunity.

During the question period last Friday, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) said, in referring to Loblaws' instituting universal product codes, that if it were not for his sharing his information with this party in the estimates of his ministry we would never have found out about it. Then he quoted me as saying to him in the justice committee, where his estimates were dealt with, and I quote from last Friday's Instant Hansard: "I thank you very much. I would never have known about it."

Knowing I did not make such a statement, I have examined the justice committee Hansard for the whole period during his estimates. It contains no such remarks by me whatsoever. In view of this and the many previous misstatements made by this minister, I ask the Speaker to direct the minister to withdraw his statement last Friday falsely attributing those comments to me.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sure the honourable minister will be made aware of the member's alleged point of privilege.

An hon. member: Alleged?

Mr. Speaker: I haven't heard the other side of the story.

VISITORS

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw to the attention of honourable members, the presence of two distinguished guests in our gallery. We have the Honourable Howard Pawley, Leader of the Opposition in Manitoba. I don't know whether they're talking to one another, but under the Speaker's gallery is the Very Reverend Donald M. Malinowski who is the member of the Legislative Assembly for Point Douglas in Manitoba.

HYDRO RATES

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. The minister has undoubtedly by now reviewed the Ontario Energy Board report on Ontario Hydro's bulk power rates for 1980. Since the board's function in these matters is advisory rather than regulatory, can the minister tell us whether he has approved these rate increases, which will amount to some 16.4 per cent on January 1?

Hon. Mr. Welch: As the Leader of the Opposition knows, it's not a question as to whether the Minister of Energy approves. The procedures were followed with respect to this whole operation. Ontario Hydro has proceeded accordingly and has accepted the recommendations and the advice of the Ontario Energy Board with respect to some modifications.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since it would appear the minister feels powerless to influence the course of these rates and is quite prepared to accept what the energy board does—although one of his predecessors, the now president of Union Gas, didn't take matters quite so lightly in his term—I would ask specifically whether the minister is prepared to accept the suggestion repeatedly made by the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) of a life-line concept, whereby the people buying a certain basic, fundamental amount of electrical energy for a residence can receive that at the cheapest rate, rather than the way it is now where the first most-fundamental amount is charged at the most expensive rate and the more you use the less you pay per unit.

Is the minister prepared, at the very least, to do that, so the people who need just the fundamental amount of energy this winter will be able to get the cheaper rate and not have to pay at the most expensive rate?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, as I get to the question I was actually asked, I didn't particularly appreciate the comments that were made prior to putting the supplementary question. It would come as no surprise to the Leader of the Opposition to learn the present minister feels the law is to be followed and the system, which of course was introduced by this government as a very important feature for the determination of rates by Hydro, provides for a full review of those particular rates.

Second, the Leader of the Opposition also knows we are awaiting a very complete study on the whole question of the costing of electricity. Once I, as the minister, have that particular study and the recommendations contained therein, I will perhaps be in a much better position to comment on it, along with the suggestions to which the Leader of the Opposition has made reference.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, since part of the report of the Ontario Energy Board is an acceptance of the proposals of Ontario Hydro that henceforth the profits from export sales will not be used to cushion the impact to the consumer, has the government accepted that? Or will the government reconsider it so the Ontario consumers, who have to carry the burden of an excessively large system, will at least have the cushion of the export from that excessive generation capacity?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the government hasn't accepted that particular recommendation as yet, as the honourable member has indicated.

Certainly the whole question of Hydro rates will be the subject matter of fairly intensive review once we have the reports to which I have made reference, and indeed, we have the benefit of the advice and the recommendations that are contained in the report of the Ontario Energy Board.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, surely the minister recalls, does he not, that the rates were rolled back at the behest of a select committee's recommendation made to the Minister of Energy, which is the area referred to by my colleague, the leader of the party. Would he not agree this five to six per cent of the increase is as a result of the end of the Anti-Inflation Board mandate, and that since the Anti-Inflation Board directives have returned $250 million in reduced rates to the consumers it would be reasonable and sensible for him as Minister of Energy to approve only an increase equivalent to the cost of living increase during this last year?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member knows it doesn't lie with the Minister of Energy to make such a decision. The procedures are quite public; Ontario Hydro presents its case, it makes all the evidence available and it is referred to the Ontario Energy Board. Hearings are held and, indeed, as a result, recommendations are made to which Hydro responds. The honourable member knows it was Hydro that accepted the recommendation of the select committee.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the minister indicates the government hasn't come to a conclusion with regard to this aspect of the report on use of the profits for export sale. Will he be making a decision on that within the next few weeks so it can apply for the next calendar year and, it is hoped, cushion the increase to the consumers?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I don't see that as coming as any particular relief as far as the upcoming calendar year is concerned. I indicated to the honourable member that obviously would be taken into account when we review the whole question of the cost of electricity, which, as he knows, is the subject matter of a fairly intensive study.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr. S. Smith: Given that the government of Ontario feels it can't do much about the higher oil prices its Tory friends in Ottawa are landing on us; given that it thinks it can't do anything or doesn't want to do anything about the higher interest rates we are getting from its friends in Ottawa, and given that this is something that is within provincial jurisdiction, why does the minister once again plead impotence on this matter—although he does it very convincingly, I may say—when he knows full well it is within the power of the cabinet in Ontario to make it clear to Ontario Hydro to roll back such an increase if it so desires?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I would think the Leader of the Opposition would share in the pride which is ours in this province to have electrical power provided at cost to the consumers of the province.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Lowest anywhere in North America, with the exception of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If after all these reviews we have established the cost of providing that—and indeed as the leader of this government points out, at the lowest cost of any jurisdiction in North America, with the exception of the province of Quebec—then surely to goodness if there is to be any change in that policy it has to be paid in some way, and obviously the Leader of the Opposition is advocating that we take money from the consolidated revenue fund to subsidize these rates.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is not every day one is given advice on borrowing oneself into bankruptcy from the world's expert on that matter.

Mr. Speaker: Is that your supplementary? Would the Premier agree?

INTERMEDIATE CAPACITY TRANSIT SYSTEM

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask a question of the Premier in the absence of the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow). The Premier may be aware that earlier this month the minister was quoted in the Globe and Mail as saying that more public dollars will have to be invested in the Urban Transportation Development Corporation's intermediate capacity system in order to prevent this experiment from becoming something of a white elephant.

I want to ask first of all whether the province intends to invest any more taxpayers' dollars into the ICTS project in Kingston; and if so, how much does the province intend to so invest?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I was just checking monthly residential electrical bills. Toronto is the lowest on the list, with the exception of—

Mr. Speaker: That wasn't the question.

Ms. Gigantes: What about your rural rates?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will give them to you compared to any rural customers anywhere.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question dealt with transportation.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was really trying to get around to the transportation cost of kilowatts in the rural areas, which compares favourably with any other rural jurisdiction. But I won't do that, Mr. Speaker.

As regards the question on the UTDC, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Transportation and Communications was asked this question a few days ago.

Mr. S. Smith: No, he wasn't.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, he was asked a question similar to it. He was asked about an article that appeared in the Toronto Star. I think that is the article you are referring to.

Mr. S. Smith: That is totally different.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, all right, so it is totally different. I sense a similarity because I was here when the question was asked. If the Leader of the Opposition says it was totally different, I will accept his view that it is totally different. Now I may proceed to answer the question on the assumption that I think there is a great similarity.

The Minister of Transportation and Communications indicated that the UTDC experiment in Kingston had been singularly successful. My recollection is there was an interjection from the member, one behind the Leader of the Opposition, when the Minister of Transportation and Communications reminded him just how effusive he was in his compliments to UTDC when he was visiting Kingston. That is my recollection of the discussion.

The minister pointed out that there were two proposals before the government of Canada: the possibility of having one prototype system in the city of Hamilton and one in the city of Toronto. The minister stated in his answer, which was contained in an interview that I know of—perhaps it was a different one—where he indicated that this participation was necessary for the next phase of the UTDC experimentation.

We have not yet heard from the government of Canada as to whether or not they will participate in either one or both of those particular prototype suggestions. Our hope is that they will, at which time we will be in a position to inform the members of the House just what the financial obligations will be.

It is the expectation that this possible service in Hamilton and/or perhaps in the city of Toronto, would be the kind of experiment that would make it possible for people from other jurisdictions to view this in an operating situation. I would also report to the members of the House, dealing with the Urban Transportation Development Corporation, that the minister raised this with the Japanese officials. They are quite interested and some extensive discussions are going on at this moment between them and UTDC regarding the licensing arrangements in Japan.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, I take it then that more provincial dollars will be put into this. I ask the Premier, is he aware of the fact that when the program was announced in April 1975, it was clearly stated that the last two phases, which are the ones he's talking about now, "are expected to be undertaken by the private sector," and that's a quote from the introductory document at the time? Now the Premier says we are dependent upon federal money if this is to carry on.

The federal government was never asked to make any commitment when this was started, when this was undertaken, when $61 million were invested. Why doesn't the Premier admit right now that he's looking to be bailed out by the federal government, in this instance, in order to make this $61 million waste of money possibly pay off, and to take it off his hands because it is a notorious failure?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition always likes to look at the negative side of just about everything in life. I don't expect him to be any different on this particular issue although I find it totally inconsistent with his speeches about research and development, more Canadian participation and all of the rest of it. His point of view on this is just totally contrary to those things he says on other occasions, as is the case on so many issues.

I would make it quite clear that the initial documents indicated the manufacturing part of this facility will be done by the private sector, and this will still be the case if it does proceed. We do not intend to get into the fabrication of vehicles. We do not intend to get into the manufacturing of the command and control systems or the linear induction motors.

I think it is also fair to state, and I hope even the Leader of the Opposition would understand this, that if there is to be a customer for this, which is an experimental or a prototype situation in this province, the customer is bound to be some level of government. So, if it proceeds, the purchaser obviously is going to be partially the city of Hamilton, partially Metropolitan Toronto, and we anticipate, if it does go ahead, the government of Canada will see its way clear to participating in it.

The manufacturing will be done by the private sector, but quite obviously, the public sector has to be involved because it is the public sector that will be the purchaser.

Mr. Cunningham: I would like to ask the Premier if he is in a position to report to the House about the prospective customers, say, in North America alone, to which the UTDC might sell their wares. Are we successful at this point in any contracts? What is going on? Is there any status report? Are we selling anything?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be more appropriate for the Minister of Transportation and Communications to answer that question. I will give my own guess. There have been representatives from a number of communities who have been to the Kingston site, to look at the hardware, to look at how the system functions.

I think it is fair to state there is some genuine interest. I think it is important to realize and this is why the ministry is involved in discussions with the government of Canada, that a lot of potential purchasers are looking to see an operating system functioning. This is why the next phase is to be some development, probably in Hamilton, perhaps even in Metropolitan Toronto, where the system can be installed and operated and, in this way, to demonstrate its potential to possible purchasers.

I happen to know there is a great deal of interest, not only in the United States, but elsewhere. My guess is, if there is an interest in Japan it will not be in the export of hardware.

Quite obviously, it would be done by way of a licensing agreement and the fabrication of the vehicles would be done, as is the case in so many other situations, in the jurisdiction where the system is being purchased. But even if it is only the export of the technology or by way of licensing, this, in turn, will repay certain dividends to the people of this province. I would think, as is not now the attitude of the members opposite, they really should be somewhat excited and interested in the potential of this experiment.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary: Can the Premier tell us who, specifically, in any elected office in Metropolitan Toronto has actually shown an interest in this system? Or is Metropolitan Toronto going to be persuaded, for the interests of the government, to go along with the system or to buy a system in which all elected representatives I have talked to have said they are not interested?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't think there has been any formal discussion. There have been informal discussions I know with some members of the TTC. They are aware of it. They know the possible location of this, but we are not moving ahead with it until we get some answer from Ottawa as to whether they will share in this or not. The community that has expressed an interest and a fairly committed interest—in fact, it has gone a fair piece down the road—is the city of Hamilton.

If the government of Canada says it can only fund one, since the city of Hamilton is there and wants it done, then that is probably the place where it will happen. I would just hope some consideration would be given to having it done in both places, but it may be Hamilton and not Metropolitan Toronto.

PQ WHITE PAPER

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs arising out of his statement today on the question of sovereignty-association. I would welcome the fact that the minister took a rather softer tone than the Premier's because he is undoubtedly aware of the very negative reaction in Quebec to the original statement three weeks ago.

Could the minister say what new proposals the government intends to make that may be attractive to Quebecers in the current constitutional debate and thereby aid the chance they will vote for federalism in the referendum when it comes up in the new year?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think this statement outlines about 12 of the positions we have taken. Some of them have nearly reached fruition in the continuing committee of ministers; others are still in the discussion stages. The itemizing of them here is meant to show to the people of Quebec we do believe in a renewed federalism and that there are within these 12 items, and certainly others we are willing to look at, the opportunity to renew the constitution.

They are spelled out here. As I say here, the next step is probably to find out what position is put forward by the committee that will be opposing a "yes" vote in the referendum. They will be putting out a statement soon. When we see what they are putting forward, we will then be able to offer some comments on those particular positions and see how they mesh with the particular position we have put here.

I should say there is no inconsistency between my statement and the statement issued by the Premier. I think the Premier in his statement indicated his initial response was to set out very clearly no negotiation of sovereignty-association and some of the dire effects of it. I think it was universally hailed across this province as a strong statement, expressing the wishes of, I would say, about 90 per cent of the people of Ontario including all parties in this House which I heard applaud it very strongly. I think that is a very significant thing.

This statement today is a follow-up in more specific terms of what we really meant. I want to stress to my friend there is no inconsistency between these two statements at all.

Mr. Cassidy: Since members of this party want to make it very clear we don't believe either that the people of this province would ever agree to sovereignty-association as a new basis for the country, but since we also feel it's important to talk in a civilized and positive tone with the people of Quebec, could the minister say whether the government intends to make some new proposals with relation to recognizing the linguistic and cultural community in Quebec? Would he not agree that Ontario should be making positive proposals in that particular direction, rather than simply waiting to react to the statements, first, by the Parti Quebecois and then, subsequently, by the "no" committee in a few weeks' time?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Without getting into a long discussion on all the proposals, let me just give the member one example. We have made positive proposals. Well over a year and a half ago or perhaps even two years ago, the Premier indicated this province was in favour of a constitutional amendment to guarantee minority language rights in education. We have again emphasized that in this paper. We have stressed it at various meetings. To this date, that proposal has been, I think on all occasions, opposed by the present government of Quebec. It has been opposed, as they opposed entrenchment as proposed by the federal government in Bill C-60, as I recall. As one example, we have very consistently and positively put forward that as something that should be in a new constitution, something which we think would benefit the people of Quebec, Ontario and all of Canada.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Is it any wonder that the province of Quebec reacted the way they did, with respect to the protection of language rights, when they see what you have done in places like Penetang?

Hon. Mr. Wells: That really is a very unfair question because I want to tell the honourable member that the ministers of education—the council of ministers—as part of the minority language education debate, were asked to do a survey across Canada of minority language education in all the provinces. That survey was done and presented to all the first ministers.

That report showed that in Ontario practically everyone who declared French as his mother tongue and wanted French-language education, was getting it, so much so that I recall—and I hope I am not breaking a confidence—the Premier of Quebec looked at it and said, "I didn't realize this was happening in Ontario."

We said, "We told you this, and we have told you this many times, and we have told the people of Quebec."

"Well," he said, "we didn't really believe it."

The fact is that as far as Penetang and other places are concerned, this province guarantees one's schooling in French if it is a minority language, is one's mother tongue, and there are 20 or more pupils in secondary school. The law in this province guarantees one will get that education.

Mr. Sweeney: In an English-language school.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It guarantees one will get that education. I suggest that we all recognize the concern and certainly I recognize very deeply the concern that some have for an individual building. At some times, such as in Essex, there is a need for the building; in others the need is for a viable French-language school entity. That is what the possibilities are.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: Could the minister tell us what communication, if any, his office has had with the Leader of the Opposition in Quebec in the formulation of his position? Second, can we expect a public statement once that position is announced?

Hon. Mr. Wells: We have regular ongoing discussions with staff who are working to develop the positions of the umbrella group, the "vote no" group, in Quebec. As soon as their paper is presented we will be able to assess it, and then we will be able to comment on it.

It is very difficult to comment on something when you don't know what the details of it will be, but I must say they have shown great interest in both reports of the Ontario advisory committee; they found those reports were very helpful. I think the publication of what comes out of Quebec is going to be very helpful, but we must wait for it and then we will comment on it.

Mr. Cassidy: Final supplementary: Since the government is keeping itself in contact with the work done by the committees on both sides in Quebec, and since some members over here are doing the same thing as well, would the government not now commit itself to agree to the proposals that have come from the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) and the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick)? Would the government agree that before Christmas this House will establish a small select committee which will inquire publicly into the questions around the future of the country, and the constitutional proposals now on the table, so that we can bring the public into our confidence in this discussion in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think we debated this during private members' hour at one point, and I think the pros and cons have been put forward on this. I think we have to have a debate in this House, but it seemed to be the agreement that, because the referendum is now going to be held in June, the time for that debate will probably be early in the new session.

I want to reiterate that the facilities that were available before to all of us are still available. Certainly the staff of my ministry and any of the advisory committee, or anyone else, is available to help any caucus group which wishes to study and have available any of the papers that are available on the constitution, the Quebec white paper, or the referendum. Everything is available, and they will be glad to help the honourable members in carrying out their own studies over the next couple of months.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. In view of the commitment which was reiterated by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) last week that the Niagara Escarpment is a unique area and that we should have no fear, the area will be preserved, can the Premier explain why no money has been spent by the government this year to acquire land in the escarpment area? Could he say how the escarpment commission can continue to refuse development permits if it has no funds to acquire lands which are of high priority?

Hon. Mr. Davis: My memory, once again, is subject to correction, but I think a question similar to that was asked last Thursday or Friday. I think the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development gave—if not the honourable member, some member of his caucus—an answer to that particular question. If the member will review Hansard he will find it there.

However, I will ask the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) to give the members of the House a bit of an update on the numbers of acres acquired, et cetera. I think it should also be pointed out to the leader of the New Democratic Party that to a certain extent purchases relate to the commission's final report. That report is now final, except that it is subject to the hearings going on.

I can only repeat what the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development said; we intend to move ahead with certain property acquisitions. I think it is also fair to state that we have various priorities in front of us when we have to find moneys to allocate for the new hospital the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) is announcing in Mississauga and the potential of an addition to the Peel Memorial Hospital in Brampton—all of those other things that the honourable member likes to talk about, depending on just which subject interests him on a particular day. Our task over here is to sort out the priorities and I think it's fair to state that we cannot afford to do all of these things at the same time.

I'm delighted to see the leader of the New Democratic Party has broadened his vision, even modestly, from the provision of medical services to the acquisition of land in the escarpment commission area.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the Niagara Escarpment Commission states in its plan proposals that action is needed on priority areas in Tobermory by the time that the official plan or review process or the hearings have been completed; and since there's now an application by Angus Ralph pending before the escarpment commission to start building a marina in the south end of Russel Island near Tobermory—in the number one priority area for acquisition as laid out by the escarpment commission—will the Premier undertake that the funds be provided for that acquisition this year rather than putting the commission into a position where it has no choice but to agree to that development?

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, the commission does have a choice. The leader of the New Democratic Party may not understand that, but the commission does have a choice. I think what the commission is saying is that they feel it is unfair—and I happen to agree with this—to say to the owner of a parcel of land that could be used for the public domain that we can't buy it yet, but we won't issue a permit. This is where it is always very difficult to reconcile the public interest with the private interest.

I would say, once again, to the leader of the New Democratic Party that we do not have sufficient capital moneys to do all of the things that are essential. I cannot give a commitment there will be moneys for this particular acquisition, except to say, as the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development said to him on either Thursday or Friday in answer to a similar question, "There will be capital funds in 1980-81." Exactly where they will be spent in the commission area, I can't tell the honourable member.

I want to reiterate, though, to that very distinguished member, that I'm delighted to hear him talk about land acquisition. We intend to build a few hospitals. When we allocate money for hospitals I don't want him coming back here saying we should have spent it in the Niagara Escarpment Commission area.

Mr. Cassidy: Final supplementary: Bearing in mind that only $12,000 was spent on land acquisition in the escarpment last year and that not a nickel has been spent this year; and bearing in mind that at that rate it would take about 35,000 years for the commission to acquire the land that has been recommended in this plan; would the Premier not agree that the lack of funds for the commission threatens the escarpment plan, either because priority areas will be lost to development, or because public support of the plan will be irretrievably undermined because of the impact on land owners who can neither develop their land nor sell priority-area land to the commission?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Once again, I am delighted today: the leader of the New Democratic Party actually recognizes there are certain individual rights in land. I find that a refreshing change.

I am informed there is actually in this year's budget $1 million allocated for purchases within the escarpment area. My guess is some of that will be spent before the end of the fiscal year. I can assure the leader of the New Democratic Party we will not be waiting the number of years he suggests. He won't be around to make that determination and neither shall I.

I would just reiterate, when his party keeps pressing us for the expenditure of public funds for land acquisition in the Niagara Escarpment initiated by this government, we will do a fair amount. But we cannot do that and all of the other things those members mention to us seven days a week. I just hope the next time they are talking to a health group they will remind them they have been pressing us to spend money on land in the escarpment area at the same time as they are trying to tell them they are not getting enough for their hospitals.

Mr. Cassidy: A point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Which one of your privileges is being abrogated?

Mr. Cassidy: My privilege to have correct information from the government, Mr. Speaker. Only $36,000 was allocated for land acquisition in the estimates for the Ministry of Natural Resources this year.

GROUP HOME FUNDING

Mr. G. I. Miller: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services in regard to the Haldimand Association for the Mentally Retarded, which is trying to provide a group home in the town of Dunnville for mentally retarded adults.

In view of the fact the association has a piece of property that is properly zoned and was approved by the Ontario Municipal Board in July 1979, and in view of the fact that the ministry indicated funding would be available in 1978, will the minister now give consideration to providing funding to that group home in Haldimand?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think it would be more correct to say the society has two properties, both of which are properly zoned, on one of which there is presently a residence which would, I believe, be zoned for occupancy by up to five adults. On the other there is no structure at the present time, but it is zoned such that it could be, if transferred into the association's ownership, a site for building a group home.

I have indicated to the members of that association and also, I believe, to the municipal representatives with whom I met a couple of weeks ago, together with the honourable member, that I would welcome a proposal from the association for the mentally retarded with respect to the second piece of property. If they wish to make such a proposal, the procedure for doing that involves going to the district working group. I have indicated to them there would not be money in our budget this year, but if they were to proceed immediately through the district working group we would be able to consider their application in establishing the priorities for next year's expenditures.

In the meantime, I recognize they do have a property which is appropriately zoned now for five adults and there is nothing I could do to change their intention one way or the other with respect to whether they would proceed with that. I understand they have no legal restrictions upon their proceeding with that one immediately.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister is aware that plans are going ahead for the home despite objections from the town of Dunnville and the region? I think the community would work more close together if funding was made available. Does the minister not agree?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the question was.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES DISPUTE

Mr. Mackenzie: I have a question for the Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet.

In view of the fact that employees of the Ministry of Correctional Services have been requesting a separate bargaining unit category for at least five years, a request backed by Judge Shapiro in the Royal Commission on the Toronto Jail and Custodial Services, can the minister consider a very positive and much appreciated move to improve the labour relations climate by permitting the establishment of a separate bargaining category for these employees?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, we have had representation from the union over the years to have a separate category for correctional officers. This has been resisted. The main reason we have resisted it is that over that period of time we have had other requests to set up categories for what might have been smaller groups. We feel there would be a proliferation of the bargaining system if we set up a group for everyone who asked for it.

Judge Shapiro, in his remarks to the royal commission on the Toronto jail, did mention this subject. He did say in his report they should be granted a separate category, if that's what is necessary to set up a different pay scale for them. We don't feel it's necessary to have a separate group in order to have a separate pay scale. In fact, in some small way we have recognized that in previous settlements.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: given the total agreement with the workers involved, the lack of any real affinity between the hospital workers and the correctional workers in that unit and the fact that a separation does exist in many other jurisdictions, does the minister not understand the depth of feeling of those involved and the merit of the request to defuse a touchy situation? If he does understand that—and I think the minister may—is this ministry and this government deliberately inviting a strike by these public service workers?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The honourable member knows full well we're not inviting any illegal strike whatsoever. I think I've given him the reasons. There are many groups within the civil service which could ask for special recognition for a special group. We did agree to eight categories some three years ago. It has worked well.

The main thrust seems to be that there is not parity with either Ontario Provincial Police officers or federal corrections people. We recognize that. We are prepared to consider that in our negotiations this year. We feel the major request for the union can be addressed in the negotiations.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, within the bargaining unit there are some 9,000 individuals and when they go to the bargaining table, or even before they go to the bargaining table, they feel their views are submerged in the total process. Considering the fact this involves about 3,000 people, not 400 or 500, would the minister not consider it would be wise to change the decision of the cabinet? I detected in the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker) a little softening of attitude in this regarding an earlier question. I was wondering whether his counsel would be heeded in this regard and if he would change that circumstance and avoid what is going to be a pretty catastrophic situation in the province if they do decide to go on strike.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I think the honourable member fails to realize there are a lot of other groups with large segments to them. One in particular, for instance, would be the nurses who are in a category of 4,000 and they make up half the category. We have all kinds of those groups within the civil service. We're trying to stick to the eight categories. That doesn't stop us from recognizing special interests within that group.

JUNIOR HOCKEY COMMITMENT

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Leader of the Opposition raised questions about Canada's representation in the forthcoming world junior ice hockey championships in Finland.

The commitment to participate in those championships is made by the national body for hockey, the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association. A request for funding was submitted by that organization to the federal government agency responsible for sport—namely, Sport Canada. Sport Canada declined to provide the funding.

As many honourable members know, there is a division of jurisdiction between the government of Canada and provincial governments on the matter of supporting participation in international sport. Simply stated, Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada and national sports organizations have exclusive responsibility for Canadian representation in world championship events, regardless of the province of origin of the participants.

Canada's representative in the forthcoming junior world championship is the Peterborough Petes Hockey Club. The Petes roster will be supplemented by eight additional players from other Ontario teams. In Finland, however, the Petes will play as a Canadian team, not as an Ontario team nor as a Peterborough team.

Some people, no doubt, will argue that since Loto Canada has been transferred to the provinces Ontario has both the obligation and the dollars to pay for international representation in sport. No such proposals for such a realignment have been made nor, as far as I know, is one being contemplated.

Let me point out, however, that the federal-provincial agreement on Loto Canada calls for the return of $24 million a year to the federal government, half of which I understand, will go to sports.

I've been advised the Peterborough hockey organization is highly committed to attending these championships. Therefore, the possibility of Canada being relegated to the second division in international junior hockey for failing to field a team is not present.

Many honourable members will be aware that the matter of whether Hockey Canada or the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association represents Canadian interests in international hockey is not at all clear. The controversy over the funding for these championships is probably more a product of the conflicts and the squabbling among these two organizations and the federal government than it is a matter of the availability of funds.

The commitment to participate in this tournament was made by the CAHA, the national body responsible for hockey. Funding for world championships is, as I have indicated, traditionally a function of the government of Canada and national sports organizations. Given those two facts, I do not believe an intercession by the provincial government at this time would serve any useful purpose.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: In view of the fact the morning news seemed to imply the matter was being settled—and, perhaps, as we stand here now it has been settled, I don't know—could the minister, at the very least, get hold of his federal counterpart and make darned certain that in one way or another that group of Ontario boys gets over to Finland to represent this country and not make Canada the laughing-stock of international hockey dealings? Whoever may be at fault in the matter, let the government offer them money if it has to but in one way or another would the minister please get together with his kissing cousins in Ottawa and make sure we get a team there?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I'd hate to think of Mr. Paproski as a kissing cousin. I would like to assure the Leader of the Opposition however, that I did have a long talk with Mr. Paproski on Saturday. I've been in touch with some people in Peterborough and in all likelihood the matter will be resolved and Canada will be represented by the team from Peterborough, augmented by others, and I do hope we'll win the championship.

Mr. Hennessy: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Peterborough Petes. I think Ontario should have representation. I've been in hockey quite a few years myself.

Mr. Speaker: Would any other member like to give his support?

DREE AGREEMENT

Mr. Eakins: My question is of the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker. Some weeks ago he mentioned an agreement was imminent within a few days between the federal and provincial governments in regard to DREE funding. Could he bring us up to date as to whether that agreement is near completion? Will he soon have some information for the people in the Muskoka, Victoria-Haliburton and Peterborough areas?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I made a point during the first ministers' meeting in Ottawa to see the minister responsible for DREE, the Honourable Elmer MacKay, to follow up the very points the member is discussing. He assures me it is going through the process of approval and I will have the document approved to sign in the substance originally agreed to. However, that does not, so far, include the member's riding or mine.

A recent letter from him implied that did not prevent a second or northern agreement including those areas. He simply said the eastern Ontario agreement would not.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: In view of the fact that agreements have recently been signed with British Columbia and Alberta for $50 million and Manitoba and Quebec why is it so difficult for Ontario to get an agreement with the federal people? Does the minister not have the power and the clout with them that he thought he had?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that progress has been made through the bureaucratic hurdles the present government has inherited from the previous one.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE EDUCATION

Mr. Samis: Since the Penetang question is no longer merely a regional or provincial question, but a symbolic issue; and since Premier Levesque has used the Penetang situation to attack the Premier's position in the original white paper, doesn't the Premier think it would be an act of goodwill, a demonstration of Ontario's interest in preserving national unity and a positive contribution to the upcoming referendum if his government were to resolve the matter once and for all by granting the Franco-Ontarians the type of school they are asking for, the type of school they deserve, realizing it is more than a question of just bricks and mortar?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to what extent Mr. Levesque has used that particular situation—

Mr. Samis: In the National Assembly.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, I stayed so the honourable member could ask the question. He very politely sent me a note. I am staying to answer it, so would the honourable member please let me answer without interrupting? The member put in a fair amount of editorial comment. He didn't ask a straight question. I think I am permitted to give a little editorial comment in reply. Is that not fair? Just so we play by the same ground rules.

Mr. Speaker: Get back to the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is fair to state, going back historically, that the position of the government of Quebec has been they really have no concern and they don't think it is appropriate for them to comment on what policies exist in the field of education outside Quebec. If Mr. Levesque at this moment is trying to exploit the Penetanguishene situation, then it is totally inconsistent with the point of view his government has taken on the question of educational language rights to date in this discussion.

I raised it with him, with respect to the policy in Quebec. As the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) stated—and he was quite right and he was not betraying any confidences—I was at the same meeting where the Premier of Quebec was surprised when he discovered that of the 5.6 per cent of the youngsters in this province who declare French as their mother tongue, 5.4 per cent are getting their education in the French language.

When one looks at Penetang, Mr. Speaker, you have to recognize there is another issue as well; that is the position of the Simcoe county board; the feelings of the people in Penetanguishene. A large number of the francophones in Penetanguishene did not want to have a separate school entity, separate and apart from the existing facility. I think it is important for the Premier of Quebec, if he understands what the debate is about, that he understands we are not debating the provision of French-language education.

We are faced with a situation where we have a relatively new school plant. I was there on one occasion to assist in its opening. We have a declining enrolment. The number of youngsters in Penetanguishene—a tiny township which happened to funnel their youngsters into the Penetang high school—is diminishing. We have a situation where within four to five years, if there was a new separate individual school, there would be perhaps a 50 to 60 per cent attendance and there would be citizens in that community saying, "What are you doing with the other 50 per cent of a relatively new high school facility?"

There would be the problem of the combination of courses that are available. The proposal from the ministry is that they can have a principal whose language obviously would be French and a totally French-language program in the same physical plant.

When one gets right down to it, Mr. Speaker—and this is something perhaps the member for Cornwall doesn't understand—one is talking about the ambience, one is talking about the milieu, if that is the terminology, one is also talking in terms of that community of probably a 40- to 50-minute period in the school day, which would be the lunch period when the youngsters wouldn't be part of that French-language milieu.

I've got news for the member. I know that community fairly well. They will go to the same pop stands after school and to the same social areas where young people congregate. There is less than unanimity on the matter. It is quite different from some other communities. A very substantial number of the francophones in Penetanguishene did not see the need for, nor do they support a separate school facility.

The combination makes sense. I think it would be unwise of the Premier of Quebec, to comment without understanding the realities of the situation, without understanding the practical implications and without his acknowledging that our legislation in terms of its impact on francophone youngsters in this province is far more positive than their legislation in Quebec.

We don't ask anyone in Penetanguishene who wants to take a course in the French language: "Where were you born? What generation are you?" The member won't find that to be the case under the law in Quebec.

Mr. Samis: Since the so-called solution proposed by the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) has been rejected by every francophone and French-Canadian group in Canada and since the positive action committee is so upset by the decision that the president, Alex K. Paterson, and Storrs McCaul felt it necessary to issue a public letter to La Presse last Friday asking this government to change its position on Penetanguishene, could I ask the Premier what role he intends to play in the upcoming referendum debate and how he intends to be accepted with credibility by the French-speaking, non-separatist people of Quebec if his government can't resolve this problem in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it fair to state we will not always be able to solve every problem in this province. If the member for Cornwall is suggesting the point of view as expressed by this—

Mr. Warner: You should be solving problems that the Minister of Education creates.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This is a subject the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere does not understand. Why doesn't he let me debate it with his colleagues?

Mr. Warner: I understand it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere is wasting time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is fair to state, when it comes to the question of education, this province can take a position relative to the separatist forces in Quebec whereby our legislation will stand the light of day. The member can shake his head as much as he wants. If he compares their legislation to our legislation, he will see what we have accomplished here. I don't care what somebody has written by way of a letter.

I happen to know the situation in Penetanguishene fairly well. The youngsters came up to my cottage. They drove up in a relatively new Grew boat made in Penetanguishene. They were a great group of young people. Three of the leaders of the group happened to come from other than Penetanguishene. I have to tell the member that part of my responsibility certainly is this province's general perception in Quebec, but I would say with respect that they understand the actual facts in Penetanguishene when they understand we are committed to the provision of French-language education. We are prepared to entrench it or enshrine it in the constitution, which the Parti Quebecois is not prepared to do.

I just ask the member to make an objective evaluation if he can; sort himself out from his political philosophy which he is attempting to exploit on this particular issue.

COPIES OF STATEMENTS

Mr. McCaffrey: I will be brief about this. Being one who complained about this matter in the past on two occasions, I want to thank publicly the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs for having the courtesy to provide all members with a copy of the statement on the PQ white paper.

UNIVERSITY RESEARCH

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities. I would have liked the Minister of the Environment to be here as well because it is a related question.

Is the minister aware of the International Joint Commission Science Advisory Board public seminar held on November 7, 1979, here in Toronto entitled Research in Universities in the United States and Canada Committed to Cleaning up the Great Lakes? Is she aware also that in the United States in the Great Lakes basin some $14 million was given to colleges and universities for this kind of research and that on our side, particularly in Ontario and those colleges close to the Great Lakes basin, the commitment was some $150,000?

The question I would like to raise is, was there anyone from the Ministry of Colleges and Universities at this seminar? Or maybe she could ask the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) if there was any attendance there from his ministry to bring themselves up to date on research in universities as it relates to the cleaning up of the Great Lakes.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am aware such a program was held in Toronto. It was my understanding there were representatives there from the Ministry of the Environment. I understand there were also some staff members of one or two universities in this area who attended that conference. But I would remind the honourable member the funding of universities in Ontario is quite different from the funding of any portion of university activity in the United States. Indeed, instead of $14 million, the universities of this province last year were provided with $789 million by Ontario.

A significant portion of that is to encompass the role of the universities in their research capacity on behalf of the community and the province in which they exist. We do not direct funds specifically to universities within this province except on contractual arrangements with certain ministries. They carry out basic research on the basis of the funding which is provided to them by the Ministry of Colleges and Universities.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: We happen to be situated in that part of the Great Lakes basin where there seems to be a great deal of polluting of the environment—witness that one can eat the fish that's caught in Lake Erie, but not the fish that's caught in Lake Ontario. Something is happening at Niagara. I wonder if there shouldn't be a commitment in our universities because of this grave problem as it relates to the cleaning up of the Great Lakes? Would it be beyond the minister's jurisdiction to get them to upgrade their research capability in helping clean up the Great Lakes?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure those researchers in biology—specifically in the water biology area—have as grave a concern as the honourable member does in terms of this activity and many of them are carrying out research. That research is supported through the funding provided by this government to the universities in this province.

In addition, I am aware there are contracts which are let by the ministries of Natural Resources and the Environment to specific researchers for specific purposes. I am sure that commitment will be carried out this year because I know the university community is as concerned about the quality of the water on the Great Lakes as is the provincial government.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

Mr. Wildman: I have a question of the Attorney General: In view of the major disruptions that resulted from the train accident in Mississauga and the collision involving a tanker truck carrying sulphuric acid near Serpent River over the weekend, and following on the statements made by the minister and his colleagues the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) in this House, can the minister inform us who is the owner or person in control of the radioactive waste sulphuric acid which is being trucked from Eldorado in Port Hope to Rio Algom in Elliot Lake?

Can the minister assure the House that the provincial government and all municipalities between Port Hope and Elliot Lake are notified of the route, amount and nature of cargo, and departure and arrival times of each shipment of this nuclear waste by the firm responsible?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'll certainly be happy to discuss this question with the Minister of the Environment and with the Minister of Transportation and Communications. They have I think the fundamental responsibility regarding the honourable member's concerns. I will convey his concerns to both of my colleagues in that respect.

Mr. Speaker: Time for oral questions has expired.

DEATH OF HENRY JACKMAN

Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, just before the orders of the day, I wish to pay tribute to a most distinguished Canadian, Henry Rutherford Jackman, QC. Mr. Jackman died last Thursday and was taken to his final resting place from Metropolitan United Church at noon today.

[3:30]

A lifelong citizen of this province, Harry Jackman, as he was known to his friends, gave tirelessly of himself to his church, his community, to the arts and to government. His philanthropies were legion.

One gift which drew wide attention and acclaim was his acquisition in 1969 of an equestrian statue of King Edward VII from the government of India. At considerable personal expense, he arranged to have the five-ton statue transported from India to Toronto, where he presented it to the province of Ontario. It now stands overlooking the north façade of the Parliament Building as an historic reminder that it was Edward VII, as Prince of Wales, who, when in Toronto in 1860, dedicated Queen's Park to his mother, Queen Victoria.

Mr. Jackman also presented a bronze statue of Winston Churchill to the city of Toronto and this statue can be seen in Nathan Phillips Square.

At the time of his death he was finalizing arrangements to erect a sculptural tribute to the Canadian airmen of both World Wars. This undertaking was inspired by Air Marshal Billy Bishop, Canada's greatest air ace in the First World War. Mr. Jackman believed in the recognition of heroes as an important example for young Canadians.

Born on November 5, 1900, in a house on Tranby Avenue in Toronto's old Yorkville area, Mr. Jackman was the only son of Henry B. and Sarah Anne Rutherford Jackman. Such Toronto streets as Jackman Avenue, Bowden and Playter Boulevard are named for members of his family. His early education was received at Huron Street and Rosedale Public Schools and the University of Toronto Schools. At the age of 17 his education was interrupted for a year when he joined the Royal Air Force. He was a pilot in training at the conclusion of the First World War.

Mr. Jackman continued his education at the University of Toronto and Osseode Hall Law School and, later, Harvard Business School. He was called to the bar in 1924. Commencing his business career in Toronto with Dominion Securities he moved to Traders Finance. As his financial interests broadened, he acquired an interest in a number of financial corporations. Because of his wise perception of business and people and his boundless energy, he was invited to sit with numerous boards and advisory bodies during his lifetime.

In addition to being an honorary director of the Bank of Nova Scotia, at the time of his death Mr. Jackman was president of the Dominion and Anglo Investment Corporation Limited; director of the Economic Investment Trust Limited; honorary chairman of the Empire Life Insurance Company; past-chairman of Burns Food Limited; past-president of the Debenture and Securities Corporation of Canada; and honorary director of the Canadian International Investment Trust Limited, E-L Financial Corporation, the Casualty Company of Canada Limited and of the Harvard University Association in Canada. There were a number of other corporations with which he had been associated over the years.

Mr. Jackman believed in public service and gave it. President of the Rosedale Riding Conservative Association from 1936 to 1938, he was elected member of Parliament for Rosedale in 1940, retiring in 1949. He was a founder and life member of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association and a member of the national executive committee of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs. He was an officer of the Order of Canada, an honour bestowed in recognition of his public service. He was a Knight of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem and Knight Grand Cross of the Order of St. Lazarus of Jerusalem. As well, he was a trustee and past president of the Art Gallery of Ontario, a director of the Mendelssohn Choir and had served as chairman of the national finance committee for the Canadian Red Cross.

Internationally, he was a benefactor to certain organizations in the United States and Great Britain. For instance, he established a chair in church history for St. Andrew's University in St. Andrew's, Scotland, and assisted with the restoration of Grey Friars Abbey at Canterbury Cathedral.

Mr. Jackson had a lifelong interest in agriculture and owned a beef farm complex near Nobleton. He was among the first to import Charolais stock from France during the 1960s, expending considerable time and energy on herd improvement.

Within the confines of his own family, Harry Jackman has been heard to remark that many men can make fortunes, but few give them away. Mr. Jackman gave away several fortunes in his lifetime to charities and worthy causes too numerous to count. Latterly, he established the Jackman Foundation as a further means of assisting charitable organizations.

When Metropolitan United Church suffered a disastrous fire in January of 1928, Mr. Jackman gave strong leadership in raising the necessary funding for its restoration and endowment. He continued to work for that church and for the United Church of Canada until his death.

I have given a very brief outline of the life and works of a man who has been an outstanding citizen of Ontario. For all his success, Harry Jackman retained a personal modesty. His good deeds were his personal demonstration of his beliefs.

I believe members of this Legislature will wish to join with me in extending to Mrs. Jackman and members of her family our deepest sympathy at their loss.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the answers to questions 277 to 280, 309, 351, 353, and interim answers to questions 350 and 352 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 4839.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF TREASURY AND ECONOMICS

Mr. Chairman: As is the custom, there are usually leadoff statements. Does the minister have an opening statement?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Conway: Where have you been the last 10 days?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have been in hospital.

Mr. Peterson: Do you want to adjourn right now?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Why don't you just avoid my statement by passing my estimates and let me go back?

I would like to open by making a statement, if I may, before we begin the detailed discussion of my estimates. This is the second time I have had the honour to be presenting Treasury's estimates. I also understand that later we will be considering the supplementary estimates for the Employment Development Fund.

As you know, the activities of this ministry touch upon a great many areas. However, I will confine these introductory remarks to a few highlights of the province's economic and fiscal policies. In particular, I would like to review the progress we have made in implementing some of the major parts of the 1979 budget and briefly discuss the current economic climate.

The main thrust of the 1979 budget was to create jobs in the private sector. We undertook a number of specific actions designed to accomplish this, including the elimination of succession duties, new and extended sales tax exemptions for the hospitality industry and modification of the mining and capital taxes.

We also undertook two major initiatives. These were the creation of the Employment Development Fund and the small business development corporations legislation. The Employment Development Fund was established to make sure that Ontario received its fair share of the new investment for which other jurisdictions outside Canada are so aggressively competing. The fund has now been in operation for some months and based on our experience to date I am satisfied we are on the right track in creating this new program.

As you know, the fund is administered by the employment development board, which is chaired by myself. The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) is the vice-chairman, and the other member of the board is the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle). The bulk of the staff work is done within the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, with the exception of applications from the food-processing industry which are handled by the Ministry of Agriculture and Food before they are considered by the board.

There are really two parts to the fund. One relates the pulp and paper industry and the other relates primarily to manufacturing. With respect to pulp and paper, we are now heavily immersed in the process of negotiating agreements which will affect virtually all of the mills in Ontario. The agreements will result in major investments in both modernization and pollution control systems. I should emphasize that in all cases the lion's share of investment will be made by the corporations themselves.

We are also involved in discussions with the federal government, which has agreed in principle to pick up about one third of the government's share of these investments.

Overall, Mr. Chairman, I expect that our contribution—which we still estimate to be some $100 million—will generate investment worth over $1 billion. This will provide lasting employment for thousands of workers and ensure continuing prosperity for many communities.

With respect to the manufacturing side, the board has reviewed a very large number of cases and has approved over 30 proposals. We examine applications from the point of view of a number of criteria, including job creation, potential for export development and import replacement, the creation of new technology and the stimulation of key industries and regions.

We also give preference to Canadian-owned companies. Where they are not 100 per cent Canadian owned, we look for a number of things before accepting an application, including a strong Canadian research and development commitment; an independent purchasing policy and global export mandate; independent Canadian management; and a commitment for reinvestment in Ontario. Naturally these criteria, where relevant, apply to Canadian-owned companies as well.

Another and obviously the most important consideration is whether or not the project would proceed without incentives provided through the Employment Development Fund. I'm confident that we've created an effective, hard-nosed operation which is making a genuine contribution to the economic future of our province. As many applicants who have been turned down can testify, this is not an easy giveaway program.

Mr. Chairman, the members may wish to go into further detail on the operation of the EDF and I look forward to receiving their comments and suggestions.

I would like to turn briefly to the small business development or corporations legislation. You are aware that the grants paid under this program will come under the supplementary estimates for the employment development program. I'm sure most of you know the basic provisions of the SBDC legislation but let me refresh your memory as to how it all works.

The act provides for registration with the Ministry of Revenue of small business development corporations. Individual investors in an SBDC receive a grant equal to 30 per cent of the initial investment. Corporate investors receive a credit against their Ontario corporation income tax.

The SBDC, in turn, is empowered to invest in eligible small businesses. These small businesses must be Canadian controlled, with no more than 100 full-time employees and with 75 per cent of the salaries and wages paid in Ontario. They must be primarily involved in manufacturing and processing, tourism or mineral exploration and development. They must also operate at arm's length from the SBDC.

The response so far to this new SBDC program has been encouraging. To date, 18 SBDCs have been registered with the Ministry of Revenue. Most of them are still in the very early stages of operation and have not issued share capital. Therefore, it's still too early to assess the results of the program.

When the act was debated in this chamber I indicated that path-breaking legislation such as this requires a degree of flexibility. At the beginning it is impossible to foresee every circumstance or to predict accurately the response of the private sector, I therefore indicated, and would reiterate, that as we gain experience with this program we will consider modifications. I'm sure that the members of this committee will have some constructive suggestions and I look forward to hearing them.

I've been talking about some of the specifics of the 1979 budget. I would like to review briefly how the overall budget is progressing as we move well into the second half of the fiscal year.

As the members will know from the last publication of Ontario Finances, we have been experiencing more buoyant revenue than I had originally projected. This has been caused mainly by higher than anticipated retail sales and corporate profits. However, to some degree these revenue collections lag behind current economic performance and I look to the second half of the year with, at best, guarded optimism.

When we examine our spending growth rate this year it is interesting to reflect upon the outstanding success of the government's restraint program.

In 1974-75, Ontario was coping with the rate of expanding growth of over 24 per cent. We were only one of many jurisdictions faced with this problem. For example, federal government spending at the time was growing at an annual rate of about 28 per cent.

Ontario was unique in one respect. We acted faster and more effectively than other governments to deal with the problem. By 1978-79 our total rate of spending growth had been reduced to 6.4 per cent and that is a very significant accomplishment.

In the current fiscal year we are projecting expenditures to grow by 8.4 per cent. That is up from last year, but it is still well below the projected growth rate in the Ontario economy. The latest forecasts for the economy run in the area of 11 per cent in current dollars.

This year's spending growth rate reflects the creation of the Employment Development Fund. In addition, we must make provision for a disaster relief for the spring flooding in the north, the Woodstock tornado and the failure of much of the tobacco crop. The Mississauga situation could also have applications for our spending this year, but that remains to be seen.

On the other hand, we are continuing with our policy of imposing in-year spending constraints on ministries and the result of this will balance off some of the spending pressures. The progress in reducing spending growth which we have made over the past four years has allowed us to make a substantial cut in the provincial deficit level without major increases in taxes. I originally projected a deficit level of $1.153 billion for the current fiscal year. By the time the year is over, I hope to have improved upon that.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that our long-term objective must be to continue to reduce net cash requirements. However, this can only be done in a manner that is consistent with broad economic and fiscal policy objectives. It is interesting to reflect upon the substantial reduction that has already taken place. In 1975-76, the deficit represented almost 16 per cent of total spending. This year the equivalent figure will be about seven per cent.

The deficit levels over the past several years have been well within the financing capacity of the province's non-public borrowing sources. Mr. Chairman, you may be aware the province has not done any long-term borrowing in the public markets on its own account since 1975. In fact, this year we will be eliminating some $389 million of public debt.

I would like to make one final observation on our restraint program. Ontario's spending now accounts for 15.5 per cent of the gross provincial product, which is a significant reduction from the high of 16.4 per cent four years ago. That translates into about $1 billion in the hands of the private sector this year alone.

I would like to turn now to the economic outlook. When I brought down the budget last spring, I believed that 1979 would be a year of solid performance and events have borne that out. I mentioned earlier that so far our revenues have been buoyant, reflecting a brisk pace of economic activity in the province.

The rate of job creation in Ontario has been particularly strong. There are 170,000 more people working in Ontario today than there were a year ago. While all of this is very encouraging, Mr. Chairman, nevertheless the current high levels of domestic interest rates and the economic outlook for the United States concern me, because of the implication for Canadian exporters, particularly the auto industry. An American recession is anticipated next year as a result of world oil prices and high interest rates in the US. More OPEC price increases and further instability in world oil markets could deepen and prolong that recession.

As the members know, this is one of the main reasons why Ontario is deeply concerned about the possibility of price increases of oil and gas in Canada. We feel that price increases beyond the previously agreed levels will be difficult for our economy to sustain without suffering a severe setback.

We've also pointed out that if the federal government does not heed our advice and does opt for the significantly higher prices, which are really tax increases under another name, the bulk of the funds should, in the short term, be recycled back to the economy in order to cushion the impact.

On this subject, I hope I'm preaching to the converted so I need not go on. I said at the beginning of my remarks I would not try to cover all aspects of my ministry, since that would take too much of the committee's time. At this point, I shall conclude.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Chairman, in keeping with the minister's leadership in restraint I won't be too long today either, because I'm not very happy with the whole estimates procedure, let alone the opening statements, the great diatribes that nobody really cares about; I'm more interested in having a chance to converse with the minister.

I must say at the outset I'm a mite disappointed we're back in the House this year. I was under the impression there was generally going to be a shift from the House to committees outside the House. Frankly, I find that a far more fruitful kind of forum for discussion with the Treasurer or whatever minister is involved, particularly when one has an opportunity to chat with the senior civil servants.

I'm not sure why we ended up here this year. I asked my own House leader. He said the NDP, for some reason, wanted it back here. I'm not sure of the veracity of that, but I hope very much that next year we will end up back in committee, although I highly suspect there will be a very different set of players at that time. I assure the Treasurer that at that time I will forthrightly answer any questions he may have as the opposition critic.

I'm sad to hear the Treasurer has been in the hospital. I hope he's feeling better. If this is too much of a trial for him, I for one would happily adjourn until he is feeling first class. Frankly, I wasn't even aware he was away, and I don't think anybody else was aware he was away. Maybe that is one of the problems he has as Treasurer of this province, creating a profile. It's fun to have him here, in any event, to chat briefly about some of our concerns.

In a sense, as he rightly points out, this is his first year. He came in last year under a wee bit of a cloud. There were a lot of promises made for which this Treasurer didn't feel totally, personally responsible; justifiably so, to some extent. That's an old and respected tradition of his government; if in doubt or in trouble switch ministers, because it's really pretty tough to hang the new minister with the old minister's policies.

It will be interesting to see if he is here next year. I suspect he won't be, at least not in the same position. The Treasurer came in last year and created his own first budget, something he feels personally committed to.

There are some good things about it; I want to tell him that at the outset. At budget time the Treasurer presented us with one of the more responsible sets of numbers I have seen in my brief tenure in this House. He was close to his targets. He didn't have the predilection that some other Treasurers and some other ministers had to overstate figures. Certainly his second quarter review came in better than budget, and in most cases I compliment him for that.

It is most important that Treasurers in particular have the capacity not only to tell people but their own colleagues the grim realities. Maybe I shouldn't even say this, but I for one am somewhat attracted, certainly not in all respects but somewhat attracted to at least some of the postures of the new Minister of Finance in Ottawa.

I've never met the man, but it seems to me—and I hope he can sustain it, I hope he has the political clout to do it—he is appearing to tell people the grim reality of the kinds of problems we're facing, he's not offering any simple panaceas. I wish he had had the political clout to get out of that silly mortgage interest deductibility program they have, even though it's a watered-down version.

I think we are collectively coming, and I hope it's transmitting through to the populace, to the point that we in government and I don't have to take responsibility because I've always been in opposition, have been foisting a lot of irresponsible things on people and burying some of the long-term problems. I can tell you this, a price will be paid; that price is going to be paid, to a large measure, by our children, and it will be far more substantial than the price we're paying now. That concerns me.

I'll talk briefly about that in a moment when I talk about pensions, about some of the borrowing practices. Those are areas where your government has been particularly vulnerable to the charge of mortgaging our future, stealing from our future to maintain the pretense of at least some kind of fiscal integrity at the current time.

One of the things I don't like about your statement, and I just saw it, is that all of your comparisons are against the years 1974-75 and 1975-76. You weren't the Treasurer then, yet you say to yourself, "What a wonderful fellow I am because my performance is so much better than it was in 1975-76 when the figures were so much worse."

That was an election year, and this government had one of the most cheap, bogus, irresponsible set of election promises I've ever seen in my life. Let's not forget that a lot of your treasury officials were here in the same positions then as they are now, so what you've got is yourself running against yourself, or you running against your own government.

Mr. McKeough got blessings for all his noise about restraint. He was the businessman's politician, and history will tell you that he was the biggest-spending Treasurer in the history of this province. If you want to run against Darcy McKeough you can run against Darcy McKeough, but don't try to run against us or the NDP, who as irresponsible as they are probably wouldn't have approved of some of those giant giveaways in the 1975-76 campaign.

I remember it well; I remember it because that was my first election, Mr. Chairman. We had the $100 million worth of first-time home owners' grants in retrospect terribly administered and poorly conceived program. There were the sales tax cuts on automobiles, a high percentage of which were imported from abroad; and the across-the-board cut in sales taxes. Most people have learned, after the fact, that our system was not all that responsive to sales tax cuts because such a high percentage of our consumer goods are imported from abroad.

It was a neat election ploy. The government used it then, and now you're trying to prove what a decent fellow you are by not doing it again and by telling us how much better your figures are. I want you to know I don't buy that; I'm not very impressed with those kind of arguments.

I'll say this to you. If the logic that was used at that time to stimulate the economy was correct, I can tell you there's a lot more argument, and there has been subsequent to the 1975-76 fiscal year, for stimulation now. I can tell you this, Mr. Chairman: things are going to be very much worse in the next year than they were in 1975-76. Who knows, there may even be an election, so you may want to review your policies.

I can tell you that anyone who pretends there's been a consistent, coherent, economic philosophy running through this government, encompassing the tenure of the Treasurer here, is sadly mistaken. This government's economic philosophy has been to go with the present breezes, to bend with whatever seems to be the mood of the day.

The assessment of the government is that restraint is the mood of the day. Frankly, you know my position well. It's no secret I happen to share that point of view, in general terms anyway, so I'm not squawking about that in general, although I reserve the right to squawk about it in specifics at a later time.

This is our annual review of the Treasurer. I compliment him on the relative veracity of his numbers. I think the Treasurer probably doesn't have the problem of waking up in the middle of the night saying, "My God, I lied to the people;" because he hasn't. He's been fairly consistent, with a few exceptions where programs were a little ill-conceived or poorly thought out. We told him when we were debating them in the House, and I'll tell him again today, where we thought they went wrong, but at least his numbers aren't too far off.

However, the Treasurer has, most conscientiously I gather, almost buried himself. I don't pretend to understand him, decent man that he is, Mr. Chairman. Certainly the Treasurer hasn't had the profile, in the last year, of the previous Treasurer. Apart from the few numbers he produces, we have had some difficulty determining what he actually stands for in various areas. We have not had to have him deal with some of the fundamental problems that are sitting there, like property tax reform and things like that. He has lived those off and isn't getting involved with them.

We certainly used to know from the previous Treasurer, from the three or four speeches a week that he made, all in printed form; at least there was a constant flow of junk that one could peruse if one had trouble sleeping at night, at least we knew his position on various issues. But we have trouble with this Treasurer, knowing exactly what he thinks about anything; except of course what colour a chap's socks should be or what colour jacket to wear in public.

Mr. Laughren: That is very true, and he needs new advice in that area, too.

Mr. Peterson: I agree with you, he probably could use some advice in that area.

The question of interest rates is an interesting one. We went through an exercise in the House; various people had various and different points of view on the interest rate questions. Certainly some of my colleagues—my colleague to my left from Huron-Middlesex, for example, who thinks very deeply what this is doing, what it has done and what it is going to do to the sector that he represents, which is the agricultural community; he has suggestions of the kind of relief that should be tendered in that particular area.

This Treasurer, Mr. Chairman, has the classic lawyer's two-handed approach to these problems. While on this hand he listens to this bit of advice, on the other hand he listens to an equivalent number of internal economists with a different point of view, and he ends up basically down the middle doing nothing. I really have no idea what this Treasurer thinks about that question; or whether he has the clout in Ottawa or the influence or the personal friendships or whatever, to go to the Minister of Finance and say, "Look, this is what it is doing to Ontario," and that he is either for it or against it. My guess is Darcy McKeough would have stood up in this House and said, "Look, that is a reality, I am for it. If you don't like it, that is your problem."

I still have no idea what the Treasurer thinks about this. He is trying to appeal to all constituencies in this particular area. It wouldn't hurt the Treasurer, and I pass on this advice as generously as I can, to take a stand on some of these issues and be prepared to fight it out. You can pretty well predict what the NDP is going to say. You never know exactly for sure about us, but take your chances on that one. We may have a fight with you, but as long as you are right we will support you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am always right.

Mr. Peterson: Therein lie all of the problems.

I want to mention a few things that I think the Treasurer should be doing, and these are in a general sense. I told you earlier I am not very happy about the estimates procedure. I don't think it provides a very meaningful forum for the kind of debate that one should have.

I supported a bill by my colleague from London North about two weeks ago—you weren't in the House, as I recall—suggesting that we should have a five-year fiscal plan filed in this House, very much along the lines set out by the Lambert commission from Ottawa.

I will grant you that Ottawa probably was in a worse situation than Ontario. It probably didn't recognize some of the operating necessities that have been recognized here longer. I think it would be a worthwhile thing, a discipline, to establish a set of standards against which governments could be measured. Let us not forget that one of the most difficult things in bringing relevance to the parliamentary procedure is a set of standards against which the government performance can be judged.

The best set of standards perhaps, is the set of standards the government sets for itself. At least we can tell by looking at the deviations from its projections to see if there is reasonable explanation. The government can do that, in a sense, on its budgeting procedure once a year. It measures up at the end of the year to see what it has done. I think it would be a good thing for you, for your staff and for this province, if you were forced to file a five-year plan, which you referred outside of the House to a government committee on expenditure, where we could have a full debate about the fiscal performance of your government and the projections thereof.

One has to go into that with a certain set of assumptions. One would assume the tax system will remain basically as is. Of course it does change, certainly those numbers can be changed on an annual basis; but it would force two things, in my judgement. It would force a discipline on your government to think ahead for five years and to reflect on some of the serious questions you are going to have to face and which you have never faced up to. You have oozed concern about such things as financing of deficits and repayment of the Canada Pension Plan and the teachers' super-annuation fund, but you have never faced up to some of those long-term program problems that are very important to the financing of this province. It would force you to think ahead about those things. I have seen no evidence whatsoever that you have thought ahead about those problems, let alone that you understand them.

The other thing it would do is generally upgrade the quality of the input from the back-benchers and the opposition members. Let's have some full discussion, questions and answers, about some of those kinds of questions. I am talking in a sense about relating revenues and expenditures.

Frequently it is just a question of reviewing estimates. Most members come here with a particular constituency beef and say, "I wish you were spending more in this area or this other area." We have all got more ideas on how you can spend money. That is a natural outgrowth of the kind of procedure we have in this House.

We never, except for an odd debate, sit down and seriously reflect on where the revenue is going to come from. We do not suggest how to tax more or tax more equitably. We do not have an opportunity to cross-examine the civil servants and have suggestions for them. Granted that comes up sometimes in question period. The NDP has its ideas, we have some of our ideas; but it doesn't come up in terms of a meaningful kind of discussion.

I think if this committee functioned properly we should have an opportunity to have the Treasurer before it, to have the deputy minister, to have some of the senior economists; perhaps even have the governor of the Bank of Canada come in and give us his points of view. I think those things would be worthwhile for a province of this size, one that has grown from a budget of $3 billion or $4 billion at the beginning of the decade to $15 billion today. It is a giant organization you are running here. The more you can discipline yourself and get your parliamentary colleagues involved, the more we will have better, more responsible, more responsive government making fewer mistakes. Also it will have more effective stewardship of the taxpayers' dollars.

A piece of legislation I would like to see introduced, and I have introduced private legislation along this line, is a tax expenditures law. Everytime you give away money by way of a tax cut, tax credit, tax deferral or whatever, you should have to file a set of objectives, showing why that is being done, what you expect back.

When Darcy McKeough was Treasurer he brought in a bill to accelerate the capital cost allowance in this province. That is federal legislation. The Liberal Party brought in an amendment forcing him to come back within a year to review that. In a sense that was a kind of tax expenditure program. We could look at what he was doing, compare it with his objectives and see whether that was a worthwhile expenditure of those funds, because a tax cut is an expenditure any way you cut it. If you are going to cut yourself out of $100 million worth of revenue, then we should say was that worthwhile or should that money have been collected and spent in some other area; that is another area in which I would like to see the minister get himself involved.

There are a myriad other things we have suggested. For example, economic impact studies on all legislation. I still think that is worthwhile. It has the problem of binding up a government, but it forces it to think through some of these questions and to make them public. Then if it is wrong in its guesstimates that becomes public knowledge.

I assume a lot of these things are done privately now, through the staff or in cabinet; but at the same time when we see a minister bring a piece of legislation into this House saying, "I have no idea how it is going to work or whether it is a very good idea at all," it doesn't give us all that much faith. I am referring to the small business development corporations legislation you brought in this year. We will look at that in a moment to see whether it was worthwhile or not, I think we will have more conversation on that later.

I want to mention a few other points that I think are relevant at this time. We talked about one of these over here. It is one of which the Treasurer is probably aware. He instituted a poll at a cost of $60,000 to figure out the public's view of his restraint programs and his government's spending programs. It is our view the results of that should be rightfully in the public domain. He makes himself a victim of a very serious accusation that those are being used for partisan political purposes, which I have no doubt they are. In order to go at least as far as he can to dispel that, he has an obligation as a minister who prides himself on integrity to make that kind of thing public. We are going to use every resource we can to extract that out of his hide. We think that rightfully should be in the realm of public knowledge. He is deceitful not to make it such.

I was interested in reading the Treasurer's September 30 Ontario Finances. I take him back to the budget two years ago, and budget paper C, as I recall, on page four. The long-term projections were that if he could keep the differential between revenues and expenditures to about 2.5 per cent he would balance the budget in the fiscal year of 1983-84. He came up with that 1984 figure in response to a considerable amount of pressure when he became Treasurer.

Let's not forget the previous Treasurer had promised to balance the budget in 1981 as part of the great Brampton charter, as part of the great campaign before the last election in 1977. He knew, and I feel very confident he knew deep down, that was totally unrealistic. Even he couldn't have achieved that, but it seemed like a catchy kind of figure. That's all the press cottoned on to, balance the budget in 1981.

Then, of course, the present Treasurer came in and he took a little different view of the situation. He said 1984 to everyone looking for that magic year when he was going to balance it. But in his September 30 figures there is only a differential of about 1.5 per cent. That means, if we extrapolate those out, his own figure for balancing the budget is going to turn out to be quite unrealistic and probably we are closer on current trends, to 1987, 1988 or 1989.

I would be interested when the Treasurer responds to me and if he doesn't, I'll ask him questions about it later, what his current view of balancing the budget is, in spite of the apparently better performance for the first six months of this year.

I think that better performance, particularly his understated revenue projection, is going to come true by the end of the year, that is the way it appears to most economists today. The only optimistic economist I know today, and he is not really an economist, is Tommy Kierans who happens to work for the Treasurer—at least he is a principal contributor to the Tory economic policy conventions and also chairman of the Ontario Economic Council. I understand he is a man very much on the inside, or at least he used to be. He is the only optimist I know.

All it means to me is that you guys sit around and smoke the same stuff because most of the people outside—the Conference Board in Canada, various banks, Wood Gundy or whoever we want to talk about—are fairly pessimistic about the prospects in the short term. If I was doing the budgeting I would be doing it on that basis, very clearly. Even though I congratulate the Treasurer for the first six months, I wouldn't suggest that's going to carry on for the next year or so.

I probably will save my remarks on the SBDCs for later down in the estimates. From the latest figures I have, which I'm not suggesting are correct and the Treasurer may be able to bring me up to date, 14 have been registered, I believe, representing some $432,000 worth of investments.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Eighteen.

Mr. Peterson: Eighteen; he may also have the numbers for how much has been invested by the SBDCs and so-called eligible corporations, and how much has been given out by way of tax rebates.

[4:15]

I am a little concerned about that; I'll maybe mention it now. When that was established, the Treasurer will recall, there was a great fanfare shortly after it was announced that Wayne Beach of Aurelian had established the first one.

I have no idea how many investments he has made, but I would like to know. If the minister doesn't have it, I would ask his staff to provide for me, if they possibly could, a list of the eligible investments, who has invested in what. I assume that's public knowledge because they are, to a large measure, public funds. I would like to examine that in the course of these estimates.

It's interesting that when we had that major debate we were all talking about directing money into risk capital kinds of projects: new kinds of projects with high technology, creating a "nursery for entrepreneurs, a nursery for capitalists," in this country and in this province. But then came Wayne Beach, the president of Aurelian, and he is quoted as saying that his company has been deluged with requests from people wanting us to invest in their pet projects. "We are not interested in inventions or startups."

To a large measure, that defeats, to some extent, the stated purpose; particularly when the minister made the statement at the time of the introduction of the SBDCs that "I believe it is vitally important to make sure there's a stream of equity capital available to new enterprise." The minister will recall that at the time one of our fears—and we had many fears, some less well founded than others—was that this system would become only an alternative source of conventional capital and would not be creating new capital to go into new kinds of high risk propositions. One would only come to a SBDC as an alternative to going to the bank, because one could get it at a lower rate even though he or the company was bankable at the bank.

I may be wrong. I have to look at the specifics before I know that. I would be grateful if the minister would look at that and assist me in getting rid of that view of the situation, because it may well be an incorrect one.

I will leave the talk of unemployment to my friend the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren). Needless to say it had a dramatic jump in the last month, something the Treasurer must be concerned about. I think it bodes poorly for the future, in spite of the fact the minister says he has created another 177,000 jobs this year. Our unemployment rate is up, particularly in the 15 to 24 year old group, to 10.5 per cent, well ahead of a year ago. I see this as a portent of things to come; I would hope the Treasurer would have something to say about that. It looks like his so-called "leaving it to the marketplace" programs aren't necessarily going to mop up the extra unemployment being created by a number of circumstances, albeit a lot of them external to ourselves.

There are three or four other things. It wasn't my intention to go on for too long, but I want to talk about a couple of other things, particularly this matter of equalization, Mr. Chairman.

We have had a number of discussions in this House about the whole equalization. I think we caught the Treasurer off guard at the beginning when we suggested that the province of Ontario had an entitlement to equalization under the current formula. He ran out of the House and said, "That isn't right. It has been removed by Bill C-26 by the federal government." Then I guess one of his staff got to him and said, "That isn't the case, because Bill C-26 was never passed by the federal government."

I am not sure how much we are entitled to. It varies—depending on whom you talk to and the current formula, and that's oil leases included in the classical way as opposed to the new way that Bill C-26 wanted to treat them—somewhere between $400 million and $500 million over the past three years in equalization. The question, of course, to the Treasurer or to the Premier, is why don't you collect this?

Then they start into a moral argument: "Well, you know, the purpose of equalization is not to subsidize or to assist provinces with higher than average per capita income." Mr. Chairman, I tell you that has nothing to do with the purpose of equalization. It is to equalize per capita provincial revenues, not per capita income. There is a profound difference; if the Treasurer doesn't believe me, read the act. That being said, we have a positive entitlement. Finally, after questioning in the House, he admitted that and said, "Gee, I think you are right."

The next obvious question is why not collect it? His response was: "It is, sort of, not morally correct. That is not the intention of the act. We are really a kind of 'have' province and we are really not a 'have not'. Gee, we don't think we should. In any event, if we collect it, you know that 40 per cent of that—or whatever, 40, 45, or 35, depending on how you view it—will come out of the Ontario taxpayers' pockets anyway, because equalization, as we all know, comes out of the federal coffers. It is not contributed to by the provinces except indirectly through their income tax and various other forms of taxation; but it is not a transfer between provinces per se, it is a transfer by the federal government to provinces."

So, I guess, originally they used the legal argument, saying we are not entitled. But clearly we are entitled. Bill C-26 was never passed. I have no idea what the federal government's intention is on Bill C-26, but I can tell you this government should fight it with everything that it is worth.

When the Treasurer and the Premier are running around this province, around this country, saying basically that we are getting shafted, we are getting it stuffed to us by the producing provinces; when they are mounting this one-province campaign against the federal government, saying it is going to destroy our manufacturing industry, it is going to cost us jobs, it is going to cost investment and everything else and we are the ones who are going to lose the most; surely, the morality of the situation is that we are entitled to collect that money. I can't for the life of me understand why this government doesn't go to the federal government and say, "That is our share and we want it." Many people have asked me: "Gee, I really can't understand this, why wouldn't the provincial government collect that money?" And I don't know.

The only explanation I have is it is because of pride. If one could see a picture of—I guess the Premier (Mr. Davis) fears the cartoons; one of himself, with his grey hair and ample, well-vested tummy, kneeling in front of Joe Clark with a tin cup, having equalization dropped into it; I guess that would offend the Premier's pride, I have no idea. I can see the Duncan Macpherson cartoon right now, and it could be catchy.

Those are the realities under the law, and I would say that our position is totally morally defensible today, particularly in view of the things that the Treasurer and the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch) and the Premier have said. Go and collect it, because I have an awful lot of good ideas on how that money can be used to insulate Ontario against the impact of higher energy prices. We have an obligation to cushion our consumers, to cushion our industry, to cushion our people on fixed incomes and our senior citizens against those kinds of shocking price increases that are going to come along.

I can say right now, the prices are going to go up. The Premier has wasted so much verbal energy on trying to keep them down. I guess it was a good try because everybody thinks he is the hero of the consumer, even though he knew it was a losing bloody battle when he walked into it. I guess he got the headlines he wanted. I guess he thinks people will walk out and say: "Davis fought the good fight. Isn't he a good friend of the little guy?" But he knew he was going to lose. He should have used his energy, his moral suasion, his power of persuasion and all the great staff he has to devise a scheme on how to fairly distribute those oil price increases. That is where the energy should have gone, because he knew it was going to go up. Everybody knew: my grandmother knew; my kid knows, and he is two years old.

That is the reality of the situation, Mr. Chairman, and he blew his credibility. Maybe the Premier has got political kudos out of this; I have no idea, he is going to judge that. He is probably taking a poll right now to figure out how he fared. But in the long run I don't think this government did itself, or the people of this province any good, and I think its energies could have been far more intelligently employed in other areas. That is one more onslaught, along with interest rates and a lot of other things, that are seriously going to affect the financial future of this province. We are running down with our creaky industrial machine, with our deficiency in capital investment, manpower programs and everything else.

One doesn't have to be very intelligent to project ahead and see the kinds of problems we're going to have. Even as a father, if the minister's son came to him today and said, "Dad, what should I do? Where should I go?" my guess is he'd look him in the eye and say, "You know, son, the best advice I could give to you is go to Alberta, because there is going to be more opportunity there."

That's a real moral dilemma faced by a lot of people I know today because they don't see: One, a recognition of these problems in totality; two, the effects that they're going to have on this province; three, any kind of plan of action; or four, any determination to solve them. I would say very seriously, forget the pride and admit that these problems are serious.

I just got a letter from my stockbroker. Things are not good, I told the minister they weren't good.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You are lucky you can still buy stocks.

Mr. Laughren: Listen to these two capitalists going at each other.

Mr. Peterson: Here our little friend from Nickel Belt is going to start in. You see how I woke him up? I was worried my little friend from Nickel Belt wasn't enjoying the speech and I just thought I'd throw that in to wake him up and get his blood stirring, because he's going to be up next and I want him to get angry and mean.

I just wanted to talk about that equalization. I want the minister to talk about it when it's his turn because in the absence of renegotiating some formulas—and I'm not saying they shouldn't be renegotiated—but renegotiating those formulas right now looks to me as though it's going to be as difficult to do that as to change the patriation parts of the constitution. This is a very fundamental and serious argument.

What we are doing now collectively is going to pave the way for the future, and I can tell the minister there's a statement I want to read that I don't like at all. It's on page six of the minister's statement: "The bulk of the funds should, in the short term, be recycled back to the economy in order to cushion the impact."

Short term should have been taken out, because that's wrong. The agreements that are going to be reached now are going to impact for the next 10, 20 and 30 years. It's very important to understand this. This is just the first critical round; in a sense it's not even the first round, because lots of people knew all these things that are happening today were going to happen in 1973 and 1974 when the whole started. The minister should have known but he didn't know it and his government didn't know it; but now at least he knows.

The prospects of $30, $40 and $60 oil are not silly. He can't look me in the eye and say, "You know, Peterson, if you predict $60 oil in 1986 you're crazy," because I'm probably not. What the minister has to do is develop the program for recycling of those windfall oil moneys now, because what he does now and the input he has now in those discussions is going to impact four or five years from now. It is very difficult to change the fiscal arrangements in this province.

Don't talk to me about the short term; what he is doing now impacts dramatically on the long-term health of this province and he should be doing it. I would like to see what he is going to take to the next Ministers of Finance conference with suggestions for redoing the fiscal arrangements of this country.

If he wants my ideas I'd happily go with him, because I have a lot of ideas and besides that I'm a lot of fun.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You are a lot of fun?

Mr. Peterson: I am a lot of fun in spite of it. You make me angry. I get a little cranky when I'm in your presence but in spite of that I am a lot of fun.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We will go jogging together. Bring your dog. Your dog licks my hand.

Mr. Peterson: Okay, I'll bring my dog. He'll bite you. My dog would have you for breakfast.

There are a couple of other areas. I just keep getting into this, and I was planning on being finished half an hour ago. I'll leave the Employment Development Fund. I have no idea why the Treasurer is introducing supplementary estimates. I thought we voted for those before, except you move them around so much. I cannot understand your budgeting procedure. You included those in part of the capital investment in your last budget as investment, long-term capital investment, and it has been jiggled away and some of it taken into building hospitals. It is most confusing. If the Treasurer can make sense of it for me I will get into that in more detail later.

One of the things I am concerned about is Hydro and the effect it is having on our collective borrowing capacity. We have seen, in the past month, virtual collapse of the bond market in North America with the rise in interest rates. Granted there has been a rally in the last couple of days, but most people think that is a technical rally. Most analysts think there is going to be at least one more increase in interest rates, which is going to depress the bond market further.

I would like to know your plans: number one, on what Hydro is doing to the fiscal integrity of this province, because we have seen a deterioration in debt to equity ratio, of Hydro. We have seen a senior vice-president, Mr. Nastich, respond at the rate hearings that he just wasn't sure of the effect it was going to have on the province, and he indeed was concerned about it, as are a lot of other thoughtful people.

Ultimately, that decision comes down to a decision of the Treasurer. I assume you have to have your nose in Hydro whether you like it or not. The former Treasurer did. He unilaterally cut a couple of billion dollars worth of expenditures, which proved to be, by accident, one of the more intelligent decisions that man ever made. He did it for fiscal reasons, not for the projected load forecast reasons as a lot of other people would have tried to do at the time. I would be interested in your views on Hydro and how that is affecting the fiscal integrity of this province.

I have two other points. We are now seeing a budget, Mr. Chairman, of which about 9.2 per cent is going to repay interest on our debts, that is the most dramatically increasing part of the annual budget. It was up something like 14 per cent last year, and 16 per cent the year before that. I am taking the numbers off the top of my head, I might be a trifle off. Every year the biggest single increase in the budget is to finance the debt. There is no end to that, and that is the tragedy. We see the cutbacks in transfers to other areas. We see them necessarily cut back because of the dramatic and sizeable increases in money needed to pay back the provincial debt.

That, in itself, has led one forecasting agency—a week or so ago I read in the press—to say the provincial governments will never be able to—and you are not alone, you are not totally alone.

Mr. Ziembra: You can do what Iran does. Just refuse to pay the tax.

Mr. Peterson: There is a suggestion from my friend from High Park, do what Iran did. That is a clever kind of approach. I never thought of that.

Mr. Laughren: You have no imagination.

Mr. Peterson: Maybe he is right. Maybe I do have no imagination.

Again, that statistic bodes very poorly for the capacity of your government to ever balance the budget without some wrenching reforms, without increases in taxation or dramatic cuts in expenditure. All of those things conspire together to probably put a galling economic yoke on our children who are coming after us. That leads me, I guess, to my very favourite subject, the whole question of what you have stolen from the pension funds over the past 10 years.

I have yet to see a response from the Treasurer. I have tried my very best, by harping and by telling him about the financing crisis we are facing in this province. I have sent him books, I have yapped at him, I have chatted with him; and I have sent him articles to impress upon him the gravity of this situation. I know his response today would be: "Well gee, you know we have to wait until the Haley commission report comes down and it will be next spring." It was supposed to be this fall and before that it was supposed to be last spring. God knows when Donna Haley is going to come down with her commission's report on pension reform and presumably deal with some of the questions of the financing. I gather the provincial governments, and particularly Ontario, are in debt something like $8.7 billion to the Canada Pension Plan. When is it going to pay back that capital amount of money without substantially invading the capital markets, without competing with private enterprise and having an inflationary effect?

God bless the old Toronto Star; the Toronto Star had a headline today, "You Could Pay Double to Keep the Pensions Alive." Of course, you will pay double. That's a tax. It's increased from 3.6-1.8 contributed by the employee and 1.8 by the employer—you're suggesting it be increased up to seven per cent to keep that fund alive.

Responsible people know that the contribution rate has got to go up in order to keep that fund from going bankrupt between 1995 and the year 2000. What I don't like about that is that it's just another temporary salvation for the provincial government to borrow more money. I've advanced before the availability, the fed-demand thesis; you look at how much you could borrow internally, add it all up and then spend it. That's exactly what you have done, on balance, over the past decade; and that is an irresponsible approach to budgeting, in my judgement.

Darcy McKeough isn't going to be here when it all has to be paid back; and I say, respectfully, the present Treasurer isn't going to be here either. He will not be here as Treasurer. He will walk out, they'll have a great dinner of celebration, and he can make his comments about what a good fellow he was. Some poor clod who is going to be Treasurer of this province in 1984 has a hell of a problem. I'm just afraid it's going to be me, that's what worries me; I'm going to have to pay back this legacy of debt.

It's a terrible problem. I have yet to see this Treasurer recognize the severity or the gravity of the problem with any kind of plan, even an interim plan, to solve that financing problem. It has yet to be determined.

As I said before, after we run out of negative tax flow with the Canada Pension Plan in the early 1980s, not only are we going to have to pay back the interest, at least a billion dollars a year by that point, we're also going to have to look after the capital amounts we've drawn down, starting about the year 1995. In addition, we are going to have to pick up the unfunded liability of $1.4 billion from public service superannuation funds and from the teachers' superannuation fund. It's an incredible fiscal nightmare.

I go back to my original point. If the Treasurer, with his officials, were forced to sit down and file a five-year fiscal plan, I can tell him he would be a far more serious man about the problems he is facing here.

I know it's not easy. I know politicians—and he's no worse than I am—are trained to think in four-year cycles, or less than four-year cycles in a minority situation. I know that, I know the pressures. I also know that a lot of politicians are punished for thinking ahead; for thinking past the next election, for saying there are some serious economic problems we're going to have to face.

There are easy ways to buy your way out of any one of them, but almost every simple solution buys a higher price that you pay later on. I want to see the Treasurer, not only as the Treasurer but as a concerned human being—and he is concerned about what's going to be happening 10 and 20 years from now—wrestle with this program, discuss the plan, get some legislation in this House and at least start the pension debate.

My friend the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) introduced a resolution on pensions the other day, and I thought it was a good contribution. I would like to see at least a start to some of the aspects of this whole question; not necessarily the financing parts of it that I'm talking about today, we just need that kind of debate.

I hope that when the Haley commission report comes down the Treasurer strikes a select committee of this House, sits at it daily, and that we wrestle through this problem together by studying the Haley report and coming up with some very serious recommendations for this province. I hope she deals with the significant issues.

It leads back to my original point. The Treasurer is going to have to impress me and other people that he understands the long-term implications of some of these things. Hopefully he will come come back with some conclusions, albeit tentative, to deal with these things.

In a simple sense, at least, as I said earlier, I happen to think that the new Minister of Finance in Ottawa is at least addressing some of these problems, except for the silly things he was trapped into politically. I hope, desperately, that on December 11, when he brings down his budget, he's got the guts and the courage to face these things and doesn't bend to those politicians and those political influences that aren't, in the long term, in the interests of this country but are only, in the short term, in the political interests of a party which happens to be in power at the time.

I've gone on much longer than I wanted to. I apologize for that; I got carried away. The Treasurer looked like a very receptive pupil today. I felt compelled to go on and orate just a little more than I wanted to.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Orate and derate.

Mr. Peterson: We will pursue some of these matters later; thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, of participating.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Laughren: That applause was appreciated. This may sound strange to you, Mr. Chairman, but I actually look forward to these estimates debates. They force me to crystallize my thinking—

Hon. F. S. Miller: You can't crystallize something that's amorphous.

Mr. Laughren: I'll be specific today. I'll be very specific.

It does force me to crystallize my thinking on the whole question of the Ontario economy. I hope it gives the Treasurer pause, as well, that some of the ideas that flow from this side can have some validity and should not be rejected out of hand. It's an opportunity for us to make some suggestions that we haven't made before, either in the budget debate or the question period as the session progresses. It also allows us to predict the future. I know the Treasurer doesn't like to predict the future, other than to say that everything is going to be fine. Hence the name by which he has become known, "the Jolly Miller from Muskoka."

In Ontario, this Treasurer is in keeping with the times. He's got a very low key kind of approach to his job. He likes to project that very folksy, back-home kind of image and style, and sell the virtues of less government intervention, more personal initiative and almost unbridled, free enterprise. The Treasurer goes about doing that. I'm always struck, in the interviews the columnists have with the Treasurer, by how he goes to great pains to ensure that's exactly the image that's given. I'm sure he makes sure he wears a particular kind of sock, or a particular kind of jacket, when he has those interviews.

That view about the lack of government involvement and the virtues of free enterprise from this Treasurer wouldn't bother me so much if we weren't having problems, if the economy was booming and there was not a high unemployment rate; but that's not the case now, and the Treasurer should understand that eventually the economic problems we face will be manifested in social problems. That's something we find unacceptable, as a matter of fact we find it downright dangerous both in social and economic terms.

Before the Treasurer accuses me of being a nabob of negativism, or whatever other word he would choose to use, let me assure him that we New Democrats are very optimistic about the potential of Ontario. We know that Ontario has a very enviable mix of the things that go towards making a very industrialized, progressive, wealthy, sharing province. We have the mineral and timber resources. We have the fruit land and the farm land. We have the manufacturing structure; it's in trouble, but it's there. We also have an infrastructure of social and health services that are important to us. We know, I suspect better than the Treasurer knows, that the infrastructure of social, health and educational services is built on the assumption we'll have a healthy economy down the road; that's the assumption on which those are built. It's also an assumption that our people will continue to be industrious and government will provide leadership in co-ordinating the efforts of the private sector and the public sector. I am worried that the Treasurer doesn't really understand that, and that he is not prepared to provide that role.

We New Democrats, Mr. Chairman, are concerned about the apparent will of this government to carry out certain responsibilities as we see them. We see the government's responsibility as one of leadership, co-ordination, and in some cases ownership. We see that as a role for the government, with the Treasurer being the person who should be articulating those roles and providing those functions.

This government, for example, must provide the leadership necessary to begin the process of rebuilding our manufacturing sector. I hope the Treasurer responds about the manufacturing problem. I will talk a little bit about it later, because I think he has bordered on the misleading in his statements about manufacturing in Ontario.

This government simply must co-ordinate the efforts and the activities of the private sector; it is not simply enough to express your faith in them and then stand back and hope for the best. They need co-ordination, and quite frankly they won't object if you provide some leadership in that respect.

The government must take an active role in what is happening with our non-renewable resources. This government has a blind spot when it comes to the resources of Ontario. That is something the Treasurer should know a little bit about, having been a Minister of Natural Resources.

We on this side do not say that public ownership of the minerals in this province, for example, would solve all the problems of Ontario; but, Mr. Chairman, it would provide us with the key to unlocking the economic development of a large part of this province, and it ties in with our good manufacturing strategy as well. The minister, I hope, will understand that.

The New Democrats know that when we do form the government in Ontario—and we won't get into a debate this afternoon as to when that will be, because that might be a long debate—we are going to require a healthy private sector as well. We are prepared, we have policies that indicate we are prepared, to work with the private sector, whether large or small firms, to ensure that the economy of Ontario is healthy. We do not stand in our place and talk about delivering a wide range of improved health, social and educational services without understanding they have to be paid for by the wealth-creating sector out there. We understand that very well, and we want to assure you that is a continuing commitment.

We understand, as well, that it is much easier to deliver those kinds of services when you have an economy that is growing and creating new wealth; it is much easier to redistribute wealth when you have a growing economy. We have stated, in reply to the budget last spring, that we are committed to the redistribution of wealth, whether the economy is growing or not. We stand firm in that commitment, but we also know that you can do a lot more when the economy is growing.

We know, too, that when economic instability occurs, it creates a distortion in both social and economic priority. We know that what we want to build is an Ontario that is stable, fully employed and more equitable than the one the present government presides over.

I will speak very bluntly to the Treasurer. We do not think he is doing a good job. I know it will come as a great surprise to him. We think it is wrong for him to sit back and let things happen out there. He is the only man I know who should have such enormous influence but who still believes in the invisible hand of the marketplace. He still believes in it. Despite all the evidence out there, this Treasurer still believes in Adam Smith.

Mr. Speaker, he ignores economic projections and simply dismisses them as being too pessimistic. He dismisses his own quarterly reports on the economy. The most recent one indicated that one of the problems was stagnating exports. He is saying that while global product mandating as articulated by the Minister of Industry and Tourism is still the cornerstone of his economic policy, it is faltering and he hasn't come to grips with that. He doesn't even admit that is the problem.

He fails to put in place any new programs in anticipation of a further downturn in the economy, despite what is already happening in the United States and despite the certainty that is going to spill over into the Ontario economy.

The Treasurer is silent on any adjustment programs as a result of the GATT negotiations. He hasn't made a public statement that I am aware of. He has introduced no program to cushion the effect of higher interest rates—either on the small-business community or on home owners—despite all the evidence of the problems that is going to cause.

He has done nothing to soften the impact of the increased oil and gas prices which are going to hit Ontario manufacturers. He has put in place no new property tax reform, despite the very dire need for that in Ontario. He has been strangely and ominously silent on the whole question of the decline in our manufacturing sector. That probably bothers me as much or more than any of them—particularly the problems in the auto pact.

He has failed to provide the leadership that could have been provided for Ontario manufacturers to take advantage of the lower Canadian dollar. Once again, he just assumed the lower Canadian dollar would solve the problem and that Ontario manufacturers would respond; yet the predictions now are that the lower Canadian dollar is not going to solve that problem. One need look no further than the problem south of the border to know why that won't work.

I was struck by the way the Treasurer was used in Ottawa in the negotiations over the oil prices. He sat there beside his Premier, while that gentleman made arguments for not moving toward world prices of oil. The Treasurer was, in my opinion, politically opportunistic. He sat there, listening to the Premier make the argument that we should not move towards world oil prices because we need the competitive edge our resources should give us in this country, and Ontario is the heartland of the manufacturing industry.

While the Premier was saying that, however, the Treasurer had no program in place in case Ontario had won the argument in Ottawa and the Prime Minister had said: "You're right, Mr. Davis. We had better not do it. The manufacturing sector is a real wealth-creating sector. We simply aren't going to do it. We are going to take advantage of the natural edge that resource should give us, be more competitive on world markets, and solve all sorts of problems out there with balance of payments and so forth." He should have established priorities for rebuilding particular manufacturing sectors. Instead, the Treasurer sat there, basking in the glow of this performance by the Premier; he didn't carry out his responsibility to have programs in place. The Premier did his job, but the Treasurer didn't do his, and that is wrong.

The Treasurer still has no plans so that, if oil prices don't go up to world price, our manufacturing industries will take advantage of that. It is a painful process. I agree with the Premier's attempts to stop the increase to world price, but I was really dismayed at the Treasurer sitting there and playing the role of opportunist, without doing his job of putting in place a plan to rebuild the manufacturing sector in Ontario.

Put bluntly, there are no new ideas or programs emanating from the Treasury. The Treasurer has abdicated his responsibility, it would appear, to the Minister of Industry and Tourism—that lean and hungry minister, the Cassius of the Davis court.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism trips across the province—I keep track of his comings and goings—always substituting puffery for policy. I am sure that in the history of this province, there has never been a minister who talked more and said less than the Minister of Industry and Tourism. I know if we were just having a quiet coffee together the minister would be nodding his head much more vigorously than he is now.

I didn't come here just to criticize the Treasurer or his good personal friend and colleague the Minister of Industry and Tourism. I came here to provide some alternative suggestions as well. Let me remind the Treasurer that, when we make suggestions, we do it in what I think is a constructive and positive way. It's necessary to use the data available to determine whether the problem is serious enough to warrant the kind of programs we are suggesting.

The Treasurer should know, despite the typically almost Pollyanna approach in his opening statement, all is not well. I was reading the Conference Board in Canada's quarterly provincial forecast of November of this year. I know the Treasurer doesn't like the conference board figures because they tend to give him a jolt, but no one should question that the conference board is an objective forecasting body. It has no axe to grind in predicting figures that are pessimistic or optimistic. I believe it is an objective body in terms of its statistical work.

This is what the conference board has to say about Ontario: "The current outlook for Ontario calls for a continuation of the trend, begun in the early 1970s, of a declining share in national output. In relation to the August quarterly provincial forecast, the current forecast for Ontario 1980 has little changed, but it would now appear that the province will grow by only 1.8 per cent in 1979, not the 2.7 per cent previously expected.

"This more pessimistic impression stems directly from a downward revision in our national outlook and a more ominous gathering of the clouds on the US economic horizon. Next year Ontario's performance remains one of extremely weak growth. The goods and the service industry components of the provincial economy are still both expected to underperform their national counterparts in 1979-80. This will represent the first time since 1975 that both will lag behind their national counterparts and the first time in 20 years that this has occurred for two consecutive years."

I notice in the Treasurer's opening remarks he used the figure that we are going to have an 11 per cent increase in growth in Ontario this year in current dollars. Where does the Treasurer get off using those kinds of statistics? Does he not deflate at all to find out what the real growth is out of that 11 per cent figure? What is it? Two per cent? That's a very shabby way of presenting his case.

The conference board goes on: "The construction industry is forecast to decline by nine per cent this year, the largest drop in activities since 1961. In 1980, the goods sector will display a decline in activities"—and I want the minister to listen to this—"as the manufacturing sector, which accounts for approximately 75 per cent of the goods produced in Ontario, is forecast to produce some 2.5 per cent less in real terms than it did in 1979. This represents an upward revision in the last forecast but only because 1979 now appears weaker. In 1980, the manufacturing weakness will not be concentrated in a few industries as in 1979. The majority of manufacturing industries, textiles, clothing, wood, machinery and electrical products, to name a few, will suffer from a drop-off in domestic and foreign demand."

So it's not just foreign demand and it's not just domestic demand, it's both, and that is serious. "The overall number of additional jobs created will diminish to the lowest level since 1962." The minister should be thinking about those figures, because they are very serious, and not continually fall back on simple glib clichés about how hopeful we are.

I was struck by the comments about Ontario in relation to the national output as a whole. I went through the conference board material. I looked at the gross domestic product at factory cost for Ontario which is 9.6 per cent but for Canada as a whole is 10.6 per cent. We are below the national level. For real domestic products, it is 0.8 per cent for Ontario and 1.6 per cent for Canada as a whole, or twice as high.

I look at employment; it will grow by 0.8 per cent in Ontario but by 1.4 per cent in Canada as a whole. Only Manitoba will have a slower growth rate than Ontario. I think that says something about the management of Manitoba as well.

This year the Treasurer, in making his opening statement, said there are 170,000 more people working in Ontario this year than a year ago. Isn't that fine? If he thinks his government is going to be judged on what happened between 1978 and 1979 and people will ignore what's about to happen in 1980, he is sadly mistaken. The conference board predicts only 30,000 net new jobs in 1980. That figure terrifies me. A few months ago they were saying 10,000, and they revised that upwards to 20,000. I tell the Treasurer that I hope they are wrong with that 30,000. What does that mean to us? It means a great deal.

In terms of our labour force, only Quebec, Manitoba and Nova Scotia will have a slower growth rate. In terms of the unemployment rate, British Columbia and the Maritimes are the only ones that will have higher rates than Ontario. In average weekly wages and salaries, only British Columbia will have a lower growth rate than Ontario.

The conference board puts a great deal of stake in its credibility, and I would like to know some of the Treasurer's figures in that regard. We think it's unacceptable to be faced with even the possibility of that kind of projection and not have the Treasurer presenting us with programs to anticipate this kind of problem with unemployment in Ontario. I don't know what his programs are. We are not talking simply about programs in terms of make-work projects or work projects in the public sector. We are talking about jobs in both the public and the private sector to create new and real wealth in this province.

I don't know what the Treasurer has in mind. We would certainly like to hear from him. We New Democrats are always talking about manufacturing and resources; not just service jobs and not just public service jobs.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You sound like the CPR.

Mr. Laughren: No, no. I am not the CPR; I do have plans for the CPR, though.

Manufacturing and resources, we think, are the key—not that transportation is part of the manufacturing that we would like to talk about. But we are worried about the manufacturing sector. Look at manufacturing as a percentage of total employment in Ontario. In February 1967, manufacturing represented 33.2 per cent of all employees in Ontario. Ten years later, it had dropped to 26.3 per cent. In September 1978 it was 24.9 per cent. In September 1979, it was 25.4 per cent, an increase from 1978 to 1979 but still considerably less than 1977 or 1967, in particular.

There has been a slight blip on the scope in manufacturing employment in the last year. But the Treasurer shouldn't deceive himself, us or the public at large by pretending that means the manufacturing sector is healthy. That is simply not true.

Look at the deficit in manufactured goods. To me, that's a very critical figure. It has implications regarding our resources, balance of payments and so forth. I picked up a newsletter that was sent out by L. R. Douglas, who is vice-president of Canadian General Electric. Mr. Douglas was chairman of the export committee of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association through most of the GATT negotiations, and latterly was chairman of the trade policy committee of the Canadian Business and Industry International Advisory Committee; so he has obviously immersed himself in the whole question of manufacturing activities. This is what Mr. Douglas has to say:

"Canada's trade deficit in manufactured goods amounted to some $12 billion in 1978. At the present rate, this year's deficit will approach $17 billion."

Those figures jumped off the page at me. He is predicting we go from a $12-billion deficit in 1978 to a $17-billion deficit in 1979. That is more than a 40 per cent increase in the deficit of manufactured goods in one year alone, in one year alone. I think that is simply outrageous.

I dug up some figures on this year to date that make me think Mr. Douglas is absolutely correct. These are on the manufactured goods balance; they are Canadian figures, but the heart of manufacturing is in Ontario. In 1976, we had a deficit of $10 billion on manufactured goods; in 1977, it was $11 billion; in 1978, it was $12.3 billion. In 1979—in case you think Mr. Douglas is exaggerating—from January to August, which is eight months, or almost two thirds of the year, we have a deficit of $11.8 billion. If you round that off to $12 billion—which is easier for my mind to do—then you come up with a figure of an $18-billion deficit for 1979.

Let's be cautious. A $17-billion deficit on manufactured goods, up from $12 billion last year, is unacceptable. Ontario has the most to lose. Yet the Treasurer will sit there and assume that invisible hand in the marketplace will resolve the problem. That is living in a fool's paradise.

That is completely unacceptable to us. With that deficit, the Treasurer sits there and is a complicit conspirator with the Minister of Industry and Tourism as he trips across the province talking about global product mandating. I have never heard such nonsense in all my life. Do you know what global product mandating assumes, Mr. Chairman? It assumes we have the manufacturing infrastructure here already; that we can go out there and compete on world markets. We are not even meeting the domestic demands. How in the world can we be a global product mandator if we can't even meet our domestic demands?

The Treasurer should know that, for heaven's sake; he should stop all that silly nonsense the Minister of Industry and Tourism is trying to pull off. The Treasurer is part of it, and he should know better. I have always had a sense that the Treasurer of a province or any jurisdiction should somehow remove himself from that kind of nonsense and deal directly with the people on the problems in the economy, and this Treasurer has fallen into the trap.

The real problem with this government—and the Treasurer exacerbates the problem because he thinks small; that is the problem, the more I think about it. He has read Schumacher's book, which says small is beautiful. Who am I to argue with small not being beautiful? But I want to tell the Treasurer, that too is a fool's paradise, given the world we live in out there.

Hon. F. S. Miller: A thing of beauty is a joy forever.

Mr. Laughren: The Treasurer is not running Santa's Village, is what I am trying to tell him. He has to start thinking bigger. The problems are bigger than that, and he has to start coming to grips with that.

Does the Treasurer know what he is like? I don't want to personalize this, Mr. Chairman, but the Treasurer is like a mechanic: He sees a car that needs a ring job so he cleans—

Mr. Peterson: He turns back the odometer.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, he turns back the odometer, or he cleans the plugs. That's what he does. He is not dealing with the enormity of the problem. I am optimistic about the potential for Ontario's economy, but not if the Treasurer sits back and lets the invisible hand look after things.

Until the Treasurer faces the fact that there are structural deficiencies in the Ontario economy, we are not going to solve the problem. Until the Treasurer is prepared to deal with the whole question of foreign ownership in the Ontario economy, we are not going to solve that part of our problem. Until the Treasurer is prepared to say we are going to rebuild certain sectors of the Ontario economy, we are always going to be in trouble.

We're just not getting good government. The Treasurer is not doing his job. I hate to be so blunt to the Treasurer, but I really feel I have an obligation to do so.

This is not just me speaking as an opposition critic, Mr. Chairman. I wouldn't want you to think that. When was the Treasurer made Treasurer? Was he Treasurer in the fall of 1977? No. Then just before he became Treasurer, Ontario made a submission to the government of Canada while the GATT negotiations were going on. I'm very worried about the Treasurer's thinking that only I would think this and maybe take advantage of him. This is what Ontario's submission included: "Ontario believes that the economic climate will continue to be sluggish into the 1980s and that, consequently, there is an urgent need for policies which will focus upon stimulating the development of internationally competitive industries. The federal adjustment proposals have not tackled the root causes of the problems facing Canadian manufacturers today—problems which will only be worsened with free trade—but instead have concentrated on industries and regions expected to decline."

The Ontario government commission gave evidence of the structural imbalance they talk about. They talked about the deindustrialization of Ontario, the decline in international competitiveness that has led to a deteriorating merchandise trade performance and erosion of technological strength and capability in the manufacturing sector.

Then they go on to say: "Within the manufacturing sector, Canada's position as a net importer of medium- and high-technology products has worsened considerably. Since 1970, Canada has experienced growing deficits in 18 or 19 higher-technology industrial product groups identified by the Science Council of Canada as vital to the maintenance of a viable industrial base. The overall deficit in these product classifications of $7.9 billion carries significant implications for Canada's balance of payments."

That's the understatement of the decade. Finally, this Ontario body says what Ontario's role is. "Ontario recognizes that the provincial government has a role to play in alerting its manufacturing industries to prepare for an increasingly competitive international trading environment. Import-sensitive firms will have to step up innovation, increase specialization, improve their domestic and international marketing channels and work to reduce costs and increased productivity.

"While Ontario will not shirk its responsibilities to its manufacturing industries, the province would stress that the program's resources and the influence of the government of Canada, particularly in fiscal and competitive policies, are such that the federal government will have to assume the major responsibility for an assistance program to aid manufacturers over the multilateral trade negotiation adjustment period."

That's Ontario's submission. It is a very frank and forthright statement to the federal government and much more frank and honest than the Treasurer is being with us or with anybody else in the province. I'd like to know what Ontario is doing. I think that analysis is correct about the Ontario program, but that's two years ago. What has Ontario done since then? I'd like to have the documentation. Would the Treasurer table that? What has he done to maintain his promise that his government would not shirk its responsibility to Ontario's manufacturing industries?

I know the Treasurer will know better than to stand up and say he created the Employment Development Fund, because that is not rebuilding the key manufacturing sectors in Ontario. Like my colleague from London Centre (Mr. Peterson), we can get into the Employment Development Fund in some detail later.

I'd like the Treasurer to stand up in his place, when he replies, to talk to us about the problems he sees that will ensue from freer trade and that will flow from the GATT negotiations, because we're not satisfied with the answers we've received from the Treasurer and, as a matter of fact, from the Premier as well. These estimates are going to be going on for a month or so. I'd put some very specific questions to the Treasurer and hope he would respond.

One of the big advocates of freer trade is the Economic Council of Canada. I'm sure John Crosbie will appreciate them. This is what the council said as its number one recommendation:

"We recommend that in order to shift Canada's industrial structure away from highly protected, labour-intensive and standard-technology activities in which comparative advantage clearly lies with the Third World countries, the federal government agree with the relevant provinces on the establishment of an industrial adjustment and redeployment fund and the creation of a comprehensive joint regional development strategy to be put into force as soon as possible."

They also recommend that "the total expenditures of the fund be fixed at $4 billion spread over a period of approximately 15 years and that the life of the fund and related institutional machinery be terminated at the end of this period as settled by legislation in advance."

The Economic Council of Canada based those figures on the assumption that 250,000 workers would need to be redeployed. That was its projection.

I would like to put some very specific questions. If the Treasurer doesn't want to answer them, we will come back to them again and again until he does.

Question number one: Does Ontario agree with the economic council's position of the need for that redeployment fund and the amount involved and the number of workers? What has happened since the GATT negotiations were concluded? What is the federal government prepared to do to work with Ontario to ensure there is not undue hardship on Ontario industries and its workers? What will the cost be to Ontario? What negotiations have been held with the federal government in this regard? Would the Treasurer table any correspondence or other documentation? This is assuming he supports his colleagues in Ottawa's freedom of information bill.

Question number two: What about those 250,000 jobs? What proportion of them will be in Ontario? Which sectors will they be in? Who is monitoring what is happening now that the negotiations have been completed? Where will these people be employed if they are redeployed? What negotiations or plans have been made with the federal government? What are Ontario's plans? Would the minister table any documentation or correspondence in that regard?

Question number three: If redeployment is to occur, what kind of schedule is in place? How soon will the impact of the trade negotiations be felt? Is the 85-86 per cent capacity of manufacturing industries a problem in redeployment? The Treasurer talks about manufacturing being 85-86 per cent utilized, and he seemed to think that is very good. We know you cannot have 100 per cent because of any number of problems.

Does that utilization figure of 85-86 per cent create a problem in terms of other industries absorbing the people who will be shifted from industries hurt by the GATT negotiations? Have successor industries been selected in this redeployment program? Where is the capital to come from? What about regional development? Will redeployment be used to alleviate the present regional underdevelopment in Ontario, particularly in the east and in the north? What about the retraining of workers? Has the Treasurer thought about retraining a lot of these workers, particularly workers who are 50 and over? What kind of program is he putting in place for them? What kind of sharing will there be on retraining? Will the federal government share those retraining costs? What about the obligation to the private sector? What has been done about that? Would the Treasurer table any documentation or correspondence he has in that regard as well?

We know the GATT negotiations are complete, and we know the Treasurer did not negotiate the terms of the agreement. We understand that. But we think he has an obligation to react in a very aggressive and positive way since those negotiations are complete.

We are worried about several sectors. I mentioned textiles. Some people seem to think that textiles and clothing were not affected at all by the negotiations when they were—particularly the man-made fibres. We know that.

Machinery is a major concern. We know we have a deficit of about $4 billion on machinery. It is not very surprising. I was reading a Machinery and Equipment Manufacturers' Association of Canada document. After the GATT negotiations were concluded, this is what Pat Laval, of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association of Canada, had to say:

"I can see no aspect of gain anywhere for us. Overall, we are disappointed. We are rather more apprehensive and pessimistic about the things that will continue to hurt us on the nontariff side. Further, the proposals advanced for tariff reduction in the Canadian automotive sector are not reciprocal in that they do not provide the Canadian parts industry with any increased degree of market access, while at the same time the Canadian market is being further exposed to import competition."

That was the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association of Canada. It may not be the result of the GATT negotiations, but look at the shambles our balance of trade is in with the auto pact right now. Yet this government doesn't even refer to it. When the Treasurer brings down his opening statement, he makes no mention of the real problems facing Ontario.

I think it was the Treasurer or the Minister of Industry and Tourism who, when the GATT negotiations came down and they were talking about machinery, expressed happiness that Canadian companies now would be able to buy machinery more cheaply. Isn't that a sophisticated response? In fact, what it is going to do is increase the deficit on machinery, which is already unacceptable at $4 billion a year. That's no kind of response to make. How is that going to rebuild the machinery industry? It is a key industry—it should be a key one for Ontario—and that kind of response should be made.

I've got another question for the Treasurer; it's number four. What is the long-run projection for jobs and deficits in the auto parts trade with the United States? Does the reduction in tariffs, from 15 per cent to 9.2 per cent, mean more production in the United States and the product simply being sold here?

Has the Treasurer had any meetings with the automotive parts manufacturers' association and the industry to resolve the problem? If so, when? Could he tell us the results, and could he table any documentation?

Question five, concerning machinery and a similar drop in tariffs, from 15 per cent to 9.2 per cent: What are the projections here for deficits and for jobs? How will Canada benefit if we don't have the machinery to export in the first place? How can we turn around that really critical $4-billion deficit? What plans does the government have, if any, to deal with the machinery sector?

Before I leave the issue of freer trade, I do want to express concern that the Treasurer will regard the results of freer trade as just one of those things that shakes things down and guarantees efficiency, makes inefficient industries go under, forces us to take advantage of what's known as the law of comparative advantage, and concentrate on industries that we're strong in.

That's the traditional Adam Smith kind of thinking. It really worries me if these are what the Treasurer's views are. It's our view that the Treasurer simply has to get involved in this whole question of readjustment as a result of the GATT negotiations.

We know that freer trade means 80 per cent free trade with the United States and 90 per cent with our tariffs below five per cent. That's virtually free trade. We hear arguments that our industrial tariffs are averaging nine per cent to 10 per cent, and that puts us at the highest level of industrial tariffs in the world. But we also know that we have the highest volume of duty-free trade in the world as well. It's 63 per cent now, and it's going to go up to 70 per cent as a result of these negotiations.

These aren't just my opinions. There was a fellow by the name of William Cline from the Brookings Institute in the United States, where I'm sure the Treasurer has been invited to speak on numerous occasions. He did a study on who would gain and who would lose from freer trade. He gave Canada a plus score of 62 per cent, compared to 80 per cent for the United States and 96 per cent for the European Economic Community. He saw Canada as gaining less.

More specifically, if we moved towards freer trade, he predicted Canada would lose 45,000 jobs as a result of imports, particularly in the following sectors: machinery, transportation equipment, chemicals, base metals, precision instruments, plastics, rubber and textiles.

One word of caution: When Mr. Cline did that study, he was assuming a bigger reduction, not a complete reduction, but elimination of tariffs in sectors. Nevertheless, there has been a substantial reduction, and we should think about that problem.

There are a number of actions I would like to suggest the Treasurer take. I know he wouldn't want me just to stand up and criticize. He would want me to be specific about what I thought he should do. I think that's fair game; so I will be specific. This is what I'd like the Treasurer to do and, if he needs my advice, I'll be prepared to give it to him.

First, I think he should prepare detailed plans for rebuilding particular sectors. I'll name these somewhat arbitrarily. If the minister has others which he thinks are more important, I'm very flexible. These are machinery in general, particularly things like pollution control machinery, food processing and electrical products. That's number one, namely, to prepare detailed plans on rebuilding particular manufacturing sectors.

Second, he should insist on Canada's fair share under the auto pact. This year we're going to have a $3-billion deficit—probably a little more than that—in the auto pact. We find that unacceptable. I don't know whether the Treasurer was in the House when we asked the Minister of Industry and Tourism about it a week ago. I was appalled with his answer. His words were to the effect, "What do you mean by free trade?" I guess he hadn't read the Ontario government's submission back in 1977, I think it was, which dealt with free trade. They gave their definition of free trade. What did he mean standing up here as a flim-flam man and telling us that he didn't know what free trade is? When we're talking about fair share, we mean in terms of the balance of trade, research and development, skilled jobs and new investment in this country.

Look at General Motors. They made a big production about announcing a $2-billion investment in Ontario. Basically, their investment in Canada is in Ontario. They're making a $38-billion investment in total by the year 1985. We don't think $2 billion is a fair share of that investment.

They talk about the Big Three, which plan to spend $60 billion by 1983. Do we want to use market shares as a criterion? We should be getting more than $5 billion of that. Do we want to bet we get it? The Treasurer knows we won't get that much, unless he knows something I don't—and that's highly unlikely. That works out to about $650 million a year. In the 1970s, we got about $80 million a year. The Treasurer should insist we get our fair share. We have a little deficit on vehicles, but on auto parts alone the deficit this year is going to be more than $4 billion. We think that's outrageous.

Unlike the Treasurer, I think we've got leverage. The Treasurer, the Premier and the Minister of Industry and Tourism, that incredible triumvirate, think we have no leverage. That's why they're getting defeated at the bargaining table year after year. We have leverage. We have a very lucrative market. We are a very important part of the North American automobile market. As a matter of fact, we're a more lucrative market than the one south of the border. If you don't call that leverage, I don't know what is. There are other alternatives as well. That's the other suggestion I have for the Treasurer.

The third suggestion is that government procurement policies be implemented that are aggressive and selective. Currently, the Ontario government has a preference of up to 10 per cent. But the government presides over this policy with benign neglect. There is no better evidence of that than the Grumman Reed purchase in Peel. Does the Treasurer recall that? Does he recall the Peel bid on tenders for a waste recovery plant? The only company bidding was Grumman Ecosystems, a huge American company.

There are Canadian companies that didn't even bother to bid. Even though the Ontario government is putting $10 million into the program, the government sat there and let the one bid take place. What kind of competitive bidding nonsense is that? Does the Treasurer call that a government procurement policy? That is outrageous, simply outrageous; yet the government sat back and let it happen.

I read a federal government study on procurement policy, in which they selected one category; I believe it was called communications equipment. They looked at that and said, given all the factors involved, you could have—and this sounded high to me when I first read it—you could have a procurement advantage of 76 per cent, and it would still pay you to buy Canadian with that product. They said that because it must be labour-intensive; it must be high-technology; the government must be a large buyer; there must be a high Canadian content of the parts that go into it; and it must be in the wealth-creating sector such as manufacturing.

When we do that, the spin-off benefits are enormous. My colleague from Downs-view (Mr. di Santo) raised this in the Legislature; my leader raised it in the legislation; it was raised in the estimates of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism last week. Mr. Chairman, do you know what that incredible minister said? He said, "Are you saying the taxpayers should pay 76 per cent more?" What kind of response is that? He didn't know what he was talking about, and he was just trying to cover up with that kind of nonsense.

That was an area where it was a good sector; it was a great future in the waste recovery field, and it would have given the Canadian companies a foothold in an industry of the future. If any one company in Canada couldn't put together the necessary expertise to do it, this government had an obligation—and this is where we differ from the Tories—this government had an obligation to say to the three companies that were capable of doing some work on it, "Tell you what: We will help you form a consortium to do this." That is what we have to do. If we just sit back, we are encouraging the status quo; we are exacerbating the problem. What is the sense of having a government procurement policy that is not active but accepts the status quo?

Why didn't either the Minister of the Environment or the Minister of Industry and Tourism—or even the Treasurer if they insist on not getting involved—say: "Hold the phones. We are not going to allow one bid from an American company get this, there must be Canadian companies that can do this job. And if one can't, we will work with you to ensure that that job is done here in Ontario or some place else in Canada." What a sad joke for a procurement policy the government has.

The fourth thing I wish the Treasurer would do is reduce foreign ownership in the Ontario economy. The Treasurer and I may have some common ground on some of the issues I have talked about today or will talk about. But I suspect on this one we are poles apart. I know the Treasurer sees and thinks that there is a need for capital out there, supposedly to create jobs and to pay for our deficits on the current account. What we say is that either we reverse this trend of selling out our wealth, or we guarantee ourselves that we will be perpetually on a treadmill of ever-increasing current account deficits, which can only be paid for by selling out more of our wealth. That is a treadmill, and we want to get off it. Even a casual examination of the figures shows that this is true. In the last five or six years the problem has become increasingly serious. It is not just the fervent nationalists who are talking about it and are worried about it.

In my casual reading I picked up a document from a company called Pitfield, Mackay, Ross. It may be the broker for my colleague from London—who knows? Pitfield, Mackay, Ross is expressing some concern about what is happening as well. I quote; this is dated August 1979. "Over the last decade the deficit of manufactured goods trade has risen from $3 billion to $13 billion"—they are using $13 billion—"primarily on account of import growth."

Do you hear that, Mr. Treasurer, import growth? You don't think import replacement is the answer; you think global product mandating is. That's a laugh.

Pitfield, Mackay, Ross goes on: "It is interesting to note that the merchandise trade surplus had stopped growing and began to decline prior to the most recent slowing in the US economy. Additionally, the evidence is that large-scale devaluation has produced no measurable improvement in our overall trade balance." Think about that, if you will, Mr. Treasurer. "Further, our projections anticipate sharply-reduced merchandise trade surpluses this year and next, in response to the US recession. We would point out that these estimates are quite a conservative measure of the difficulties that can materialize on merchandise accounts.

"Historically"—get this—"US recessions have produced actual deficits in the Canadian merchandise trade balance." That means not only is our service deficit going to be growing like crazy, we are now going to have a deficit on our merchandise account. What are you going to do then? Sell off more; that's what you will do because you are bankrupt of policies on economic self-determination. You are nowhere. You have nothing to say on it.

Finally: "The large and rapidly-growing deficit on service accounts presents a more fundamental problem than do the merchandise account difficulties. The service account is not at all amenable to large or rapid improvement. Foreign borrowing and interest payments are the driving forces behind the service account problem." Well, we knew that.

"The exceptional levels of foreign borrowing required to finance both the current account deficit and a large-scale flight of capital are having a predictable impact on foreign indebtedness. We estimate that outstanding foreign debt had risen to $43 billion at the end of last year, compared to $20 billion three years earlier and $14 billion five years ago.

"The debt-service burden associated with this borrowing has been rising exponentially. Interest payments last year amounted to $3.4 billion, compared to $1 billion five years ago."

There are lots of statistics to indicate what is happening to our economy and those are just some of them.

I will give you services account balance alone—just services. In 1974 it was minus $3.7 billion, and the prediction is $9.6 billion for 1979 and over $10 billion for next year. That is services alone. That has to be paid for and you know how it is paid for: by selling out even more.

Those are Pitfield, Mackay, Ross figures. Burns, Fry Limited figures are even more frightening. As a matter of fact, when I read the Burns, Fry figures I thought, "You can't even have economic and social stability if those kinds of figures are ever realized." I am talking about what they produced last year. The Treasurer had better be thinking about that.

There is one other ominous sign that bothers me a great deal and that is the whole impact of oil-price increases on our balance of payments. Ontario is the economic heartland of this country and we should be very worried about it because—let's face it—every dollar that goes to the company with the oil price increase goes to one of two places. It goes into new investment—and that is going to demand a return in the future—or it goes, in the form of profits or dividends, back to the almost entirely foreign owners.

I can see an increase problem with the increased price in oil and gas. It is going to increase our foreign indebtedness, either in the form of dividends in the future or in interest and dividend payments today. It will be one or the other; there is no other place for it to go.

What is Ontario's response to this problem? It is approval of virtually every application that comes before the Foreign Investment Review Agency. It approves virtually everyone, including the ones in the high technology areas. You should really be ashamed of that. Don't tell us it creates jobs.

I was looking at figures for just the last five years—from March 1974 to March 1979. Does the minister know how much has gone out of this country in interest and dividend payments? It's $18.2 billion. That is not a figure I am proud of. The Treasurer sits over there along with the Minister of Industry and Tourism and they approve virtually every application before FIRA, whether it's a new investment or whether it is a takeover of an existing one. It's the lack of selectivity; it's just a virtual blank cheque. Let them fill it in, it doesn't matter.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism sent me over the form they use when they are evaluating whether or not they should approve a new takeover or a new investment. It's like a form one would give a group of grade seven students on a field trip. Did they see any dogs; did they see any groundhogs; what did they see? It's silly and it doesn't do an analysis of the impact on the Ontario economy at all. It's a total and outright copout.

It is outrageous to sell off our future that way, because that's what's happening with the high technology goods, but the Treasurer doesn't seem to understand that. We're just going to have to run faster and faster simply to hold our own as the years go by.

The other thing that ties in with that is the interest rate policy. It is madness. The Treasurer supports the high interest rate policy of the federal government.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I never did.

Mr. Laughren: We didn't object to it. And the Minister of Industry and Tourism said, "It's one of those things we have to live with in the short term." I have a speech he made indicating this. I presume the Treasurer wouldn't disagree with his good friend and colleague the Minister of Industry and Tourism, so I have to make the assumption that he agrees with it as well.

We know the theory behind it—about paying for the current account deficit and so forth. But the higher the deficit, the more money we are going to need to attract. In order to attract all that we need a higher interest rate and the higher the interest rate differential will have to be with the United States. It's stupidity beyond belief.

Let me say in more specific terms what I think the minister should do. I know there are ramifications in my suggestions; I am not that silly. But I am saying he should fight for lower interest rates first of all. If we won, we know what would happen. Imports would cost more because the value of the Canadian dollar would drop. If the Treasurer sees a flaw in my logic I wish he would tell me.

There will be fewer imports therefore. Because of fewer imports we will start to rebuild our domestic industries. As we rebuild those key sectors we will start to meet domestic demand for those products and that will reduce imports.

Then, as we build up those domestic industries we develop the expertise and the economies of scale and the first thing we know we are breaking into world markets. Then he can say with some legitimacy we believe in global product mandating because we think now we can compete on world markets with these exports. That is what the Treasurer should be doing. At the same time he reduces the dependency on foreign capital. That's my fourth suggestion.

My fifth suggestion to the Treasurer is that he examine very carefully—obtain independent and objective opinions and make them public—a report on the role of the public sector in the economic development of Ontario.

The Treasurer is an avowed free enterpriser, but I suspect even he understands that there is a role for the public sector in today's world. I suspect the Treasurer agrees with his Premier, for example, that Petrocan should stay in place. I suspect the Treasurer doesn't disagree with the Premier in that regard. Surely the Treasurer would agree that blind, dogmatic, sectarian ideology has no place in the decision-making process necessary to re-inforce and rebuild the Ontario economy.

We New Democrats say to the Treasurer that for social and economic reasons there is a critical role for the public sector in economic development in Ontario. We have been saying for some time—and I know this won't surprise the Treasurer—that the resources belong in the public sector.

Saskatchewan provides a model of how government and the private sector can work together. The revenues from the resource sector are enormous and quite frankly they make Ontario's revenues look sick. Exploration in Saskatchewan is many times that of the exploration going on in Ontario now. In September, the Financial Post held a conference on Saskatchewan resource development—I think there were something like 600 people attending the conference. The private sector there expressed some very positive views on working with the public sector. They said that once you know the rules of the game, it's fine; they were really quite happy. And the revenues are flowing into the Saskatchewan government.

This government prefers what they would regard as purity of free enterprise. I think it's the poverty of free enterprise, when I think of resources. That blindness the Treasurer has costs us millions of dollars in resource revenues. It costs us thousands of jobs. It causes a boom-and-bust economy in resource-based communities in the north and we still have no strategy at all.

We allow our iron ore mines to be closed out while we import our iron ore. We allow large companies to stockpile nickel and then precipitate a strike while they work on their inventories. We allow the resource industries to extract the ore until it is depleted, then shut down and virtually steal off into the night, leaving a town to fend for itself. We allow resource companies to export the raw material for processing elsewhere. That costs us thousands of jobs.

We allow resource companies to invest $1 billion in other jurisdictions. That's money that was earned here and we continue to receive a pitiful amount of revenues from the resource sector; I think it's less than $40 million and there's $2 billion worth of minerals extracted in Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, I am telling the Treasurer that we need public-sector involvement in the resource industries. It simply has to come because the present state of affairs is costing Ontario too much in the loss of revenues, thousands of jobs and a more industrialized economy. The Treasurer can take comfort, if he likes, in the assurances of the Ontario Mining Association, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the chamber of commerce and the Rotary Club, but he's fundamentally wrong in leaving the resources in the private sector.

There are other areas. I don't want to just dwell on the resources, but I will tell you something. The summary for me—the way I think about it, at least, and the way this party thinks about it—is that you don't find us running around saying we would bring every conceivable operation into the public sector. We are very thoughtful about it. But if the private sector abandons an industry, or a sector, or neglects it, we think there's an obligation for the public sector to move in, close that gap and rectify the problem. That's what we believe.

I will give you, as an example, the aerospace industry. When the federal government bought de Havilland—I guess it was in 1974—it was too risky an industry for this country—an industry, not just a company but an industry. Other countries realize that. Every country has public involvement in the aerospace industry except the United States and they have put so much public money into it they virtually have a stake in it as well.

Canada must remain a presence in the aerospace industry. If the federal government insists on disposing of de Havilland, then the Ontario government has an obligation to step in and be prepared to buy it to ensure we retain that sector here in Canada. To us it is important that there be a public presence in the aerospace industry, because of the engineering research, the jobs, the skills, all the research and development that spin off benefits into other sectors. And they're spun off into other critical sectors, too—mass transit, pollution control, industrial machinery, electronics, and all the spinoff benefits in industries that live off the aerospace industry. There are only 4,800 employees at de Havilland, but that company alone supports about 10,000 because of contracting out to other companies.

It would be very nice to have government leverage when it comes to negotiations, such as are being conducted right now over the new fighter aircraft. We think the de Havilland company is especially critical. It is a world leader in its field. It is a successful company. It had the infusion of public money already—$38.8 million the federal government paid for it—and it has put another $89 million into it for development of the Dash 7 alone.

Mr. Williams: Why don't you support the Dash 7?

Mr. Laughren: We do support the Dash 7.

De Havilland is a world leader in the development of STOL aircraft. It has an exciting future and we must not let it be sold to the likes of Boeing or even to the Alberta heritage fund, which was a rumoured purchaser for heaven's sake. It is important to Ontario. The federal government is not prepared to extract any guarantees at all from any potential buyer—on research and development, on jobs in Ontario, on including the further development of the Dash 7.

Maybe the Treasurer could stand in his place and tell me if he agrees we should just let de Havilland be sold without any guarantees on Canadian ownership, or on research and development expenditures, on technical excellence, on jobs. It is very strange the Treasurer will go to that degree to support his colleagues in Ottawa.

The third example of the need for a public-sector presence is in mining machinery. I have a passion for mining machinery. The private sector has chosen to neglect it. We are second in the world in mineral production; we are third in the world in consumption of mining machinery; and we are first in the world in importing mining machinery. We simply have to correct that.

Ninety-one per cent of the mining machinery industry consumed in this country is imported. That is a $400 million market. If the private sector neglects an industry like that, one that is so critical—we have a domestic market here—that argument can't be used. Much smaller countries have surpluses on mining machinery, countries that don't have our resource base. Yet here we are with an enormous deficit in mining machinery. That is simply a disgrace. That the Treasurer can sit there and let the invisible hand of the marketplace look after that problem leaves me cold. The Treasurer also should not forget this deficit on mining machinery contributes to that enormous debt on manufactured goods.

There are other examples, but at this point I would like to ask the Treasurer some very specific questions. This is question number six in case he has lost track. What plans does the Treasurer have to increase revenues from resource extraction? Does he intend to leave the processing exemption in place for Falconbridge?

They're having a very good year this year; they've had more than 45 years in Sudbury without a refinery.

What about the iron mines? Does he intend to allow the private sector to continue to close iron ore mines while importing ores from the United States?

What plan does he have for the one-industry resource-based communities in the north?

Does he think profitability is the only criteria for deciding whether or not to close a mine?

What input has he had, as Treasurer, into the cabinet committee on northern communities that was announced by the Premier? Will he provide us some documentation on that?

I think the Treasurer was chairman of that committee at one time, when it was first formed. It was nothing but puffery. The last time we checked it it had never met and that's about two years ago.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It met many times.

Mr. Laughren: If it did meet, would the minister table the minutes and tell us what went on? Nobody else knew it had met, that's very interesting.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It was a cabinet committee. I chaired many meetings.

Mr. Laughren: That's your ultimate out, isn't it? Yes. I'll believe that when I see the minutes.

Concerning the aerospace industry and de Havilland in particular, does the Treasurer agree with his Premier and the Ministry of Industry and Tourism that it's just fine for the federal government to sell de Havilland with no guarantees of any kind? What representation has he made to the federal government on guarantees to protect jobs in Ontario?

Will the Treasurer assure us he will be part of any negotiations to dispose of de Havilland? Will he assure us that he will not allow it to be sold to foreign interests? Will the Treasurer assure us that it will not be sold to anyone without a guarantee that the funds will be provided to proceed with development and production of the new Dash X—I think there's another name for it and I've forgotten it—the new 30-seat STOL aircraft.

On this particular matter, could the Treasurer confide in us in this chamber to how the Premier could assure us there'd be guarantees when the federal government said there'd be none? How did the Premier stand in his place one day during question period and tell us there'd be guarantees to protect Ontario jobs when the federal minister, Mr. de Cotret, said, "There will be no guarantees"? Perhaps the Treasurer could sort out that seeming inconsistency between Ottawa and Queen's Park.

Eight: Regarding mining machinery—I'm almost finished—does the Treasurer think it appropriate for us, a world leader in mining, to be number one in the importing of mining machinery? Is the Treasurer aware that in a recent trade show in Sudbury, only about $40 million of equipment was represented, out of a potential market of $400 million? Will the Treasurer assure us that the private sector will be told to either produce their machinery domestically or go into joint ventures with the government?

If the private sector fails to fill this disgraceful gap in the machinery sector, will the Treasurer undertake to put in place a crown corporation that will do it? Would the Treasurer not agree that a mining machinery complex in the north would reduce regional disparities, reduce the deficit of the current account, provide thousands of jobs, and reduce the dependency of places like Sudbury on their mines?

Mr. Chairman, I've asked the Treasurer eight specific questions to which we expect answers. I have put forth to him specific economic suggestions or strategies. We shall pursue some of them in more detail as we proceed through the estimates debate but we are very serious about our suggestions and we expect more than the traditional bland assurances from the Treasurer.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Gregory, the committee of supply reported progress.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

(See page 4814)

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

REVIEW OF MINISTRY SERVICES

227. Mr. Philip: Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications table a list of local reviews which are taking place for MTC services which may eventually be contracted out to the private sector? (Tabled October 11, 1979.)

278. Mr. Philip: Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications specifically list which areas of operation of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications are currently undergoing review with a possibility of contracting out to the private sector? (Tabled October 11, 1979.)

279. Mr. Philip: Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications table a list of consulting firms which have undertaken an analysis of comparable service costs of the private and public sector? Will the minister table these reports? (Tabled October 11, 1979.)

280. Mr. Philip: Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications table a list of all studies undertaken by the ministry in its review of service costs between the private and public sector? Will the minister make available these documents? (Tabled October 11, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Snow: On question 277: Over the past year or so the ministry has investigated the possibility of privatizing some services. These investigations have varied from a fairly comprehensive study to local initiatives in contracting operational activities. Examples of these are equipment repair operations, snowploughing, sign shop, laboratory testing; also weed spraying, tree planting, grass mowing, seeding, surveying and inspection, signal installation and repair, sand screening, illumination maintenance. Since circumstances change over time it can be appreciated that the review of these operations will be a continuing process.

In question 278: The only areas undergoing a ministry-wide review are equipment repair operations and snowploughing to determine which parts of either operation may be contracted out.

On question 279: No consulting firms have been engaged by the ministry to carry out a study regarding the privatization of ministry services.

On question 280: As noted in the reply to question 277, local reviews of small operations are an ongoing activity but do not culminate in a formal report study. Two studies that have been completed are the Report on the Ministry's Reprographic Centre and A Report on Ministry Microfilming Operations. If a copy of these reports is desired, the ministry would be pleased to provide a copy.

MINISTRY ADVERTISING

Mr. Grande: Will the ministry provide a list of the amount of funds spent on advertising in non-official language press and media for each fiscal year since 1975-76? Will the ministry break down the amounts by ministry, program and name of media or press which carried government advertisements and announcements? (Tabled October 16, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The ethnic media totals in the following summary have been reported by the agency-of-record through the Ministry of Industry and Tourism communications division and cover the period April 1975 to September 30, 1979.

PUBLIC SERVICE SALARIES

350. Mr. Bolan: Are there any groups of public servants of the province of Ontario, including provincial court judges, whose average salary increments over the last four and two-thirds years have averaged less than $860 per annum? If so, what are the groups? (Tabled November 13, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McCague: The information requested will require additional time to prepare. A response is expected on or about January 14, 1980.

351. Mr. Bolan: Is there any group of public servants of the province of Ontario, including provincial court judges, in respect of whom there is no machinery available for an annual adjustment or review of their salaries? If so, what are the groups? (Tabled November 13, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McCague: No. All groups are subject to an annual or regular review of salaries.

For groups subject to collective bargaining under the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act, review dates are established by the term or duration of the collective agreements applicable to each group (i.e. category contract).

Prior to this year, modules in the management compensation plan, including the program executive plan, were on an annual review cycle of October 1, January 1 or April 1, depending on the specific category. With revisions granted on April 1, 1979, all groups are now on an annual cycle of April 1st. Next review is April 1, 1980.

Salary reviews of provincial judges have been annual on October 1 each year.

Salaries of deputy ministers and related positions were subject to an annual review on October 1. Similar to other management and excluded groups, this has been changed to an April 1 review.

352. Mr. Bolan: Would the minister responsible inform the House what has been the amount of the average actual increment on an annual basis of deputy ministers during the past four and two-thirds years? (Tabled November 13, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McCague: The approximate date information is available is January 14, 1980.

WCB MEDICAL SERVICES

353. Mr. Grande: Will the Minister of Labour table the following information: 1. (a) Surgical consultants with the WCB who have opted out of OHIP in the years 1977-78-79. (b) Total number of surgical consultants for the years 1977-78-79. (c) Names and qualifications of surgical consultants for the years 1977-78-79. 2. Number of medical reports from specialists who have opted out of OHIP for the years 1977-78-79. 3. Number of medical specialist reports for the years 1977-78-79. 4. The amount of dollars paid out to specialists for the years 1977-78-79. (Tabled November 13, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Elgie: 1. (a) No surgical consultants with the Workmen's Compensation Board have opted out of OHIP in 1977, 1978, or 1979. (b) There were four surgical consultants for the years 1977, 1978, and 1979. (c) Dr. Peter Hopper, DRCOG, FRCS(C), Dr. Brian Doyle, FRCS(C), Dr. Edward Macfarlane, FRCS(C), Dr. Harold Jackson, FRCS(Edin.), FRCS(C).

2. The Workmen's Compensation Board has no way of knowing how many medical reports were received from specialists who have opted out of OHIP for the years 1977-78-79. When a specialist undertakes to treat a workman under the auspices of the Workmen's Compensation Act, he agrees to accept the board's schedule of fees and is paid accordingly. His relationship with OHIP is in no way a part of that decision.

3. Attached is a list, Medical Aid by Specialty Groups for 1977-78. The Workmen's Compensation Board does not record the number of specialists' reports received as it has no use for this data. However, it might be said that the number of reports received equals the number of accounts, but this would only be a guess as a physician could see a patient three or four times and submit a report for each visit, but only submit one account.

4. The amount of dollars paid out to specialists is as outlined on the attached sheets for 1977-78.

With respect to questions 3 and 4, there is, as yet, no complete data for 1979 as year end figures are obviously not yet available.

---

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee of the whole.

LOCAL SERVICES BOARDS ACT (concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 122, An Act to provide for the Establishment of Local Services Boards.

On section 24:

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman I hope we will be able to complete this bill this evening. In fact, I'm certain we will. When we left off it was on a rather sour note in that the minister and members of the opposition who were mostly taking part in the debate got into a dispute over why we were taking so long over this piece of legislation.

As a matter of fact, the minister seemed to indicate one of the reasons for the delay in getting this passed was the attempt by the NDP and Liberal critics to amend certain sections of the act and protract the debate on those sections, one being section 24.

I understand in our discussion of section 24(1), the member for Nipissing (Mr. Bolan) quite rightly and certainly in a moral sense indicated there was a need to increase the funding formula from one for one to two for one. It's unfortunate the rules of the House, as interpreted by the chair, led to the decision that his proposed amendment to subsection 1 was out of order.

I support his position on that and wish the minister would listen to the arguments made by the opposition. I hope he would see the inherent wisdom in them and come to the conclusion that it would be best for all concerned and the best way to expedite the passage of this bill if he were to himself amend the bill to change the funding formula.

I don't have anything further to add to subsection 1, but I do have some comments on subsection 2.

Mr. Bolan: On subsection 1, very briefly.

All the pearls of wisdom we have tried to give this government over the past few weeks during the debate on this bill have fallen on deaf ears. I'm not going to repeat them again. However, I will try to elicit from you a specific answer.

What criteria are required to be met by the individual boards when they come to you for funding? You don't spell it out in the legislation. You're saying they may, out of funds appropriated by the Legislature, do this, this and that. Although I don't agree with the position the government has taken, nevertheless that's it.

It's a money feature of the bill and there is nothing we can do about it. But that being the case, what will your policy be with respect to local services boards which apply to your ministry for funding?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the desires of the members on all sides of the House to move this bill ahead. I know their enthusiasm to get it operational. We've come this far and we might as well complete it. As the honourable member knows, the amendment submitted by the member for Nipissing was ruled out of order by the Chairman. However, he has asked a question as to what will be the criteria for funding.

The funding is very simple. The boards can raise funds through their own efforts—with town bazaars, fall fairs, bingos, hockey pools, anything—by which an unorganized community can raise funds. Those of us who live in unorganized communities know there are a variety of ways, providing those funds are used for the operational requirements of the services they will be administering to the respective areas to which they're providing services.

If they choose to go the other route of piggy-backing on the provincial land tax for the operational aspect of those services, then we will match dollar for dollar. There is no question about it; no problem. It's so simple it's pathetic. If the honourable members are going to play politics I would say make it four to one—make it really attractive.

The local roads boards, as I said in my earlier comments, are not an autonomous body. They are advisory boards to the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. They pass on their funds to the MTC. This will be an autonomous body. They will do what they want with their funding as it relates to the improvement of the quality of life in those unorganized communities.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Wildman moves that section 24(2) of the bill be amended by inserting after the word "two" in the third line, the word "twice."

Are there any comments?

Mr. Wildman: I want to emphasize at the outset that, in this amendment, I am not requiring the government to spend any money. The Legislature, if it were to pass this amendment, as I hope it will, is not requiring the government to allocate money.

I anticipate the arguments that may be made, so I would like the Chairman to refer to rule 15 under the standing orders which states, "Any bill, resolution, motion or address, the passage of which would impose a tax or specifically direct the allocation of public funds, shall not be passed by the House unless recommended by a message from the Lieutenant Governor, and shall be proposed only by a minister of the crown." I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that in this amendment we are not imposing a tax, certainly; neither are we specifically directing the allocation of public funds. We are simply giving the government the option, if they so desire at some future date, themselves to allocate public funds. But at no time are we directing them to do so.

I would emphasize that the subsection as it now reads says, "The minister may pay to the board annually out of the moneys appropriated therefor by the Legislature, an amount equal to . . ." All I am simply suggesting is a change which would give the minister the option, if he wished, to give money equal to twice the amount.

If we pass this amendment, we are at no time ordering the government to allocate funds. This would at least give the government the option of providing two for one, if they wished. We are not requiring it. We are suggesting to the minister that if he has decided that he doesn't want the bill to state that he must give two for one, all right, we will accept that—we accept it reluctantly, but we accept it. Certainly we want to give him the option that if he at some future date realizes it might be a good idea to give two for one for a specific service being provided by a particular board, or for that matter for all of them, if he decided that was a good thing he could then go to two for one, either on an individual basis or across the board.

Again, the decision would be the government's. It is not something that would be decided here or is being decided here. I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that in considering this proposed amendment you would really take into account the fact this is permissive. For that matter, I would hope the minister would realize it is permissive. He has made a great deal out of this whole bill by pointing out the fact—and we support the fact—that the whole bill is permissive.

The minister states that one of the great advantages of this bill is it does not force the community in an unorganized area to form a local services board. This bill gives them the option to make an agreement with the government for the formation of a local services board. The bill itself doesn't order the government or the people in the unorganized areas to form a board and to collect moneys and to spend them, or to provide services. We are simply expanding that option, that whole philosophy of the permissiveness of this bill, in proposing this amendment.

I am certain, considering the arguments that have been made by the minister previously, that he could certainly accept this amendment and I would hope that he would do so. I would hope that you will rule it in order, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, in the interest of time, I would like to assure members on all sides of the House that I will accept the honourable member's amendment. I think it is presented in a very positive way and a very constructive way. Being one of those individuals who wants to do all he can for the unorganized communities, I accept it with enthusiasm.

Motion agreed to.

Section 24, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 25 to 27, inclusive agreed to.

[8:15]

On section 28:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bernier moves that section 28 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"A board may incur a debt for the purposes of the board, but shall not incur any debt, the payment of which is not provided for in the estimates for the current fiscal year of the board unless,

"(a) it is a debt owed to the crown in right of Ontario, or;

"(b) the purpose for which the debt is to be incurred and the amount thereof is approved by a majority vote of the inhabitants present and voting at a meeting called for the purpose and the approval of the minister to incurring of the debt is obtained."

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I think this was discussed at our last session. We reviewed the comments and the suggestions of the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) and the member for Algoma. The member for Nipissing also made comment on this. This will allow the boards to enter into some longer term contracts. I would have to say we think it has merit. It may lend to certain efficiencies and we would like to advance it and hope the honourable members will support it.

Mr. Martel: Might I make a few comments? I appreciate why the minister moved this amendment because I think it clarifies the points we were concerned with. It is interesting, this is going to be an all-party bill by the time the minister gets done. I hope as he travels across northern Ontario he indicates the forthright manner in which the bill was debated.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'll be the first one.

Mr. Martel: You will be the first one. I am waiting to see in that report, what is it called—your publication?

Mr. Wildman: The Backgrounder.

Mr. Martel: Yes, The Backgrounder. I hope I will see that in The Backgrounder, when the next issue comes out. Usually all I see are three or four pictures of the minister.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Refer to us as the Legislature.

Mr. Martel: No, no, I want you to be more specific than that. For a change, aside from all the pictures of the minister giving out cheques, you might consider—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't have the photographer here who can get a picture of all of us together.

Mr. Martel: That would be a good idea. It would certainly be a change. I think the bill is taking more shape as we go along. It is slowly being amended and with its acceptance, it will not have to go through a division and be voted on and whatnot.

I think this has improved what we were concerned about. Although the minister indicated what he wanted the other night, it certainly wasn't in the bill. So having reviewed this, my colleagues and I find this much more acceptable than the original section 28. As I say, Mr. Minister, this is going to be an all-party bill by the time you are done.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, I want to concur briefly with the comments of my colleague from Sudbury East. As the minister knows, I informed him earlier that prior to his introduction of this amendment I was going to introduce an amendment deleting section 28 altogether.

Since the minister has proposed this amendment, which really deals with the concerns raised by my colleague and myself and others in the House, although it still maintains a situation where the minister has some control over what decisions are made in terms of incurring debts I think most reasonable people would agree the ministry should be able to have some say in that sort of thing, especially since if there were to be a default, it would be a question as to who was responsible.

Again, I would concur with this and say, from my point of view as well, the amendment is acceptable.

Motion agreed to.

Section 28, as amended, agreed to.

On section 29:

Mr. Wildman: I would move an amendment to section 29(1). I apologize for the condition of it, Mr. Chairman, but I had to change it as a result of some changes that took place in other sections of the bill.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Wildman moves that subsection 1 of section 29 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "(1) A board shall engage an official of the ministry designated for the purpose by the minister to audit the accounts and transactions of the board and to make a report to it annually, or more often as the board requires."

Mr. Wildman: The purpose of this amendment is simply to give the ministry a greater responsibility with regard to the annual or semi-annual public accounting of the boards' activities. It seems to me it might be rather expensive for a board to engage a public accountant, especially when we are talking about some boards that may have a very limited income and a very limited function. It would seem to me it would be far easier for all concerned if the ministry were to make one of its officials available for the carrying out of an audit.

It has been suggested to me that one of the problems with this proposed amendment is that it would be taking away from the autonomy the minister has commented so much about during this debate that he wishes each board to have. I really can't understand that argument because surely the audit, which would be carried out as the present section is worded by a public accountant, would be available to the ministry. It's the ministry that's requiring the audit and I agree with that. I think the boards' books must be audited.

It is the ministry that is saying, however, that the audit must take place. I suppose one could argue that was somehow limiting the autonomy of the board since the ministry is imposing an obligation on the board to carry out an audit. Since the ministry is going to do that and the board, at the behest of the ministry is going to have to carry out an audit, it seems to me it would be far easier for all concerned to have the ministry provide an official to do that work for the board.

Initially, when I was looking at this section and trying to figure out how we could try to limit the cost to the board, I thought perhaps we could have some system where the ministry could tender out the audits for a number of boards across the north to be carried out by an auditor—a number of boards at once—which would probably lower the cost and in that way limit the expenditure required of the board. However, I frankly didn't see how we could word that. I didn't see how we could word an obligation under an act requiring the ministry to tender out such an auditing process. So I came to the conclusion that the ministry itself could do it.

At one point it was also suggested to me the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs might do it. But I shied away from that, as I know the minister would, because of the interpretation that might be put on it—that it would be saying we're getting the municipal affairs people involved in something and this isn't a municipality and we don't want it to appear to be a municipality.

It is my understanding that in terms of a local services board, where there is a requirement for audits the Ministry of Transportation and Communications does do a great deal in assisting in this process and also in assisting the local roads boards in operating in general. I would hope there is the same sort of relationship between MNA and the local services boards.

For those reasons, I would hope the members of the Legislature would consider very carefully this amendment and pass it to ensure the boards could carry out an audit annually or more often as is required and requested by the ministry, but at little or no cost to the board itself.

Mr. Bolan: I can appreciate the concerns expressed by the member for Algoma. However, I think if we are going to try to leave some autonomy with these boards we should have an independent auditor look at the books. I am not suggesting for one minute if a ministry official were to go in he would cook the books. But I have said in this House many times there must be the appearance that everything is in order. I think the only way for it to be exhibited as such is for an independent auditor to be appointed.

When we are dealing with the examination of books it should be as independent as one can possibly make it. There is a cost involved and I can appreciate that. However, I think the problems or suspicions even, which may result by not having an independent auditor far outweigh the actual costs.

I can appreciate the member's concern. However, we will support the government on this amendment.

Mr. Martel: I understand what my colleague's concern is about and I am sure the minister does. If one looks at the audit for the very simple funding for members of the Legislature for election expenses, I think, the audits start at about $500. That is the fee we pay under that act.

I don't know what it costs to get an auditor. Let us estimate it is $500. We know the budgets of many of the small local services boards aren't going to be that high and I listened carefully to what my friend from Nipissing was saying. If they had to take, say, $500 out of an annual budget, then in some of the smaller local services board areas where there are maybe 50 or 60 families the ministry would be taking a major chunk of the budget away from them and they would not be getting any services.

I know my friend from Nipissing is aware of that, because some of those unorganized townships don't have more than 40, 50 or 60 families in them. If they have to put out anywhere from $300 to $500—and, as I say, I know that under the elections expenses legislation, it is $500 to the auditor—you could well make it nearly impossible for them to perform any functions within the local services boards you're attempting to establish simply because of an inadequate base on which to get funding. They're going to have to try to raise it.

Again, I'm not certain what the costs of auditors are. I only go by the election expenses legislation. My friend from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) has complained vigorously of the cost to us and our riding associations with respect to the audit. If they have to take $500 off the top then for these local services boards with merely a handful of people in some of them the audit could cost more than the limited funds that are available to get a street light.

I think my colleague raises a good point. I understand the concern of the member for Nipissing that it would have to be independent. None the less, if they eat up a major portion of their budget—and I've seen local roads boards budgets that aren't any more than $1,000—if they have to use half of it on an audit, it doesn't really leave very much with which to bring some improvement to these small communities.

[8:30]

I don't know whether our amendment is the answer. My colleague has said he didn't know how to wrestle with the problem, but it is something the ministry has to grapple with because we might deter some of those small boards from even being able to proceed. They are just going to be strapped for money, as we know. It might be the ministry might provide the funding for the audit, though not on that one-for-one or possible two-for-one formula. In fact, the minister might say, "We will pay for the audit and let them hire their own independent auditor." My colleague was stuck because of his concern and how we could do it without incurring those costs.

I would ask the minister to consider something here because I think it could be pretty devastating.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I want to say I appreciate the honourable member's concerns. When we discussed this question with UCANO, we went into it in great detail. UCANO was very strong in saying there had to be some check on an annual basis.

Let's be honest. The toughest thing to control in a small community is the funds. There is always a question mark, always suspicion and always unanswered questions. They felt very strongly they should have an audit.

I have to say something in all sincerity about our doing the audit. We felt, and UCANO felt also, they wanted that autonomy. They didn't want to be under our umbrella all the time. They felt there should be some independence. They felt the auditor should report directly to the community or to the organization, not to the minister. The local people are interested in the audit; they are the ones the auditor should answer to.

We looked at all the things that were brought forward by the communities in our discussion with them across northern Ontario. I think it is fair to say we will examine the budgets; there is no question about that. As they come in to us, we will look at their figures.

Since we are funding them, we also didn't want to get involved in a conflict. Certainly, as the member for Nipissing made note, there is that suspicion when government does it and this type of thing.

We looked at MTC. MTC does random checks now. It doesn't do an audit on every local roads board because it has become expensive. Whether we pay through the provincial Treasury or through the local services board for an audit, it is the same people who pay. It may be somewhere down the line, but they pay anyway.

After some very careful consideration, we felt very strongly an independent audit was the route to go. We looked at some vehicles we could use and we came up with two of them. Intergovernmental Affairs is drafting and coming forward with a very simple, uniform set of bookkeeping procedures. They will be fairly uniform right across the local services boards and as simple as possible and easy to understand.

We have examined already the possibility of encouraging some audit firms to look at those accounting procedures and become very familiar with them. Then we would try to steer the local services board. We couldn't appoint an auditor, but we could say, "Look, here are two or three auditors who are interested in doing all the local services boards within a given area."

We used to do this with the school boards. I was secretary-treasurer of the Hudson-Big Vermilion-Drayton-Jordan school township or whatever it was—it was a long name anyway. At that time, I was the local assessor. I was in charge of the school. I hired and fired all the teachers. It seemed to me I did everything.

It wasn't a very pleasant job at the time, I must admit.

At that time, as small communities, we all used one single auditor in Thunder Bay. He made it known he was very familiar with the operations of small school boards and was anxious to get their business. We sent our books down to him and he had them back to us in record time at a very nominal cost. It worked out very well.

It is that principle we would like to implement with the local services boards so that we would encourage some local auditors to become familiar with their workings. We would ask them as much as we could to be reasonable in their costs. We are going so far as to say to the local services boards, "We will pay one for one on the auditing expenses."

Mr. Martel: Are you going to do that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, we will share the cost on a 50-50 basis for the audit. That's understood. That will take care of some of the extra cost to which the member referred. I appreciate his comments.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments on the amendment?

All those in favour please say "aye."

All those opposed please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, since that amendment was lost, I should withdraw the earlier amendment I made to subsection 1, which was stacked by agreement last time.

Section 29 agreed to.

Sections 30 to 34, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 35:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Bernier moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following section:

“35. Section 21 of the Provincial Land Tax Act, being chapter 370 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1970, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

“(4) In determining for the purposes of subsection 3 the annual tax imposed under this act, no account shall be taken of any tax imposed pursuant to the Local Services Boards Act, 1979,” and that the present sections 35 and 36 of the bill be renumbered as sections 36 and 37 respectively.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for having given this amendment to us some time ago. I would say I'm in agreement with it. However, I just want to make the point that although this is in order, it would seem to me far more tidy to have brought in an amendment to the Provincial Land Tax Act so we could have got at that bill too.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As a matter of interest, I know people who will be reading these debates will want to know the purpose of this amendment. It is to guarantee for the province that the minimum provincial tax amount of $6 will be protected. In other words, if an individual submitted to the Ministry of Revenue, as an example, $8 when his bill was $10 with $4 being earmarked for the local services board, then $6 would go to the provincial land tax. The provincial land tax would be taken out first and then the balance would go to the local services board, which we would match. In this case, they would only give $2 instead of $4. The shortfall would come from the local services board rather than the provincial land tax.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, at the risk of sounding redundant, I would point out the main reason for requesting two for one is the very argument we've had many times that people in unorganized areas really don't get a lot out of the provincial land tax already.

THIRD READING

LOCAL SERVICES BOARDS ACT

Hon. Mr. Bernier moved third reading of Bill 122, An Act to provide for the Establishment of Local Services Boards.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would like to express my appreciation to all members of the House for their contribution to what I think is a very important bill for northern Ontario. I think many members who have been in this House for the last 10 or 15 years have identified a problem as it related to the unorganized communities of the north.

I think it is fair to say the Speaker of this House, the member for Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes), was one strong advocate of doing something for the unorganized communities. All of us on both sides of the House have tried to grapple with this rather difficult problem. I think it is fair to say Bill 102 caused a storm right across the north. It was too structured and too inflexible; it was a form of municipal government. It was obvious that the unorganized communities were not ready or willing to accept this type of structure.

As I said on a number of occasions during the debate in the House, we discussed this bill in detail with the unorganized communities association of the northeast and the northwest, and individually with the various communities.

There was the input from the members. I say that in all sincerity. I assure them I will mention as I move around northern Ontario that it was a co-operative effort. It shows when members are sincere and positive in their efforts this Legislature can come up with something the people of this province want us to do in a straightforward way to answer their specific request.

I am pleased the bill we submitted is basically intact. It is still flexible, it still gives autonomy and, above all, it will improve the quality of life in the unorganized communities of northern Ontario.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say one or two words on the third reading of this bill. I also would like to express gratitude to those people who worked so hard to put this bill in place. I am thinking of the people from UCANO. As the minister knows, without their input I doubt very much that the bill would have gone through in its present form.

I might also say this is not the first attempt made by any Legislature of Ontario to provide some mechanism for unorganized townships to operate and to raise funds. In fact, if memory serves me right, this is the 15th attempt made by various Legislatures, going back probably to 1882 and 1886 when the great leader of the day, Sir Oliver Mowat, made a vain attempt at introducing a bill to assist the unorganized communities.

Mr. Conway: I remember it well.

Mr. Bolan: We all remember those days, of course. Those were great days and I might say they are coming back.

I really would like to express to the minister my own gratitude for the manner in which he has presented the bill. We don't agree with everything by any means; there has been some fairly heavy debate on various sections of the bill. I must say to the minister I am pleased to see he has shown some flexibility with respect to the two to one. I am sure it goes without saying that it is because of the wise arguments which were presented in the House that the minister and his government—I won't say have seen the errors of their way, but rather were led to benefit the people of the unorganized communities by this kind of funding.

Mr. Wildman: Without wanting to prolong this, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments on third reading of the bill.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I would have been surprised if you hadn't.

[8:45]

Mr. Wildman: I thought you would be.

I add my congratulations to those of my colleagues to UCANO East and UCANO West, Mr. Violette and Ms. Davis from Hurkett, in their efforts to sell this idea to the minister and to the people of the unorganized areas in northern Ontario. If the minister wishes now to embark on a tour of the north with his officials, as he did at the time he introduced the bill, I would be very willing to accompany him and to take part in any debates and discussions about the implementation of this new piece of legislation.

I think it is a tribute to the co-operation of members from all sides. It is unfortunate—and I mean this sincerely—that the representatives of UCANO came down so many times and yet were not here to see the passage of the bill. However, I want to emphasize that it was certainly worth it, as my colleague from Sudbury said. If we had rushed it through last time, perhaps we wouldn't have been able to get the minister to agree to at least the two-for-one option we were able to get him to agree to this evening.

I think that's a major step in giving more flexibility to the bill and in making it possible for small communities to get the moneys they need. I'm glad I was able to propose this kind of change and that it was acceptable to the minister.

I would say in general the bill is a step forward. I agree very sincerely with the minister, it's an important step in that, unlike Bill 102, it also allows a local community to decide whether it wants to go this route. I hope many of the local communities will decide to take advantage of the legislation and that in the first couple of years we will have the experimentation I think is going to develop in this. Perhaps the minister will then come back to the Legislature with whatever changes his ministry officials feel are necessary to make this a bill that responds more to the needs of the small communities in northern Ontario.

I notice the minister has his officials under the gallery. I want to thank them for the co-operation they have given me, not only during our trips across northeastern Ontario, when I followed them around—

Mr. Martel: Did they invite you?

Mr. Wildman: I wouldn't say they didn't invite me. They were always very co-operative whenever I was at a meeting. I appreciated their help and their discussions with me when the bill was going into committee. That led to the minister bringing in an amendment which recognized the validity of the secret ballot, which I consider a major change in the bill. I'm glad we were able to convince him we should not return to the 19th century in terms of electing people for these boards.

Also, I notice there are some officials from the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs under the gallery.

Mr. Rotenberg: That's for the next bill.

Mr. Wildman: I know. But I would hope that Mr. Donaldson is keeping an ear on this debate with regard to the area north of Sault Ste. Marie, which has been loosely called Sault North. Perhaps his colleague Mr. Shtern is also considering that when they are looking at changes along the north shore. People in that area have not been too receptive to a number of the suggestions made by that ministry.

I think that's also true of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs study in the Hearst area, where a number of people have said,

"Thanks but no thanks." I think Mr. Violette has been very quick to rush up there and say there's another option. Perhaps this is an option that would be available to some of those communities the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs has been suggesting should go another route. Hopefully, there will be some experimentation and we will see whether this is a viable route.

I want to thank UCANO for its co-operation and hard work and the ministry for its receptiveness to the suggestions we had, even though we couldn't persuade them to go two for one all the way.

Motion agreed to.

MUNICIPAL FRANCHISES AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 146, An Act to amend the Municipal Franchises Act.

Mr. Conway: The man who would be mayor.

Mr. Rotenberg: At least I ran for it. It's more than you ever did.

Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to clarify and strengthen section 10 of the Municipal Franchises Act. Section 10 provides: "Where a franchise bylaw between a gas company and a municipality has expired, or will expire within one year, and the two parties"—that is, the municipality and the gas company—"are unable to agree on new terms, either party may apply to the Ontario Energy Board for an order renewing or extending the franchise."

If the board makes such an order, section 5 provides that the order "shall be deemed to be a valid bylaw of the municipality concerned for the purposes of section 58 of the Public Utilities Act."

Concern has been expressed that the subsection does not explicitly deem the order to be a valid bylaw for the purposes of section 3 of the Municipal Franchises Act. That provision prohibits a public utility from acquiring the right to use or occupy municipal roads, from constructing or operating a system or from supplying gas in a municipality unless a valid franchise bylaw is in force.

This bill proposes to eliminate the concern by amending section 10(5) to provide that a board order shall be deemed to be a valid bylaw of the municipality for all purposes of the Municipal Franchises Act as well as section 58 the Public Utilities Act.

This matter was drawn to our attention because a specific municipality went to the Ontario Energy Board, lost its case and accepted the decision. But, quite naturally, the municipality does not want to pass a bylaw that goes against the stand the municipality took. They're quite content to have the Ontario Energy Board order enforced, but they do not want to pass the bylaw.

Some doubt has been cast as to whether the present franchise agreement is legal or not. That has been drawn to our attention, and the purpose of this legislation is to clarify this point—so the order of the Ontario Energy Board will be deemed to be a bylaw, not only for the Public Utilities Act, but also for the Municipal Franchises Act.

I commend this bill to the House.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, we notice it's been about five weeks since this bill received first reading. We notice it's a very short bill—about five pages in length. It's been about five years since there has been any amendment to it; so obviously there would be those people who would have some cynicism about it, that bills have to be amended every three years, whether it is necessary or not, in order to keep some people in the business.

We notice that a certain gas company, Union Gas Company, from a particular area, made representation to have this changed, despite the fact that solicitors from all quarters of the province have indicated that the changes were necessary. However, there are those of us who think the change, whether necessary or not, is before us because of special representation being made.

The act itself, as the members will notice, deals with the Ontario Energy Board and with the consent that the municipality has to give through its bylaws. Although the amendment itself is in section 10, it's more relevant to section 3(1). In essence, what it says is that the municipality by bylaw, has to give consent. If the Ontario Energy Board has the opportunity, indeed the responsibility, to make a decision, then it would be deemed to be as if a bylaw were passed by the municipality itself.

I would like to ask the parliamentary assistant for the ministry to give some elaboration on the cases that have come before it with respect to the need for this bylaw. I know he briefly referred to one, but I think this House deserves a better explanation than that. To what extent has this gone before the courts? At what point is it before the courts right now? Have there been any appeals, are any appeals pending and so forth? I think this House deserves a fuller explanation of that particular point. If we are asked to pass and to support a particular act, I think it is necessary to have that explanation.

It is obvious from this bill and from other legislation that has passed that the Ontario Municipal Board are overseers, or protectors or guardians of municipalities. They wear some kind of restrictive belt, I suppose, so that municipalities don't err in any way in their decisions. If they do err, there is always the energy board and the municipal board to oversee their decisions and to make sure, if they do err, that correction is made forthwith.

We will be supporting this bill. We have no amendments to the bill, because we think that it is simply a clarification. However, I would want the parliamentary assistant to give us a greater explanation of the question I raised just a few minutes ago.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, we also shall be supporting this bill. We have no particular questions to ask, having been on the other side of the operation myself and having had an instance in my own municipality where there was some very minor confusion, I suppose, about the validity of a board order extending a municipal franchise. It appears to me to be something that is necessary; it is something that has come before us because the lawyers, in their poring over this legislation, have found something that is not laid down quite as tightly as it should be.

While rising to speak on this bill, I want to make a couple of very brief remarks concerning municipal franchises for gas utilities. The bill refers to the extension of a municipal franchise in a circumstance where the municipality and the gas utility have not come to an agreement. That circumstance normally arises where there is some dispute between the municipality and the utility over the level of service provided to the municipality. It seems to me we need a better way of resolving these kinds of things than having the Ontario Energy Board involve itself.

We need a mechanism whereby municipal gas service is available to residential and industrial users who require it. We need a mechanism whereby the gas companies can respond in a better way to the needs of consumers in Ontario. While I recognize this particular bill is getting us over a problem, I hope the parliamentary assistant can give us some assurance that his government is looking at this problem in a much broader context, and that we can be assured that at some time in the future there will be mechanism whereby the gas companies can be encouraged to provide service to customers who are not currently getting gas service but who would very much like to.

Those are the kinds of disputes that are arising. I am not thinking of rural areas, where there is a different kind of problem, but of urban areas and of growing areas around our towns and cities, where new subdivisions could benefit from the kind of service provided by a gas company in this day and age, when gas is the preferred fuel for heating of homes.

There is no mechanism at the moment whereby the gas companies can be made to provide service. I think that is a failing of our system. I am sure the parliamentary assistant realizes that some of us in this party would have a solution that goes somewhat further than I imagine his government would want to go.

I hope he can assure us the government is looking at these kinds of issues and that some time in the future there will be a mechanism whereby a person who lives in an urban area and wishes to get gas to heat his home can be provided with that service. That mechanism does not exist at present, unless the gas utility desires to provide the service to the customer.

We will be supporting this bill; we have no amendments to it, and I look forward to the response from the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Energy Board, like the Ontario Municipal Board, is in this case the arbiter when a municipality and a private utility cannot agree. Partly in response to the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs), I say that the whole purpose of having the energy board is where a municipality for some reason doesn't want to have the utility in there or the gas company wants exorbitant terms to put the utility in there. Then the energy board's function is really to step in the middle, to be the arbitrator—compulsory arbitration—and to set forth the terms and conditions under which the utility will be put forward in the municipality.

The member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) asked about the number of cases before the courts and so on. This is really the first time this matter has been drawn to the attention of the ministry. The matter has not yet been before the courts, and the purpose of this legislation is so that the matter will not go before the courts. The courts are crowded enough; they have enough to do, without having these kinds of matters go before them when they can be settled for this case and all future cases by a very simple clarification of the legislation.

There has not yet been any litigation. The fear is, if this act is not passed, and if unfortunately there were an accident in the township where the dispute has arisen, there might be some question of liability. There is a question whether, when a franchise expires, those gas pipes are still legally within the municipality.

There is some question in the mind of the utility, if it doesn't get this legislation, whether it will continue to supply gas. It may be deemed to be there illegally by a court in future, and this might have quite an effect on the liability concerned. So the concern of the ministry is simply not to wait until there is a court case, not to wait until there is a real problem. In effect, this is preventive legislation and for clarification so there will not be a court case in the future.

The member for Wentworth has asked some very interesting questions. However, I would say he is getting into the whole problem of energy policy, which is really a matter for the Ministry of Energy. I would hope he and his colleagues would raise the matter in that ministry's estimates if they are not too pleased with the form of ownership of the present utility companies. I wish they would, at some appropriate time, discuss with the Minister of Energy the long-term policy of public utilities—and that, of course, is their right. But, with respect, I would suggest long-term energy policy, and the ways in which public utilities—particularly natural gas—are distributed, really are not relevant to the discussion of this bill tonight.

I thank the two opposition critics for their support of this bill, and I would commend it to the House.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 147, An Act to amend the Local Improvement Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, this is another situation where a matter has come to our attention. It is a matter that has come before the courts. This bill is a matter of clarifying the present legislation.

The purpose of this bill is to make clear that a majority of the members of a court of revision constitute a quorum and that a quorum is and always has been sufficient to exercise all the powers and duties of a court of revision. This amendment has been requested by the city of Chatham because of its concern about a court case that is expected to cast into doubt the validity of a decision made by the municipality's court of revision where a majority, but not all of its members, conducted the hearing. Several million dollars in special assessments are involved in this municipality alone.

If allowed to stand, such a court decision could have some very serious financial consequences for Chatham and for many other municipalities in Ontario. What this bill is really saying is that a majority, that is, two out of three or three out of five, of the court of revision sitting on assessment reviews will be deemed to be a quorum of the court and will always have been deemed to be a quorum of the court. As such, I would recommend this bill to the House.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I might say from the outset that we intend to support the bill. It is a coincidence that this particular court case arises from a decision of a Chatham council. As we know, we just dealt with Bill 146, which had to do with a company that comes from Chatham. There seems to be a lot of legislation emanating from that part of the country all of a sudden, almost more with assessment and so forth than there was only two years ago, when they seemed to have more direct representation in the executive council of this province.

Nevertheless, the bill does clarify the fact that if, for instance, three of five members of a particular court of revision are present to deal with special assessment appeals, then they have a quorum to deal with that and, if two out of those three members happen to make a decision, then that legitimizes that decision. We have no argument with that. We think that's a right and proper way to go.

We will support this bill, and we have no amendments to it.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, we support this extension of a fairly normal democratic principle to courts of revision considering local improvements. If I make some remarks about local improvements in general, I know the member for Wilson Heights (Mr. Rotenberg) will respond that it's not connected with this bill. Therefore, I will resist the temptation to do that and simply indicate we are supporting the bill.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 172, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, this bill contains five amendments to the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, including certain changes requested by the council of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

The bill proposes to permit Metropolitan Toronto to impose a sewer service charge on those persons having a private waterworks system and discharging waste water into the Metropolitan Toronto sanitary sewer system. Another change requested by the Metropolitan Toronto council would enable the Metropolitan Toronto corporation and any of the area municipalities to enter into an agreement for the purpose of participating in a joint group liability insurance plan and joint funding of the deductible amounts of such a plan.

The bill also includes an amendment to provide for the name of the board of education of the city of North York in recognition of the erection of the city of North York on February 14, 1979. When that happened last February, we changed the name of the council of North York, but we did not change the name of the board of education for the city of North York.

Another amendment affecting the financing of permanent improvements by school boards is being made to complement the government's proposal for providing front-end grants towards the cost of school board capital projects. That is, Metro at the present time can spend two mills out of current revenues for capital projects, and this bill will make it clear that they can spend two mills out of current revenues after the front-end payments by the provincial government.

Finally, the bill contains a similar change as in Bill 152, which we passed several weeks ago, to enable the Metropolitan Toronto corporation to enter into long-term contracts for the purchase or rental of machinery.

These five simple amendments to the Metropolitan Toronto Act are before you, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask the support of the House for this bill.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, we will support this bill in principle and indicate we are glad the government of the day finally recognized earlier this year that some of the boroughs in the Metropolitan Toronto area wanted to have city status. It is a move this party has recommended for some years; indeed, we put forth a private member's bill. It was unfortunate that at that time there was an oversight and the change did not apply to the board of education of North York. This obviously will be corrected by this particular bill.

The school board financing of permanent improvements, which are upfront grants, will afford the municipalities another opportunity to finance those grants; in fact, by having the two mills applied and getting the grants up front, in actual fact they will have more money initially to pay off the various permanent improvements. We obviously endorse this particular move and feel it is a step in the right direction.

There are a number of municipalities that have asked for the opportunity to have joint liability insurance plans and to fund jointly the deductible amounts of the plan. These requests have been made by some municipalities in Toronto, but they have also been made by other municipalities, and I presume those amendments will be made to the proper bills in the near future.

This is obviously another move which shows municipalities are becoming more mature, and that they are being recognized as being more mature and constantly being given more responsibility in exercising the various powers under their jurisdiction.

We therefore support this particular bill, and we have no amendments to make to it.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, we too will be supporting this bill, but I have a few brief comments.

With respect to the extension of the user-pay principle to the use of sewer services, if one goes along with the user-pay principle for sewer services—in other words, a sewer levy on top of the water rate—then it's only fair that this be put in place.

However, I would like to hear a response from the ministry as to whether it is their view that a user-pay system for sewer services should become the norm in the future and, if so, whether other municipalities will be given this same power that Metropolitan Toronto now is being given.

My understanding is that this is the first time this particular section has come before the House in dealing either with a regional municipality or with a municipality of the lower tier which is responsible for its own sewer services. I would be very interested to hear whether this kind of thing will be extended right across the province and whether it is regarded as a principle that municipalities might move towards.

With regard to the board of education name, I really have very little comment, although I think the parliamentary assistant might be interested to learn that when this matter was dealt with by our caucus, and given the hearings that were held this summer before the justice committee on Bill 19, there was a suggestion made that we ought to be changing the name of that board of education to something far less flattering than the proposal that is put forward in this bill.

With regard to the controlled expenditures for permanent improvements, we have no objection to that section. It is a logical extension of the normal understanding of capital financing—that is, that permanent improvements and major expenditures and upgrading of physical plant are considered as capital expenditures rather than as operating expenditures.

On the other hand, this is in a sense violating the principle of local autonomy. It is suggesting to school boards, and ultimately to municipalities, the maximum amount that should be put on the mill rate for any one purpose. While we have no objection to the extension as it is proposed in this bill, that is something we would hate to see brought in in other areas. It is a component of the total package of the new funding of school capital works that is being dealt with under a separate bill which we will be discussing here, I assume before Christmas. I want to go into that at greater length at that time. But with regard to the single item that is contained in this bill, it is not inappropriate; but it may not be, as a concept, the right direction to go in the long run.

With regard to the final matter, on agreements for insurance, I would like the parliamentary assistant to advise us why he feels it necessary to make the Metropolitan Toronto corporation always one of the parties to such an insurance agreement. That is the wording contained in this bill. Would he also advise us whether his minister might not be prepared to consider a circumstance where any two or more municipalities could co-operate for the purpose of obtaining insurance?

I would hate to see this matter limited to Metropolitan Toronto. There are sometimes major savings to be gained in the bulk buying of insurance contracts. It seems a little strange to me that in this bill the wording is such that the Metropolitan Toronto corporation and one or more area municipalities may enter into an agreement. It would seem to me it would have been more appropriate to suggest that two or more municipalities might enter into an agreement and leave it completely at the discretion of the municipalities concerned.

In that regard, too, the parliamentary assistant is already aware of the objection we have brought forward with regard to obtaining insurance for the protection against liability suits of elected and appointed municipal officials. We continue to have that objection, and we note—with some pride, I guess—that some of the municipal officers now are beginning to echo some of the concerns we have previously brought before this House.

However, we can't see a mechanism by which the section that is before us at the moment could appropriately be amended to deal with those concerns. Therefore, we will let the comments rest as they are. We have no amendments, and we will be supporting this bill in total.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Wentworth has very quickly established himself as a knowledgeable critic in this field in the House. He has put forward most of the points to be covered.

I have one item on which I would like some clarification from the parliamentary assistant who is carrying the bill. That is, regarding the change of the name for the board of education. In so doing, he has made it retroactive to February 14. Will that pose any problems for any legal transactions they may have had which did occur between February 14 and this date—any bills which were owing and were paid, or any suits which were brought against the board, or any other transactions?

I am always concerned about retroactivity. It brings to mind that there may have been some legal ramifications which we are not aware of. I would just like to know, before we pass this bill, whether the minister could clarify the legal status of the transactions between February 14 and today.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I want to comment very briefly on section 4 in support of what was said by my colleague from Wentworth. He has dealt very briefly and concisely with the whole bill, but I share his concern with regard to section 4, with the limitation that is placed on the amount of money the boards of education may spend with regard to capital expenditure in any given year.

It seems to me this change is an improvement, because formerly they could spend up to the amount of equal to two mills. Now they can spend up to the amount that two mills will give them, plus the contribution from the provincial government.

I want to point out to the member, and I hope he will comment on it, that I still think that limitation is too great. I don't really know that there needs to be any limitation there at all. I think we can trust the municipality and the school boards to set what they feel to be reasonable levies.

Mr. Speaker, with your background with educational boards and municipalities, I know you would agree with that. It seems to me at this time, when interest rates are so high, if a board decides it would rather raise a bit more money and spend it at this time instead of paying the high interest rates over the years, it should have the right to do so.

I would like to ask the parliamentary assistant if he would express his views on that matter and explain why we are setting these limitations. I know that kind of limitation is general throughout the educational system, but we are making some slightly innovative moves in other fields; let's try this here with regard to the Metropolitan Toronto corporation and see if it won't work. Then maybe we could remove this limitation, this straitjacket, that we have on other municipalities and school boards.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I thank the members opposite for their support of this bill.

To comment briefly on the matters raised by the members opposite: First, the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) in discussing the joint insurance plan has indicated that other municipalities have expressed interest in a similar type of legislation. To the best of my knowledge no such request as yet has come to the ministry. When they do they will be considered and I'm sure this matter for Metropolitan Toronto will be considered as a precedent. If we have other requests, and if it seems to be appropriate, this may shortly find its way into general legislation.

The member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs) was discussing the sewer services and the user-pay concept. I think he is aware that this applies only to those in Metropolitan Toronto who do not pay water rates. There are a number of industries and businesses which draw their water directly from the lake, which do not take their water through the Metropolitan Toronto system and which, therefore, do not pay water rates.

In the case of everyone in Metropolitan Toronto who pays water rates, part of the charge on the water rate is deemed to be a charge for the sewer services; this applies to Metropolitan Toronto and many other municipalities across the provinces. But those who draw water directly from the lake do not pay anything to the sewer services, as do the vast majority of water users. This simply gives Metropolitan Toronto the permissive legislation to charge those people who draw their water directly from the lake, and discharge it through their sewer system, the amount for the sewer part of the water rates that are charged to those who pay their water rates through Metropolitan Toronto.

There has been discussion, by both the member for Wentworth and the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart), about the problem of the two-mill maximum. The purpose of this legislation is simply to clarify that the government grant now will be an upfront grant rather than part of the annual amount towards per capita cost; the upfront grant will not be considered to be part of the two-mill levy, because the upfront grant will be more than two mills. So the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto now can raise and spend two mills of their own money, over and above the grant that is given by the province of Ontario.

Both the member for Wentworth and the member for Welland-Thorold seemed to be raising the point that possibly we should be reconsidering that two-mill grant. Possibly Metropolitan Toronto or some other municipality should have this ceiling lifted and have a free rein to spend as much as it wants out of current and as much as it wants out of capital. I think there would be considerable flak from the municipal councils if we, in effect, gave the school boards free rein to spend a lot more capital out of current and, therefore, raise the mill rate every year.

However, the point the two members raised is one of interest. I will say to the members opposite that in considering this amendment we didn't consider the overall philosophy of the two-mill limitation. It was simply to make sure the two-mill limitation still applied after the provincial grant rather than before. When we get into a general review of this, we will take into account the points raised by the members of the New Democratic Party.

The member for Wentworth also raised the matter of the joint insurance reserve fund and asked why two municipalities in Metro couldn't do this on their own without Metro's participating. This is really a response to a request from Metropolitan Toronto and its six area municipalities. If I may, I will read from the request that came to us, which is a report adopted by the Metropolitan Toronto council on August 10, 1979. Members will note it has taken us no more than three months to respond to a request from Metropolitan Toronto.

Part of this report reads: "Several meetings have been held with the area municipalities' treasurers and the insurance consultant engaged for this purpose. It has been agreed that the most effective method of administering such a group liability insurance plan is through an insurance reserve fund maintained to meet self-insurance and applicable claims-adjusting costs on behalf of all participating municipalities, including Metro."

In effect, the Metropolitan Toronto officials and the officials of the six area municipalities got together and decided this was the way they wanted it; they wanted the joint plan and they wanted it to include Metro and basically, to be administered by Metro. That is why the legislation is here in this form, which is in the form requested by the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto as endorsed by its area municipalities.

I think I have covered the matters raised by the members opposite. I want to thank them for their support of this bill, and I commend it to the House.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

SECURITIES AMENDMENT ACT (concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 156, An Act to amend the Securities Act, 1978.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I didn't adjourn the debate. The member who adjourned the debate isn't here.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any member who wishes to speak on Bill 156 on second reading?

Mr. Breithaupt: I believe my colleague the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) had adjourned the debate to give other members the opportunity to speak. I am certainly content that the debate continue.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

CERTIFICATION OF TITLES ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 148, An Act to revise the Certification of Titles Act.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware we were going to proceed immediately with these three bills and I don't have my files with me. There is nothing I can do about that, unless some other member wishes to speak on the bill. Then I can obtain my information and speak to it.

Mr. Speaker: I think it only fair, since we're embarking upon a legislative program this evening and weren't given notice, that we provide the honourable member with an opportunity to get his notes.

Do you have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I already gave an opening statement. It was my understanding that relatively recently there was an expression that these three bills could go on tonight. I certainly apologize to the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt), the critic of the ministry, in that he wasn't consulted. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that was beyond my control, or I wouldn't have moved second reading of the bill.

When these bills were introduced, I pointed out they were housekeeping in nature. Bill 148, An Act to revise the Certification of Titles Act, has to be taken in context with Bill 149, An Act to amend the Land Titles Act, and Bill 150, An Act to amend the Registry Act, because they are complementary in many respects. The prime function was one of housekeeping. It was to remove certain archaic sections as well as to streamline those acts for the introduction of an automated system, more commonly known as Polaris. While the amendments may be of a housekeeping variety, nonetheless there were certain sections that have been removed.

It is my understanding that, because of the lateness of the hour, the parties opposite would prefer to proceed on another night. I am agreeable to an adjournment of the debate. It really isn't anybody's fault. It was an attempt to arrange something to fit the business of the House tonight. Apparently, the signals just didn't work. I want to assure the members opposite that I understand the position and am perfectly prepared to go on another night.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, while we're waiting for my colleague, I have certain questions to the minister on the legislation.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I think it's a problem that was nobody's fault, but it was a case that we hadn't planned enough legislation for tonight.

Mr. Speaker: Does either the honourable minister or the member for Kitchener wish to move the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Breithaupt: I'll move the adjournment, if that's what's wanted.

Mr. Speaker: We have to dispose of this question one way or another before we move the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, if I recall correctly, a moment ago I offered to move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Drea, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 9:34 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

ORDER PAPER CORRECTION

Hon. Mr. Gregory: On today's Order Paper, Mr. Speaker, under private members' motions tabled on November 26, 1979, item 42 was a resolution accredited to the member for Hamilton West (Mr. S. Smith). This should have read the member for Simcoe East (Mr. G. E. Smith). We ask that that be corrected.

Mr. Speaker: The correction is duly noted.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, as I promised this House on October 16, I would like to bring honourable members up to date on the status of the Royal Ontario Museum's renovation and expansion program. I will keep this House informed as the renovation and expansion program progresses and as capital-funding negotiations which are now under way are completed. I am not yet in a position to present ROM's 1980-81 operating grant.

As honourable members know, ROM's renovation and expansion program is ambitious and visionary. It has been planned in three distinct phases.

The first phase, construction of a modern curatorial centre, is already under way. The curatorial centre is scheduled to open in the spring of 1981. It will do two important things for the museum.

First, it will provide first-class physical facilities for the museum's celebrated collections and its community of scholars. Second, the curatorial centre will free for public use and display approximately 28,000 square feet of space in the main building that had given way over the years to pressing needs for offices and laboratories as the staff and scientific activities of the museum had grown. This represents an increase of more than 40 per cent in the space that has been accessible to the public in recent years.

The second phase, renovation of the main museum buildings, is scheduled to begin next Monday. The renovation program is to be conducted in stages of 28 months. The schedule prescribes that there will be only 15 months in which the whole of the main building will be closed to the public. Compare that with the two and a half years that the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts was closed and the five years that the Victoria Building of the National Museums in Ottawa was closed for renovations. The ROM renovations are essential for the safety of both the public and the museum's collections. Those collections must be stored with time-taking care to ensure that they will be sustained for future generations.

When you consider all those factors, I know you will appreciate how effective ROM's planning has been in keeping disruption of public viewing to an absolute minimum.

One last word on the main building's closing schedule for my friend from Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) and those who have a special interest in the mineralogy and geology galleries. These galleries will not close next Monday. They will be open to the public until 1981 and only then close for renovation.

During the whole renovation period, ROM will be reaching out to offer public service with travelling school cases, museum-mobiles, the "Discover the ROM" van and lectures by its specialists.

The third phase of ROM's program, namely the construction of a new set of galleries called the Terrace Galleries, is scheduled to begin early next year. When they open, they will provide a place for vast new perspectives on our human heritage.

Financing of the third phase, the Terrace Galleries, has been uncertain, mainly because of the absence of a commitment from the federal government for financial support of the expansion and renovation program. Shortly before the May 22 election the then Secretary of State indicated that the only possible federal source of financial support might be Loto Canada. With the transfer of Loto Canada to the provinces in September, that federal source of funds also effectively disappeared.

Mr. Martel: But you have it now.

Mr. McClellan: You've got the money now.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I was about to say that.

Mr. Speaker, the Loto Canada transfer was a very good deal for the people of Ontario and for the Royal Ontario Museum. It allowed me to announce on September 4 that my ministry was committing an additional $11 million grant to meet the balance required to cover the $44.25 million expansion and renovation budget.

We were not, as has been cynically suggested, suckered into making this commitment. On the contrary, we made it for three sound and compelling reasons. First, the Royal Ontario Museum needs first-class exhibit space and there is a firm commitment to putting it there. Second, the construction of the Terrace Galleries in conjunction with the other two phases is the most efficient, least disruptive way to proceed. Third, in the light of the escalating construction costs, further postponement on the start of the Terrace Galleries promised to result in those galleries not being built in this century or ever.

With our further commitment of $11 million the original expenditure budget of $44.25 million was met. In the meantime, the ugly and all-pervasive reality of inflation made its impact on ROM's renovation and expansion program, just as it has made its impact on all major building projects. The total capital cost now estimated is $49.59 million, or roughly $5 million more than the original budget.

The trustees at ROM are dealing with this situation and they are confident that they can cope with it. The board is overseeing the project management to ensure that effective cost control is maintained and that appropriate economies take place, so the museum gets the very best value for every dollar that it spends. Perhaps even more important, the trustees are waiting to hear about funding from an important and likely source, namely Metropolitan Toronto. The museum and Metro agreed some time ago to suspend negotiations until the contributions from the two senior levels of government had been ascertained.

It would be hard to believe that Metro would not make an important contribution to ROM's renovation and expansion program. As honourable members know, Metro has generously supported the Art Gallery of Ontario and the new Massey Hall. Both institutions are important to Metro. The Royal Ontario Museum is clearly just as important. All the people of Ontario benefit from ROM, but the people of Metropolitan Toronto benefit the most. The museum provides large and diverse recreational and educational benefits to all of Metro's citizens, particularly to the young people growing up in this area. It provides jobs and income directly. It also provides jobs and income in the tourist industry and the sectors from which it buys goods and services.

The museum expects to hear from Metro council in January 1980. Until it does, any discussion in this Legislature of these negotiations would at best be conjecture and, at worst, could be prejudicial to a favourable decision.

As the slogan for the ROM's expansion program notes, ROM wasn't built in a day. I would like to assure members the renovation and expansion program is proceeding. It will be brought to a successful conclusion making ROM not only the finest museum in Canada but among the very best in the world.

ORAL QUESTIONS

INTEREST RATES

Mr. S. Smith: In the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis), I will address my question to the Treasurer.

With regard to the setting of oil prices, Ontario, although recognizing it is a federal matter, has made its position very clear. Ontario has also taken a position in general terms that the provinces should have more say with regard to economic policy in this country. Could the Treasurer, therefore, tell us what representations have been made to the federal government with regard to the high interest rate policy being followed by the federal government and the Bank of Canada? And, before he stands up to tell us he doesn't like high interest rates, may I just remind him nobody likes high interest rates?

The question is whether the interest rates are thought to be necessary or unnecessary. What representations have been made on behalf of Ontario and what is Ontario's policy?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have been asked a similar question before. I believe I explained that when I was in Ottawa to meet with the Minister of Finance some three or four weeks ago I asked him at that time to explain what inside information he might have on this issue which led him to believe the high interest rate policy was the appropriate one to fight inflation at this time, and to maintain the value of the Canadian dollar.

He assured me then that after reviewing the alternatives it was his opinion as the minister responsible this was the proper policy.

The member may smile as much as he wishes.

Mr. S. Smith: Of course you assumed he believed he was responsible.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The fact remains, as he said at the time and as I had heard him say in public, many pundits and many other people who are not responsible feel quite free to offer all kinds of advice.

Mr. Peterson: You are not responsible. What advice did you offer?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm not responsible for it; quite right. I am responsible for certain things and I have really never tried to avoid the responsibilities I have. I am quite pleased, however, to recognize that when somebody else has the jurisdiction, the very most I can do is offer my thoughts on that matter. I told the minister at the same time that one of the great advantages of the system is one can offer advice in confidence, which I did.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh. By way of supplementary: Given the fact that oil prices are also the responsibility of the federal government and not the Ontario government and yet we didn't feel we had to give our advice on that issue in confidence—in fact, we shared it rather clearly, and correctly so, with all the people of Ontario and with the country—why does the minister feel interest rates require that degree of secrecy when oil prices do not? What is different about interest rates that forces him into such an amount of secrecy he feels he cannot share Ontario's position with this House?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think the analogy isn't too bad. Once in a while the Leader of the Opposition is reasonably accurate.

In the one case, the decision had been taken. In the other case, it was about to be taken; in fact, it was a matter for public debate of great importance across this country. Ontario had a very real vested interest on behalf of all of its citizens in that matter. The Premier, the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch) and myself felt very strongly that the merits of the Ontario position, which was clear and well thought-out and one which I am sure the Leader of the Opposition accepted, should be put before the voters of the country because they were reading them one way while we read them another.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: If the Treasurer isn't prepared to share with this House the views on high interest rates which he expressed to the federal government, would he at least join with me in condemning the recent announcement to their customers by banks in this province that overdraft rates are to be raised from 18 per cent to 21 per cent? Would he not contact the presidents of the major banks in this province to say that is a completely outrageous and unacceptable kind of levy on people who happen to have overdrafts and small business people in Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I accept the very real problems for the small businessman and for individual home owners. There are many parts of society that can live with a high interest rate and charge it off against something. Most small businessmen cannot and most home owners cannot.

My own personal inclinations, which I gave very early in the game, as a person who has listened to arguments on both sides of the fence or on both sides of the issue, are that while inflation will be immediately created by a slightly lower interest rate, the stability of the Canadian dollar today is very good because basically it is being seen by the world as an energy-based currency and probably could sustain the attack some fear would occur if interest rates here were not quite as high as they are.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the Treasurer agrees that small businesses and, while he didn't mention it, but I am sure he agrees also, the farm sector are very much hurt by this, could I remind him that in 1973 the chartered banks in mid-May introduced a dual lending rate structure under which the base lending rate for a small business and farm loans were distinguished from the prime rates for larger loans? There was a two-lending-rate structure in 1973 following certain urgings from the Bank of Canada.

In the first place, why did the Treasurer make no representations on this subject to the Minister of Finance, and to the committee of Parliament that was looking into the interest-rate matter? It was not yet a total fait accompli. There was a committee looking at the matter. In the second place, why has the Treasurer not urged the federal government to tell the chartered banks to introduce the two-interest-rate structure again?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Interestingly enough, in the last few days we have begun to see the effects of the policy. I think it was generally reported in the press within the last day or two that the GIC rates issued by trust companies have been dropped a bit, that the total demand for mortgage moneys has dropped and that as of yesterday at least one of the banks has dropped its long-term interest rate down.

There is a short-term interest rate and a long-term interest rate. The two traditionally had some relationship, but of late there has been much more variation. I think the member's economic critic would agree with that because one is not predicting the current levels to last very long. The fact remains that the monetarists, the people in the States who are intent on wrestling inflation to its knees or wherever one wrestles it, have decided that this is an essential part of the process whether we like it or not.

The two-rate structure is very difficult for banks to follow, as members know. In fact, they are currently paying under a free system as much as 14.25 per cent on some of their short-term money. I am looking at the Liberal critic. I don't have any money to lend. I know he has and he could confirm very quickly what he is getting on it. I only know what one pays for it. I have traditionally not quite followed the biblical directive of neither a borrower nor a lender be. I am a borrower and he is a lender.

I can only say the banks currently are paying a fairly high rate.

Mr. Mancini: I have a supplementary question for the Treasurer. In view of the fact that the interest rates over the past few months have gone up in stages and not all at once, which, therefore, gave him the opportunity on several occasions to oppose higher interest rates, could the Treasurer tell the House if, on any one of these occasions after the interest rates have been upped by the federal government and the Bank of Canada, he made representation that the interest rates were high enough and that they should not go up any higher, and that was the view of the government of Ontario on behalf of the consumers of Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I had expressed my very real concern on the effect of those interest rates on the business community. I have also taken the time to ask certain of the bankers, because I have heard of differences of opinion between the major bankers and the central bank. In the main they agree with the central bank.

Mr. S. Smith: You let the federal government know your position on oil but not on interest.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Does my friend want to see the problems resolved or not?

CONTROL ORDERS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Speaker. I won't ask him why Ontario has to keep its position on interest rates secret. I'll ask him a question that has to do with the environment.

Would the minister explain to us why it is that his ministry is giving yet another extension to a control order on a pulp and paper mill—in this instance, the Abitibi mill in Sturgeon Falls? Can he also give us whatever figures are available to indicate whether he expects this extension to have a particular effect on fishing on the Sturgeon River? Would he share with the House the information upon which that is based?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, the company asked for an amendment some time ago. It was one of the first occasions where we put our policy into effect that any amendment that was sought would have to be done in a public forum.

A meeting was held and I think was quite well attended. The result of that meeting was that it was known the order would comply with the federal guidelines. I believe the people of that area were quite satisfied with that result. They had the opportunity to be fully informed. The amending order complies completely with the standards set by the federal government.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Since the federal guidelines, so-called, are only general and don't necessarily apply to each body of water—each one has to be considered on its merit—and since those guidelines were known before, could the minister explain why it is the original control order which is now being amended calls for a limit of 50 milligrams per litre of the effluent, whereas the new guideline, in line with the federal one, is 190 milligrams per litre? How did they come up with 50 milligrams in the first place? Was it based on real information? Was it based on intelligent analysis, or was the number chosen out of a hat?

I ask that because surely, the minister must understand that every time he has to stand up and tell us all his previous orders were based on misinformation or numbers which were imagined by somebody on no real basis, he weakens the credibility of the Ministry of the Environment generally and weakens the case for all of us who would like to see a more powerful ministry, with proper directives.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I guess the leader of the Liberal Party isn't fully aware of the situation. He talked about my previous orders. There has not been a single order for which I have total, personal responsibility that has been amended. I have the policy, and the member knows it, to put on reasonable, practical orders and then enforce them. That's become a cornerstone of the ministry and I'm pleased it has. They are practical, they're reasonable and they're being enforced. There's no doubt about that.

Having done that, I can tell the leader of the Liberal Party that on this particular order 50 milligrams was the number put there. We asked the Ontario Research Foundation to tell the public whether it was possible to live up to that order. It wasn't, the public were aware of that and the member should know that. He should have been aware of that.

If he chooses to ignore that kind of information, that's his prerogative, but the truth of the matter is that order was placed. I don't know how that order was placed there, on a personal basis—

Mr. S. Smith: It's your ministry.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Of course, it's my ministry. It was done in the hope that technology would advance. Now when it can't be done on the basis of the Ontario Research Foundation assessing it, and then going to a public meeting, explaining that in full and complete detail; yet where it does adhere to the federal guidelines one can always make that claim. It's an easy claim to make, but I will tell the member that the orders now are being enforced on the rationale of reasonable and practical orders, and they will continue to be so. That is the way the policy will go from now into the future.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of my final supplementary, Mr. Speaker, since this is not the first time we have heard that previous control orders were impractical and unreasonable and we're given no basis upon which those numbers were ever dreamed up in the first place, can I assume that certain people within the ministry have been fired, or re-educated with regard to how to go about doing these things? Would the minister share with this House which of the ministers he feels was responsible for these unreasonable, impractical and merely hopeful guidelines which industry presumably has been trying to live with these several years?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The leader of the Liberal Party wants us to be dramatic and as tough as we can be. We are being that. He is suggesting that when we put some orders on well in advance—years and years in advance of technology—somehow or other it is a mistake to put up strong objectives we would like to come to.

There is nothing wrong with that. Of course we're trying to set high standards and long-range goals that are desirable for this province. He shouldn't criticize it. He should be on our side. He should say that's the kind of example we want this ministry to put forward. That's what his bill is supposed to be all about, but it has a lot of other nonsense in it. He is putting up those huge, idealistic goals. I say they have to be reasonable and practical. The member can't live in a dream world.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary, the member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Could the minister tell us how many control orders in Ontario that had these original tough standards that he talked about and that "his ministry hoped could be met by new technology" are now being revised because they cannot be met with new technology?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The interesting part about it, Mr. Speaker, is the members always know now whether an amendment is going to be put to a control order. They should be very thankful about that, too, if I may say it in those terms, because it is not done now other than in the public forum. I would have thought the member would have been the first to appreciate that approach and so if there are any orders—and there are none at this time—being proposed for amendment they would be in front of the public with the merits of the case being debated. The member will have his full opportunity to be a part of that debate. It's a very open process where the people can join in and be a part of it.

VISITOR

Mr. Cassidy: Perhaps while the Minister of Industry and Tourism is finding his place, I could draw the attention of the House to the presence in the gallery today of a friend and former colleague, the former member for Wentworth, my friend, Ian Deans.

AIRCRAFT CONTRACT

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In the light of the very substantial concern in the aerospace industry about the spinoffs for Canada of the $2.3 billion federal fighter contract which is to be awarded this year, could the minister say what guarantees Ontario has had from the federal government about this contract? How many jobs will be created in Ontario as a result of the contract? Is the government satisfied that the contract will guarantee sufficient Canadian content and will provide a fair deal for the electronic and the aerospace industries of this province in terms of technology and jobs?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are satisfied, on all counts the leader of the third party mentioned, that regardless of which of the two aircraft ultimately is purchased, Ontario will get a substantial portion of the work. On literally all of the hooks the member mentioned and all of the counts he mentioned those protections are indeed built into the government's current intentions in terms of the contracts that are ultimately entered into. [2:30]

Mr. Cassidy: Could the minister say when the government determined it was satisfied with the results of either of the contracts now being considered in Ottawa, particularly in view of the confidential report that was leaked last month? The aerospace industry itself raised serious questions in that report about the industrial benefits the two bidders were offering.

Specifically did this government inform the federal government what Ontario expected in terms of the spinoff for jobs and technology? Have those requirements been met?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have been carrying on discussions with the federal government for well over one and a half years with regard to the spinoffs we expected out of those aerospace contracts. I can't say 100 per cent of our requests have been accommodated but we are satisfied that as of the present time Ontario will get a very good share of the benefits flowing out of that contract. So far as we understand, it is as much as the federal government can possibly obtain in terms of the offset portions of that deal.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementarily: As recently as the beginning of October the Air Industries Association of Canada was telling its members it saw very little substantial benefit from the spinoff from this fighter contract. Also, at the end of the month they were saying the offset offers are just a plan of potential opportunities. So can the minister say what steps Ontario intends to take in order to ensure this Canadian content is not just a potential opportunity, but that it is realized for Ontario's manufacturers and workers?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I want to make it clear that nothing I have seen has led me or this government to believe these are simply potential opportunities. They are only potential in the sense that the contract has not yet been awarded. These questions might more properly be put in the House of Commons, but I can assure the member everything we have heard from the federal government is that its extensive efforts over the past few years have been to ensure the offsets are there, that they are serious offsets and firm commitments. We have not had any other indication as recently as my visit to Mr. de Cotret two weeks ago today.

The member may have a press release from some people in the aerospace industry that indicates they wish there were more. Nothing in my conversations with the federal ministers involved, or any of our communications extending over all of the past few years, would lead us to believe the federal government is going to be so silly as to enter into any agreement with regard to fighter aircraft that leaves anything up in the air, or that deals only with potential benefits rather than firm, hard commitments. Everything we understand indicates the commitments are for firm undertakings for our industry, especially here in Ontario.

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, can the minister be more specific on what kind of offset policies have been or are being worked out right now? As recently as October, we saw a report published by Southam Press that indicated neither company's industrial benefits in this category are considered to make an adequate contribution to a life-cycle support capability in Canada, nor do they extend technological expertise to allow eventual Canadian industrial participation.

Is the minister talking only in terms of production and manufacturing, or is the minister talking in terms of technological know-how for long-term policies for Canada? Can the minister be more specific and tell us if the terms have been changed since the report has been published?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can simply repeat the answer I gave to the leader of the NDP initially. He asked me, using two or three approaches to the question, whether we were satisfied employment and technology benefits would accrue to this country and specifically this province.

I can only repeat we have been satisfied on one of the two choices for a long time—on both opportunities for a short time. We're satisfied that under all those headings Ontario would get a very good share of the commitment, and a firm commitment.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Could the minister say what the government hoped to achieve when the Ministry of the Environment agreed to provide a site and $10 million in Peel for a major demonstration project for waste recovery? Was one of the main aims to develop waste recovery expertise among Canadian firms; and if so, why did the ministry take no steps whatsoever to try to encourage Canadian companies to bid for that particular project?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: May I say to the leader of the third party that problem in future would be better addressed to the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch) as he now will be dealing with matters of recovery of energy from waste. In response to the member's question today, as I understand it, there was only one bidder on that project. A fair amount of effort was made to get other bidders, but we could not force them to do so. I am also advised that in excess of 75 per cent of that bid will, I think, be Canadian content.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the effect of the bid has been to give Grumman Ecosystems of New York a ground-floor position in a technology which could extend to as many as 12 comparable plants across this province over the course of the next few years, could the minister say what specific efforts were made in order to get Canadian bids on that part of the project? Why was the government not prepared to see to the creation of a consortium of Canadian companies to give them the edge in this new and important technology?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I do know that efforts were made. It certainly is quite possible to give him chapter and verse on those efforts, and I will do so. We can't give him those in detail at this time, but we will.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) not only professed ignorance about any such efforts but also indicated the government was only prepared to respond to any suggestions from Canadian companies, could we have an undertaking from this minister that the Ministry of the Environment is prepared to take a lead in encouraging and helping Canadian companies to develop resource recovery and waste recovery technology before this entire new area is taken over by multinational foreign companies?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe) would be the first to tell the member that only this very morning we met with a company to try to promote things that will help us in our waste management. On any occasion where we can assist in developing the industry here in Canada we will do so. Of course we want it to be Canadian as much as it possibly can be. We put on a seminar to help our companies within the last eight months. It was sponsored by our ministry to develop expertise in waste management. We have done these things and we are doing the things we can to encourage Canadian companies.

As I said previously, 75 per cent of the contracts the member is talking about are now Canadian. That is a very large percentage. We can't force Canadian companies to make a submission if they choose not to. We will encourage them. That is what we want in this province and we will do everything we can. But when we get to the bottom line, if they will not apply then we will have to insist on as much Canadian content as we can.

When there is only one bidder, we can't insist that the company is ineligible because it is not Canadian because the importance of that program to the useful recovery of waste is just far too important to put off. It is fundamental in this province for us to have a sound management policy for waste.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: Is the minister then indicating there has been some transfer of responsibility on waste recovery to the Ministry of Energy and that if the region of Halton seriously wants to pursue recovery now it should actually meet with the Minister of Energy in order to accomplish that objective?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If we are talking about energy recovery, there is no doubt the answer is yes. If we are talking about such projects as recycling of materials or a separation of the source then that's still ours. On an individual basis, by and large the policy is that the recovery of resources, and particularly energy, is with the Minister of Energy. If the honourable member has any doubt, there is no problem at all in telling him, in a specific case, which ministry should be the lead ministry.

OTTAWA COURT FACILITIES

Mr. Roy: I have a question of the Premier. In view of the fact that he is, I understand, going to Ottawa tomorrow to a Conservative fund raising dinner; and as I also understand he is going to announce in Ottawa tomorrow that finally there is going to be a new courthouse complex built on Cartier Square; and in view of the fact his colleague the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) is very anxious about that issue—in fact last week he asked, "What the hell is going on?"—would the Premier announce to the House today, to the assembled gathering of all representatives of Ontario, that we in Ottawa are finally going to get a new courthouse complex? That announcement merits a nonpartisan type of announcement and not one made in front of a group of Tories.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member for Ottawa East is quite right; I am travelling to the nation's capital tomorrow afternoon for a number of very important reasons, including an opportunity to speak to some 600-plus people tomorrow evening, which is about 400 more than attended his leader's dinner for the same purpose a few weeks ago.

In that the member for Ottawa East has never been reluctant to come to Tory gatherings before, I remember welcoming him on one occasion—

Mr. Roy: I'll go myself if you will make that announcement.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly, I'm inviting him, come to the dinner; as long as he pays the price he is welcome.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted a supplementary? In view of the fact that the present Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Henderson) said a few months ago, "If we get Tories in Ottawa, there will be no problems about the courthouse," why does the Premier not make an announcement in this House today? Why does he not show some respect for the Legislature? Why does he not show some respect for the administration of justice and make the announcement? Is he or is he not going to make an announcement on the new courthouse; yes or no?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We might have contemplated making several announcements yesterday but because the honourable member was in the courts—and I know why he was in the courts—

Mr. Roy: I was here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know the courts stop at five o'clock, that's why he was here last night; there are no courts after five o'clock.

[2:45]

One of my customs has been to try to relate government as directly to the people who are affected as I can. I think it's really very important if there are any announcements to be made that it is only appropriate to make them in that community which is most directly affected. I must say to the member for Ottawa East, at this particular moment in time I am not exactly sure what I am going to say tomorrow night, except that I will bring his regrets to the assembled multitude because of pressure of public business back here. I will explain that to them, I will do that for him.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the courthouse is to be located in Ottawa Centre, I take it that is a tribute to the representation that riding has had since 1971. Perhaps I could ask the Premier if he would explain why the government has apparently chosen not to locate the courthouse in the Ottawa Teachers' College building, now owned by the province, on the Cartier Square site? Why cannot the courthouse be put in renovated facilities there? Why is it intended instead, as I understand, to have a brand new building alongside of it?

Mr. Conway: Will Pierre Benoit be at the head table?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know who will be there, except with that number of people obviously a lot of former good Liberals will be there tomorrow night; a lot of former good Liberals, as we discovered last Wednesday night. The only two I know won't be there are John Turner and Donald Macdonald. I think the member should await whatever is said tomorrow night, and if some mention is made of the courthouse I am sure we would be delighted to discuss it here again on Thursday.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

Mr. Swart: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Pursuant to the disaster at Mississauga, is the minister aware of the potential for a catastrophe of tremendous proportions that exists in some of the railyards in this province? As an example, may I bring to his attention the situation in the Canadian National Railways yard at the village of Port Robinson, which I have personally witnessed. I have photographs documenting it and I will send one over to the minister now?

Would he believe that, frequently spotted side by side, are cars of propane, cars of vinyl chloride, which is a deadly toxic material, and a car or two of picric acid, which is a powerful explosive? Has the minister made or is he making strong representation to the federal government and the Canadian Transport Commission to have laws and regulations enacted and enforced to prevent that sort of thing taking place in the rail yards?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Due to the fact that the people of the village of Port Robinson are locked in by the canal on the west—there is no bridge—and the Welland River on the south and they have no way to escape except to go to the east over the railroad tracks, would the minister immediately contact the CNR and the CTC and insist that the flammable, the explosive and the toxic cars are always spotted at widely separated locations?

Also, would he tell us what sort of emergency plans he has to deal with the type of catastrophe that could take place when those cars are in the situation that they are?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, my response to the first question was indeed brief, because we had made those representations. By and large, I think it might have been better to redirect the member's second question to the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow). He does tell me, however, in response to the member's question, that he was speaking with the Honourable Donald Mazankowski today and an interim order will be placed on the make-up of trains, I believe either today or tomorrow. I would suggest perhaps in future if the member wanted more details on that particular aspect of the problem he should direct the question to that minister.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. J. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of the Environment: Is the minister aware that contaminated soil from the vicinity of the Mississauga train accident is being deposited in the Chinguacousy landfill site in the town of Caledon? Furthermore, why were the mayor of Caledon and the chairman of the region of Peel not advised of this action?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, through you to the member; yes, I was aware of that development. I am advised the region was advised of this move. By and large we think the movement of waste within the region should be their responsibility, with our approval, so I am not aware of the reason the chairman and the mayor were not advised. However, I do believe the appropriate officials in that municipality were aware of it, and perhaps they can tell us why they did not advise the chairman.

Mr. J. Johnson: Supplementary: Will the minister undertake to have officials of his ministry meet with the mayor of Caledon council, and possibly the regional chairman, to assure the people of the town of Caledon there is no safety hazard?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am quite sure the director of the region for our ministry is more than prepared to meet the mayor on any occasion. I would like to tell the members of this House that the director has informed me a great deal of thought and precaution has already gone into it.

On that particular site, there is a backup leachate collection system that will monitor the leachate. There is also a good system for monitoring the groundwater, as I understand it. We will not only ensure that those two systems are functioning properly and well, but indeed we have said we will increase the monitoring because of this movement. In other words, although we realize that such elements as styrene, toluene and certain caustic materials are going in there, we think there is an excellent system and we will be doubly sure it is being monitored.

Given that information, I can assure the member, and through the member his constituents, it is a very safe place for this waste to be deposited.

TELEPHONE CHARGES

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have a response to the question raised by the honourable member for Welland-Thorold regarding usage-sensitive pricing of telephone calls. I believe the question was directed to my colleague, the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch).

The government of Ontario has been aware for well over a year that Bell Canada has been carrying out studies on this method of pricing telephone service. In fact, counsel for the government of Ontario asked a number of questions on this specific issue during the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission hearings on Bell's rate increase application in 1978. We have also been aware that Bell wanted to undertake an experiment to assess its studies in a real-life setting.

Contrary to what the honourable member stated in his question, Bell Canada is not contemplating special charges for all local calls on a trial basis. What has been proposed is an experiment that would substitute a system of billing based on usage by the telephone subscriber for the present flat-rate, monthly fee. The experimental system of charges would be based on the number and duration of calls rather than a set fee for an unlimited number of local calls.

As I mentioned, the issue of usage-sensitive pricing has been around for some time. If introduced across the board it would constitute a fundamental change in the pricing of telephone services. It is actually in use in many European countries and in a number of jurisdictions in the United States. The system has its opponents and its supporters.

From my own point of view, there are a number of questions I would want to have answered before taking a position for or against the widespread introduction of usage-sensitive pricing. These questions deal with the potential impact on the various classes of subscribers, such as small businesses to name only one. It is difficult to get answers to the outstanding questions without some sort of experiment in a real-life setting. For this reason, I support the idea of an experiment, but only if it is made abundantly clear it is without prejudice to the final policy decision.

Once the results of the experiment and other studies are available, the final determination should be made only after full public discussion of the approach. I am pleased that this is the approach the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission has chosen to take on the issue. For our part, we will be reviewing the developments closely and will participate actively in any hearing that takes place.

Mr. Swart: In view of the minister's comments, of which we are aware, that this is being done in several other jurisdictions in the United States, why does the government need to let the camel's head into the tent in Ontario? Can the minister not find out what the situation is in those other locations? Won't he agree it will be many of those on the lower-income scale, like senior citizens, who will have to pay extra charges because of this new system. Doesn't he agree it will be Bell Canada that is going to make the gains on this? Before he permits this, should the minister not make representation to the CRTC to have the rates reduced, in view of the huge profits Bell has made this year, which are 45 per cent higher than last year?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No. I think I can safely say I do not agree with any of those statements.

ENERGY EXPORTS

Mr. Sargent: I have a question for the Premier. Mr. Speaker, if you're going to be confused by this question, which you probably will be, I know the people of Ontario are too, on this matter.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member need not be defensive, just put the question.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Premier advise the House of the rationale of going to Chicago or somewhere in the United States and suggesting that Canada will be manufacturing power for export, the rationale in saying we have a 40 per cent surplus in power; the rationale in increasing rates 150 per cent in three years; the rationale of another 16 per cent coming up on January 1; and the rationale of spending $5 billion in Darlington for more surplus power; while Hydro is advertising in the papers, telling the people they should not use too many Christmas lights in order to save power?

If there is a shortage of power, and no one seems to know what we have, and if we're going to finance this whole—

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully. You started out with a question: Can the Premier explain? Then you asked him four different things. Perhaps the Premier can explain, and then you'll have an opportunity for a supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the honourable member's first question was why did I go to Chicago? I think that's a very good question. It will take me several minutes to explain why I went to Chicago.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are some very obvious reasons. One reason is that my mother-in-law is there. The honourable member wasn't here when I went through some of this the other day.

Mr. Foulds: Are you going home tonight?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I said that's why I went. Who paid?

Mr. Speaker: Meanwhile back at the ranch.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, that may be a more appropriate phrase west of here than around here at the moment. Anyway, when I was in Chicago, it was not part of my prepared address to sell power to the state of Illinois power authority—I forget what it is over there, Consolidated Edison or whatever. I did mention, however, that there was the export potential of power from Ontario, because the gentleman from Quebec was there talking about the export capacity of Baie James.

As I have explained to the House, but I want the member to understand what I said so there will be no misunderstanding, I did say Ontario was closer to Illinois than Quebec and that we would be delighted to consider the export of power but, being very realistic, the chances of selling power to Illinois are very slim.

I think part of the question was do we have a surplus of power here at the moment. My information is we do at this time have a modest surplus of electrical energy in this province, for which I think we should be very grateful in the light of other events.

The next question was why should Ontario Hydro be encouraging conservation. Because we do have this modest surplus doesn't mean we should be extravagant with the use of electrical energy. That, I think, would be a reasonable position for the member to understand.

Those were the answers to three of the questions. What was the fourth?

Mr. Sargent: If we are to finance this whole crazy program with billions of dollars to give us more surplus power, could the Premier say why in the hell the people of Ontario are told not to use power but to keep on buying oil? Would it not be better to use this electric power for heat instead of oil? Does anyone know where we are going in this matter? I don't, and the public doesn't know; and sure as hell the Minister of Energy doesn't know.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't think the honourable member should presume that because he doesn't know the Minister of Energy doesn't know.

Mr. Roy: It's obvious he doesn't know.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't argue with that member for a moment that he himself doesn't know.

Mr. Sargent: I don't know, I admit it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Can I try to help? We are really very modest, but I will try to explain it to the member. First, we are not encouraging a greater use of oil; in fact we are encouraging substitution. The member understands that; we are at this time encouraging the substitution of natural gas for oil for home heating purposes in those communities where that service can be provided.

Mr. Swart: Not in your own buildings.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the member wants to debate about the building here on some other occasion I would be delighted to do it.

We are discouraging the use of oil. This is one reason some of the members opposite have been mildly supportive of Ontario Hydro's commitment to nuclear-generating capacity. Nuclear generated electricity is a legitimate substitute for thermal or oil-generated electricity. This is one of the great pluses we have going for us. I want to compliment the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) who, with all of his eloquence, persuaded the entire New Democratic Party across Canada at their convention to understand this was a more viable approach—over the objections of the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes), I would assume.

Mr. Martel: That was a low blow.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am just complimenting the member. The member says that was a low blow. What I said was the truth. I thought the member for York South did very well whenever I saw him on television.

I say to the honourable member we will also be encouraging the substitution of electrical energy for some other forms of energy. I think it is a legitimate question. We are certainly going to encourage it. That is one of the reasons I think the investment in electrical generating capacity is very valid. There are areas of substitution.

If the member has a further supplementary, I will be delighted to try to help him with it.

DEATH OF FOSTER CHILD

Mr. McClellan: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services with respect to the death of Shawn Lee Mandamin, an infant from the Whitedog reserve who was killed by a children's aid society foster parent.

May I ask the minister when he first learned of this death? Second, will he table with us the results of any ministerial investigation into the circumstances surrounding the death of Shawn Lee Mandamin?

Third, can the minister explain to us how it is possible for a child to be killed by child abuse in a children's aid society foster home in this province?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am not sure I can remember all three of those questions in proper sequence. I will do my best.

I can't give the honourable member a precise date off the top of my head as to when I first learned of the incident; but I assure him it was very shortly after the incident occurred. With respect to the reports that I have received in the ensuing period, I would share with the honourable member at this point that there would appear on the basis of those reports to be no indication of any lack of precaution or appropriate supervision taken by the children's aid societies. But I also would assure the honourable member I have asked my staff, following the receipt of any reports from the field, that I personally be provided with all of the available files relating to this case so that I might personally review them with some of the senior staff of the ministry in determining whether it is a situation where some further action might appropriately be taken.

I now think I have forgotten the third part.

Mr. McClellan: The third part was simply an explanation on how it could happen.

Let me ask you, by way of supplementary, in view of the decline in the number of suitable foster homes in this province, which your September paper documented; and in view of the enormity of this atrocity and the relationship between the Paquette tragedy and the inadequacy of foster home care for francophones, may I ask the minister if he will consider and undertake an independent public inquiry into the adequacy of foster home care in this province, with particular reference to the availability of adequate and suitable foster care for ethnic minorities and native people?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think the honourable member is perhaps interpreting this tragic incident beyond the logical and reasonable implications of this case. I think, as he knows and as we have discussed in our estimates a short time ago, we have initiated some very significant changes in terms of foster care in the province. If he has read carefully our paper earlier this fall, he would realize that the difficulty being experienced at the moment in terms of shortage of foster care is not a general shortage. It is very easily demonstrated that about 30 per cent of the foster care homes in the province are empty at the moment and have no foster children.

There are specific areas, particularly with difficult adolescents and teenagers, where there was a shortage of appropriate foster care placements. We are addressing those problems, along with some of the broader issues relating to foster care.

I would say to the honourable member that subject to a personal review of all of the files relating to this case, I see absolutely no reason at present for a public inquiry in view of the initiatives that we have taken, beginning before and subsequent to this incident, and certainly subsequent to the Paquette case.

INTEREST RATES

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Given that the present Landlord and Tenant Act states that the amount of interest paid by landlords to tenants on rental deposits is six per cent; and given that the Residential Tenancy Act, otherwise known as Bill 163, has not had that portion proclaimed which deals with landlord and tenant matters; and given that the interest rates have risen enormously since the Residential Tenancy Act received third reading in June of this year; would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations bring in a bill this session which would amend both the present act and the new Residential Tenancy Act and therein increase to 12 per cent the amount of interest paid to tenants on rental deposits?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will look at that when I get back the decision from the court on a referral under the Constitutional Questions Act. It would be very improper for me to begin to amend acts that are under the scrutiny of the appeal court of Ontario.

Mr. Epp: I wonder whether the minister would give a commitment that he would increase to 12 per cent the amount of interest, if the court of appeal supports the Landlord and Tenant Act. I know that the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) has referred it to the court of appeal.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I would look at it. It depends when the decision comes down, because interest rates are fluctuating. Some of them, in the United States, began to go downwards.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the answer given by the minister mean that as of December 1 the offices will not be open to handle the landlord and tenant complaints, as set out in the legislation we passed earlier?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I don't know there was ever a December 1 date. As a matter of fact, it seems to me I was advised by the member's party towards the end of the debate to allow a little bit longer. In any event, I cannot begin to administer an act until there is a decision from the courts as to whether that piece of legislation is constitutional.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CULT REGULATION ACT

Mr. Sweeney moved first reading of Bill 191, An Act to Monitor and Regulate the Activities of Cults and Mind Development Groups.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide a mechanism for identifying cults and mind development groups that may cause a danger to the mental health of adherents. The bill establishes the commission for the investigation of cults and mind development groups, to investigate and report on the activities of such groups.

The bill also establishes certain reporting requirements for cults and groups that are designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Where a person has suffered physical or mental illness as a result of adherence to a cult or mind development group, the bill requires that the cult or group shall reimburse the Ontario Health Insurance Plan for any amounts paid by the plan as a result of that illness.

LIFELINE ACT

Mr. Sargent moved first reading of Bill 192, An Act to provide for a Basic Residential Power Rate applicable to the Essential Energy Needs of Residential Households in Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, this bill is a legislative proposal to provide a low, fixed, fair price for the amount of electricity a family needs for the basics, such as lighting, refrigeration, and electrical necessities. This amount is about 500 kilowatts per month and should cost about two cents per kilowatt. A user of 500 kilowatts would have a monthly bill of less than $10.

[3:15]

HEALTH INSURANCE
AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Breaugh moved first reading of Bill 193, An Act to amend the Health Insurance Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require the Minister of Health to publish in the Ontario Gazette the names of physicians and medical practitioners who have withdrawn from the Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

NOTICES OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr. McClellan: Pursuant to standing order 28(a), Mr. Speaker, I'd like to give notice of dissatisfaction with the answer to my question from the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) and desire to debate it upon the adjournment of the House this evening.

Mr. Speaker: Also, pursuant to standing order 28, the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs) has given notice of his dissatisfaction with an answer to a question provided by the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow). That matter will be dealt with first tonight.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ASSESSMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved second reading of Bill 164, An Act to amend the Assessment Act.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an opening comment?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, Mr. Speaker. When I introduced Bill 164 for first reading on November 6, 1979 I made some explanatory comments which I would now like to reiterate as we begin to consider this bill in detail.

When the government postponed property tax reform it was apparent the freeze of assessment would have to continue until alternative tax policies were developed. Without changes in the property tax system to compensate for differentials between current assessments and market-value assessments, the introduction of market value would lead, of course, to extensive increases in taxes on residential and farm properties generally. It is to prevent these extensive shifts in taxation that it is necessary to freeze assessments at the current levels for taxation in 1980.

Since deferment in property tax reform, the ministry has undertaken to remove the assessment inequity within classes of property in 14 municipalities, and currently an additional 75 to 80 municipal and school jurisdictions have indicated a desire to proceed with section 86 reassessments for the taxation year 1980.

I have explained, on previous occasions, that the application of section 86 enables assessors to correct inequities within classes of property without allowing the shifts in the tax burden from one class of property to another.

The additional amendment proposed to section 86 gives an assurance to the municipalities that it is the government's policy to make general reassessments under section 86 when requested to do so by council. I believe this assurance is necessary as there are three challenges now before the courts to the use of section 86 for general reassessment purposes.

This amendment will remove any doubt of the validity of the tax rolls of the 14 municipalities that have already used section 86, and it will also alleviate any concerns that municipalities now deliberating over whether to request section 86 might have. I am confident the courts in the long run would agree with the use and interpretation given by my ministry to section 86 of the act, but it is better to clarify the situation now than to wait for several years while the issue is debated in the courts.

Finally, transmission pipelines and transformer and generating stations owned by Ontario Hydro are assessed on the basis of statutory rates, the former by length and diameter the latter on the basis of area. In parallel with the general freeze on assessed values, the rates for each type of property have remained unchanged since 1971.

While the equalization factors were frozen in 1979, the assessment on transmission pipelines and hydro properties remain at a consistent level with other properties in the municipalities. With the introduction of new equalization factors in 1979, and without the proposed amendment, the effect of these statutory assessments would have been a significant reduction in tax dollars received by any municipality with this type of property within its boundaries. The amendment permits 1970 factors to continue in use for the statutory assessment.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak for a few minutes on this bill, which I think is somewhat important.

Since coming to this Legislature two and a half years ago, I and many members with much more seniority than I, have experienced a continuation of stopgap measures to try in some way to repair the assessment area of the Ministry of Revenue. We have had one piece of stopgap legislation after another. They have been trying to plug the holes here and there where problems arise as if they were holes in a dike.

Whenever we get a piece of legislation, in most cases it is a knee-jerk reaction. We were assured unequivocally last year when some changes were made that the ministry did not need the legislative power to bring in regulations concerning section 86. Yet now all of a sudden, after a number of court cases, we have legislation proposed to deal with this matter, to give the minister the power to have certain standards and certain regulations.

Obviously the ministry is not as sure of its position as the minister is trying to imply in this House. I think it is quite clear that if the ministry were that sure it would win the court cases it would not be bringing in the legislation. In discussing this with a number of solicitors in the greater Toronto area, I am assured the ministry was told a year or more ago it was not on firm ground with respect to this situation and that the minister would have to bring in legislation to give the ministry that power.

We on this side of the House would like to see that the ministry has a total picture of what assessment is in Ontario—the problems associated with it—and to have some kind of corrective action dealing with the total concept rather than on a piecemeal basis.

We also know the assessors in the ministry are very frustrated. We know, for instance, there are around 1,750 to 1,850 assessors in Ontario, a proportion of the population much larger than prevails in New York state, in California, in Alberta, Quebec and many other provinces. This is a very weak and ineffective system, where the ministry continually has to send out more assessors than are necessary. If the assessment were easy to explain to the public and easily defensible, we would not have to have so many assessors going about and trying to repair the dike, trying to support the other assessors in what they do.

The other problem I want to raise has to do with the power given to the minister to have all these various standards. I don't think the present assessment in the province is very clear to the public. Some of the rules and procedures that would be drawn up would obviously be drawn up at the instigation of the minister himself.

This House would not have any idea what the procedure is; in fact many of the regulations are kept secret within the ministry. We know, for instance, 14 municipalities applied last year for the right to impose section 86, which equalizes assessment. Mr. Speaker, I know you are very familiar with this. As a former municipal politician yourself you are aware of the hazards of assessment and so forth. We know they weren't given the information on the impact of the new assessment on the municipality. Why not?

Only a few days ago there was an article in the Toronto Star about Etobicoke requesting this information and being denied it. We are told if they were given this information the politicians in Etobicoke as well as in North York, Parry Sound, Waterloo, Hamilton and all over, might not react in the way they should react. We are not told exactly how they should react. I suppose the suggestion is they should ask for section 86 then go ahead and impose it.

Would the minister tell this House if that is the way they operate in the Ministry of Revenue, or in Treasury or in other ministries; in other words, civil servants don't give us the information because if we had it we might make the wrong decisions? They are virtually telling municipalities, "We won't give you the information because you might not make the kind of decisions we want you to make." This is a completely wrong kind of approach to what they suggest should be open government. The council shouldn't make the decision, neither should the people know where they stand when they ask for section 86.

The other power this act gives to the minister is to create new classes. There has been talk of the city of Toronto having about 37 different classes of assessments. The problem we see here is a continual application of new classes would develop. All of a sudden, where five or six or seven properties are slightly different from some other properties in a municipality, you create a new class. The minister would have this power.

I am not sure the ministry should have that power. I think there should be a number of questions answered with respect to the number of classes created within a municipality and the authority of the minister to create these new classes.

Under section 90 of the Assessment Act a court can decide whether assessments should be lowered or increased based on similar properties. We would suggest the section that should be used is section 27, which has to do with market value.

One of the reasons section 90 appears so inequitable is because it is very difficult for a person to appeal that particular section. If you go before a judge or before a particular court, the long list of lawyers representing the ministry—costing us hundreds of thousands of dollars every year; in fact, the amount of money we are spending in assessments and on legal fees is running into millions of dollars—the legal support for the ministry, can suggest that based on similar properties your assessment should be X or Y.

The problem with that assumption is they then make the suggestion to the judge that the person representing the property owner can't in turn investigate various similar properties; in other words, when you have similar cases and they propose that it be based on similar cases, the defence, in this case the legal support for the person putting in the appeal, should be able to investigate the similar properties because they in turn might have been created on some erroneous information. They can't do that.

This party is very much concerned with the problems associated with the ministry. For instance, if you look at section 2(1)(c)(f), the second page, it says:

"subject to subsection 2, the assessment roll of a municipality to be returned in the year 1979 shall be the assessment of all real property as set forth in the assessment roll returned for the year 1978 for taxation in the year 1979 as amended, added to or otherwise altered up to the date when the assessment roll for taxation in the year 1980 is returned,

"provided that where the assessor is of the opinion that an assessment to be shown on the assessment roll to be returned for the year 1974, 1975, 1976, 1978 or 1979 is inequitable with respect to the assessment of similar real property in the vicinity, the assessor may alter the value of the assessment to the extent necessary to make the assessment equitable with the assessment of such similar real property."

I am told that there have been a number of court cases dealing with the word "vicinity." In other words, some assessors may suggest that the vicinity may only be within a square mile. Other assessors suggest it might be a number of miles away in another municipality. We have had no suggestion by the ministry to correct this particular problem, yet it's continually giving rise to new court cases.

I don't know why the ministry wouldn't suggest "assessment of similar real property in the municipality" which would then clear up that matter. I know in my own municipality there was one large industry which appealed their assessment. They brought in similar properties which were about a mile and a half away but in another municipality, the municipality of Kitchener, and because it wasn't in the same municipality or within a block or two of it the judge in that case ruled that it wasn't in the vicinity. Other judges are ruling that it can be within two, three, four or five miles. So I think if this bill were corrected it should be "within the municipality" rather than "in the vicinity," because it's such a broad term, as you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker.

We on this side of the House believe that the minister is giving himself too much power to create classes and is constantly trying to plug the holes. As a result of this I want clearly to indicate that we also think the ministry is getting deeper and deeper into a tremendous schemozzle of problems without a clear explanation to the public of Ontario.

We therefore would recommend that this bill go to committee. We think there are a lot of questions to be answered and the public deserves an explanation and therefore the best place to do that is not in the House here but in committee, where we can call on a number of experts in the field to give a clear indication as to what the problems are and how they can be resolved. There is a lot of expertise out there. I think the public deserves an explanation and I think the members of this House would like to get some answers. The best forum in which to do that is to have it done in a committee.

Mr. Charlton: Through you to the minister, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say here we are again. It bothers me greatly that we are doing this again. The member for Waterloo North, who was just speaking, is all upset about section 86 and whether or not this amendment is giving the minister additional powers under section 86 to create new classes and so on. I would like to assure him that the present definitions in the Assessment Act of classes and what like properties really are are loose enough that anything is already a class under the Assessment Act and policy is what sets the classes in reality, and always has under the act.

Going back to the minister and back to the postponement of market value, or property tax reform at least, which is what we should be talking more carefully about, I would like to ask the minister to hearken back a little bit. I know he wasn't the minister at the time, but I would assume these words came from his present staff, most of whom are still there.

The then minister said in 1977, when we were debating the same bill, minus a couple of sections: "I am confident that these amendments are the proper course of action at this time. When I became the Minister of Revenue, I stated emphatically that I would proceed with a market-value assessment program only when I could be assured by a complete review of all the implications that the individual groups of property owners would not be hurt. Postponing the program for one year will provide me sufficient time to fulfil that promise."

As I suggest, it would seem to me that those words were stated in care in 1977 by the former minister. They came from her staff with assurances we could solve the problem within one year. This is two years down the road. Everybody, for whatever reason, seems to be totally afraid and totally confused by the implementation of property tax reform and the political consequences of implementation. That should say something to all of us about the whole program of market-value reassessment. It says something very serious to me.

I say to the minister it should be quite obvious from the debate today that even the legislators in this House don't fully understand what the reassessment is about, what the consequences really are and what the consequences are of a further postponement. That statement should also be familiar to the minister. That was a statement I made during the debate on this bill in 1977. I made the same statement during the estimates in 1978, on the bill in 1978, in the estimates this year and I will make them again today.

We are no further ahead. We haven't come any closer. The present minister last year said there is a great deal of inequity in some areas of the province as far as assessment is concerned. We have to bite the bullet, as the saying goes. That's going to have to come from all the members of this Legislature and not just from the government, because we need the support of the members across the way if we are going to try to correct this situation. I hope we can come up with something that will be reasonably acceptable to all members of the House so that we can straighten out the problems we have as far as assessment is concerned.

We are no closer. It's the story we got in 1976, in 1977, and last year. That's the story we are getting again this year. The members on this side of the House are not aware of any proposal. The last proposal we saw was from the joint committee in the spring of 1978, the proposal which was canned by the Treasurer in June 1978. How can the Minister of Revenue expect to get agreement from the members on this side of the House on property tax reform, whether it be market value or whether it be some other system? How can the Minister of Revenue expect to get support from the members on this side of the House when we don't know where they are heading? We don't know what they are proposing. We don't even know if they are thinking of anything at this point except perhaps section 86, the program they are in, and we went through a rather lengthy debate on section 86 during the estimates.

This bill deals with better definition of section 86 and better clarifies powers which I agree with the minister he already had, anyway. But this bill does not deal with the debate we have been having for 10 years now about the need for property tax reform. It doesn't deal with it at all.

I would like again to raise the attention of the minister for a moment. Last year I spoke to the minister about some of the problems that were developing in the property tax sector, some of the problems that had been developing gradually over the last 10 years. In response to some of the concerns I raised with the minister, he said: "I agree, as I said before, with the urgency of the situation. First of all, I want to have the government finish their review of the report"—this was during the estimates last year, by the way—"from the provincial and local government committee, whether it should be refined, adopted, or what; the recommendation has to go before cabinet. Whether the government will adopt that or not it is too early to tell.

"I have discussed it with the Treasurer and have expressed to him the urgency of something being done. If we have to look at other means"—This goes into something I suggested to the minister last year, something I suggested during the debate in 1977, that the only way we were ever going to come to consensus on property tax reform in this House—whether it be market value as it is presently defined in the act, or whether we decide that we can't overcome the problems in market value and go to something else that is more equitable—regardless, I suggested the only way we were ever going to come to a consensus was to put something on the table, whether it be something as vague as the question of property tax reform, or something as specific as a government proposal, where we could sit down in this House or in one of the committees of this House and discuss it and amend it, and kick it around.

Since 1969 we have never had a proposal in this House to deal with in any way, shape, or form. It has all been done by floating balloons to see the reaction. We have never been presented with a package that we could in effect deal with. The only thing we have been presented with is postponements. I have suggested to the government, from my point of view and from our point of view on this side of the House, that we thought perhaps the matter should be referred to a committee of the whole House.

The minister responded, and this is in early 1978, before the last postponement, "We have to look at other means. I am sure the government would. It is not a matter for me to decide actually, but the government may look at a committee structure of some kind if that became a last resort. Of course, that would delay things again and I believe whatever we are going to do should be done before the end of June."

It is long past the end of June, long past by a year and a half. We are no closer to any solution and we are going to see another postponement bill next year, or we are going to see some significant changes in the government's approach to the present system but we are not going to see implementation of market value and we still have no proposal to deal with.

Yes, the minister was correct in the spring of 1978. A committee may have spent some considerable time wrestling with the problem and the committee may not have been able to come to any conclusions, either. But if nothing else had come out of a committee of this House, at least there would be a number of members of this House more familiar with the problems that confront us in property tax reform. They would be more familiar with the hurdles we still have to get over in order to provide fair and more equitable property taxation across Ontario.

At least we still wouldn't be in the boat where there are only four or five members in this House who have any understanding at all of what it is we're talking about.

I don't want to hear from the minister that things the opposition do delay the process, or that there hasn't been any agreement on or understanding of the government's position from this side of the House, because we've suggested just about everything we possibly can to assist in the process and to become a part of the process. None of those suggestions have been taken by the minister. We're here again, with a bill postponing property tax reform, at least in part, because of the misunderstandings that exist.

During the debate on this bill last fall, only a year ago, we attempted to point out to the minister that on that basis, in addition to the rationale that already existed for finding a more equitable system of assessment, just to postpone the reassessment once again for one year, unless we were going to be prepared to come back this year in a very positive way to discuss legislation and implement assessment reform wasn't even worth really discussing.

The minister assured us as best he could last year that the year between last fall and this fall would not be wasted. We're still no further ahead and it's time the Minister of Revenue, the Treasurer, and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs decided this problem is one that has to be dealt with publicly, up front with the members of this Legislature, with municipal people from across the province and with the public of this province.

I don't happen to have one with me but I can recall a pamphlet the assessment division put out—I guess that was actually before the division was in the Ministry of Revenue—but it was a pamphlet we put out in 1970 and 1971 when we were going to homes the first time around on market value reassessments. It was a pamphlet that laid out very carefully for the taxpayers of this province what we were trying to do in terms of a uniform system which could provide fairness and equity at market value across Ontario. It laid out as carefully as it could be in a short leaflet the inequities that existed in the current system—inequities which I point out are far greater in 1979 in the current assessment rolls than they were in 1970 and 1971. It very carefully laid out those inequities and gave to the people of this province a sense of some of the things that were wrong and also a sense of where some of the solutions lay, but also it obviously gave them a fairly false sense that something was being done to correct that.

It was almost 10 years ago when they read that pamphlet and they're still waiting. We're still not talking in this House about anything specific to change any of that. That has to come to an end. I'm suggesting that to the minister and I hope he'll discuss it with his colleagues, especially his colleague who is supposed to be responsible for policy in this area, the Treasurer. We've been told so many times that the Minister of Revenue doesn't set policies, he just brings in the bills. The Treasurer is not even here, so we can't even relate any of this directly to him.

Perhaps the minister can suggest that the Treasurer have a look at Hansard and seriously consider this along with his colleagues in the other portfolios that are affected. It is time that we, as legislators in this House, were all apprised of the problems specifically so we can sit down together and resolve them. Although this bill does a number of things the minister wants it to do in terms of section 86, which the minister discussed very carefully, it only provides a very limited range of improvements in the property tax system in this province.

It doesn't deal with the overall questions and I understand we cannot proceed with market value assessment until we have a whole package in place. We are not going to get a package as long as we are not discussing a package. And we are not. Nobody is. We gave that up in 1978 and nothing has been discussed, proposed or even carefully looked at since then, except in total secret.

It is time to go beyond that and it is time we reached the stage where we can do what the minister suggested last year, support a proposal for property tax reform in the province.

Mr. Nixon: I appreciate hearing the views of the member for Waterloo North who, as members well know, has been mayor of a major municipality, and those of the member for Hamilton Mountain, who has been, and perhaps will be again, a professional assessor. I particularly appreciate their frank expression that they don't—

Ms. Gigantes: Maybe he'll do a professional assessment of you.

Mr. Philip: In your case you only fill half of the criteria.

Mr. Nixon: Yes. There may be some significance to this interjection. I will read it in Hansard. It will probably bowl me over.

When the member for Hamilton Mountain says there are probably only five people in the House who understand the principles of assessment I really believe he is being entirely too generous as I don't believe any of us do. I have said repeatedly, I am a good friend of the minister and an admirer of him on a personal basis, but I do not think he does either.

I think when the full story of the provincial problems of assessment is told—and it will be a very boring story; nobody will ever bother looking at it. In fact, it will be one of the most horrendous stories of the subversion of good intention that really can be written about anything that is done here.

It seems to me, if the honourable minister is even half aware of the problems that the decisions of the government, taken on certain advice, are causing, he would just about as soon be on a motorcycle back in the cold weather of Parry Sound than he would be sitting here as a minister. I called it a fiasco before and I don't suppose there is a better descriptive word.

I wish, frankly, that I could vote against this bill. I cannot, of course, because it simply postpones for another year the application of market value assessment while we attempt to find procedures whereby it can be made acceptable and fair, as well as recognize the political problems associated with it. The rest of the bill I really believe should be rejected out of hand. I have discussed it with my colleague, our critic in this area, who has had the advantage of some good advice.

Some of these people refer to assessment as black magic and I must say that for me, in many respects, it is. I suppose, coming from a rural municipality where the assessor was a kindly gentleman sitting in the back room of the local council office, where one could go and talk to him and he knew your farm and he knew the business property, assessment was quite simple. There was a certain standard approach. I can't recall a farmer giving me the impression that he felt his assessment was unfair compared to that of his neighbour. If it was, he could go down and see our mutual friend, Frank, in the assessment office, or better still, he would be out standing in the barn talking about it with him.

I realize one can't really do that with the Bank of Nova Scotia or the Bank of Montreal, but if some of the principles, the straightforward, upfront principles that were a part of what could be called old-fashioned assessment were used when dealing with some of the minister's commercial clients and their high-priced lawyers, we would be far better off.

There are all sorts of stories going around the political grapevine of the pressures that are used, perhaps not by the minister, but by the people who are advising him; of coming in with extraordinarily high assessments expecting them to be reduced by revision somewhere down to where they think they might be fair, of using new assessments in a punitive manner, when some taxpayers, whether it be a large corporation or not, have the temerity to challenge the wisdom of the assessor who comes in and makes some sort of an evaluation. I can't directly blame the minister for this. But he and his four or five predecessors have been completely impotent in controlling either the policy or the administration of this concept of centralized assessment.

I believe many people, including members of the Legislature, have simply thrown these bills over their shoulders and relied upon the effectiveness and the good motives and experience and study of one or two members of the Legislature to deal with it.

It doesn't happen to be a subject that is very interesting to most people—not until it gets to the point where it would probably back the problems of the Minister of the Environment and of the Treasurer off the map if the truth were known. Assessment problems are horrendous and getting worse by the month and nobody from the minister on down knows what to do about it.

I have the feeling many of his staff members have simply thrown up their hands, walked off the job, gone into tax consultancy, probably—which is a pretty smart thing to do—and left him with two or three people. These somehow have to make the responsible decisions and proffer what they consider to be the appropriate amendments. But the idea of this bill leaving even more to the discretion of the minister and the people who advise him does not attract me. I have respect for the honourable minister's integrity and his basic good judgement, but I think he's caught up in a machine that is not of his making, and he can't even find the stop button.

The proposal, I suppose as a last resort, that the matter be thrown into the lap of the Legislature is a good one. I don't think this bill contains by any means the blueprint for any final solution, if I may use that phrase in this connection. But I do believe it should not be amended without a good deal of study. I don't think it has to be that time-consuming, explaining the implications of the appropriate amendments which are going to satisfy the people who feel these amendments are going to give the minister powers which are unfair, which will remove the real appeal possibilities from the taxpayers, corporate or individual.

The member for Waterloo North has said quite strongly to the members of the House, particularly to the minister, that we do want this to go, not to the committee of the whole but to a standing committee for such a review.

If the minister really thinks the assessment rolls next year are going to return market value assessment across the province, we don't believe him any more. This bill simply postpones it for one year. Even if he wants to stick with what may be a resolve to do that, I would think we should have a committee review of the bill. It need not be lengthy but it must have the advantage of hearing from people outside the Legislature involved in this, either in a process of some litigation or with some experience. They would have a chance to express their views, and we, as members of the House would have a chance to put forward amendments.

My colleague, the member for Waterloo North, has prepared rather elaborate amendments on which he has worked hard and on which he has had good advice. I've had a look at them and I believe they would be effective. But I don't think it is sufficient to throw them into the mill here, with four or five people interesting themselves in it. The matter really should be dealt with by one of the standing committees so we can look at the proposed amendments and see the Band-Aid is going to be an effective one, until such time as we, in the collective sense, can bring some order out of a matter that is certainly chaotic.

I consider assessment is, in the words of somebody else, black magic. There's no way I can order my brain to have any kind of an understanding, other than in its simplest form, the way it used to be applied, in an upfront, straightforward way.

I really do believe the collective wisdom and the good intentions of the members of this House, meeting in committee, with the assistance of the minister's advisers and with impartial advisers, can give us the kind of advice that will at least alleviate some of these problems for the coming year.

I can't say any more than I said during the minister's estimates as to how dissatisfied we are, both with the work he's done and, frankly, with the work his staff and advisers have done in assessment. Perhaps there was a bit of light at the end of the tunnel when the policy man was a Treasurer who interested himself in this and was taking initiatives, who knew where he was going and everybody sensed he did, too. He was quite prepared to ride roughshod over many objections, political and otherwise, to accomplish something he thought was right. In the understanding of responsible government the opposition can object to it, offer alternatives, vote against it and campaign in the hustings against it. But this way we're not getting anywhere. The direction has been lost and the chaos is deepening. I would like to vote against the bill except that under the explanatory notes it says, "The purpose of the bill . . . is to postpone to December 1980 the return of assessment at market value." On that basis I believe that principle of the bill has to be supported. The rest of it leaves me in grave doubt. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it must be reviewed by a standing committee.

Mr. Isaacs: Some of the previous speakers have commented on the past history of the assessment problem we now face. I want to look forward for a few moments because I think it's important, that when we review a bill in this House we consider the impact the bill will have on the people of Ontario. Hopefully that impact will be a positive one and the bill will bring great benefits to the people of Ontario. But this bill fails abysmally on that count.

I'm sure that the minister had difficulty even bringing the bill into the House at all. I'm sure he finds it impossible to bring it in with a great sense of pride. I imagine if he had the opportunity he would like to hide under his desk while we're dealing with this bill. If he wouldn't then he should, because this bill does absolutely nothing for the benefit of the people of Ontario. It continues a system that is almost a provincial disgrace; a system that none of us can be proud of; a system that gets a little bit worse every year when we apply these Band-Aid solutions to prevent a real catastrophe, but does nothing to solve the real problem that every municipality and every property tax payer faces in this province.

On Thursday of this week a delegation from the county of Frontenac will be meeting with myself and some of my caucus colleagues. Those people will be explaining to us their concern about exactly the kind of thing this bill addresses. We will be telling them, as we tell the minister and the government now, that it's not the equalization factors and not the content of this particular bill that is the cause of the problem.

We can't solve the problem by playing around in this Mickey Mouse fashion. The entire principle of property taxes, as they are presently levied in this province, has to be looked at anew—I nearly said "reassessed," Mr. Speaker. I think that's a pretty bad word in this particular context, because the last thing we need is yet another reassessment. Section 86 is already causing a great deal of problems.

This bill postpones the implementation of market value assessment for another 12 months. I cannot accept the minister brings that to us in good faith. Indeed, he has already indicated to us that before the next 12 months expire a new system for assessment of properties and for charging of municipal taxes will be in place for 1981.

The minister is shaking his head. I don't understand that because it was certainly my understanding from the minister's previous comments and from previous comments of his colleague, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), that we would be seeing something new and different for 1981 and, therefore, prior to the deadline which this bill puts in place for market value assessment.

I don't accept—and I assume the minister's previous comments were made in good faith—this bill stands to be implemented on December 1, 1980, to bring market value to us, because I don't believe that's what the minister intends. I have to say there seems to be an element of bad faith there; that we're doing something that we know we don't want to happen but we are doing it simply because it is expedient and it gets us out of a terrible mess.

The planning with regard to market value assessment and property tax reform has been absolutely abysmal and the administration of the system that is in place now—not the day-to-day administration performed by the officials, but the administration as represented by section 86, as represented by the kind of things contained in this bill which are ways of dealing on an ad hoc basis with problems that arise in certain municipalities—that administration has been a real disaster.

We have to look forward to what the bill says about 1981 and what will happen when market value comes, if this bill is allowed to proceed to its natural conclusion. I have to say the real muddle we have now—and that is probably a good word, although I have a feeling some days that it is closer to chaos—is something that is not going to be solved by the kind of approach the minister and his colleagues have been taking in past years. We can't do it with commissions, we can't do it with recommendations from the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and from the constituent organizations of that body. I am not convinced we can do it by waiting for a recommendation from the government any more.

That is why some of those whose opinions I respect most highly and some of my colleagues from this House will be meeting this weekend to talk about the property tax system. We will not be dealing with the kind of patchwork approach that is contained in this bill and has been contained in previous bills that my colleague from Hamilton Mountain mentioned earlier. We will be starting right back at square one and we will be saying, "If there was nothing, what kind of municipal tax structure should be in place in this province to provide the kind of municipal revenue that we need to get the day-to-day work of our local councils done?"

That kind of approach has to be taken, because this kind of bill and the other measures the minister has introduced always result in some people paying more while other people pay less on a system that was working and which everybody assumed to be fair, even though it was totally and utterly unfair. As soon as you start shifting the tax burden from one group of people to another group of people and assuming the shift is distributed fairly evenly across the population, then you will have 50 per cent of the people unhappy.

That is what we see under section 86, and that is what we see under the kind of things this bill puts in place. There are no principles of who pays what. There are no principles as to exactly how an individual or a partnership or a corporation should contribute to municipal revenue, or contribute indirectly through property taxes to the province, because that in a way is what property taxes have become and that is pretty unfortunate.

The principles are not there, the problems are with us every day and the public is getting more and more irate.

We support the bill because we know it is necessary, we know what would have been put in place were it not for this bill would be even more unacceptable than the mess we have now, but it is no solution. I want to say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) and to the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp), we cannot see sending this bill to committee, because if this bill is not passed by the end of this week market value assessment will be in place as of next Monday. We cannot go along with market value assessment being postponed in this bill. It is very unfortunate, but that is a fact.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of clarification, may I ask the member a question?

Mr. Speaker: If he accepts it.

Mr. Isaacs: I will accept a question from the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk on a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: The honourable member has indicated if the bill is not in place by the end of this week, then market value assessment is established. As I read the Assessment Act, it is by the third Tuesday after December 1 that the rolls must be returned. That would surely give us a week or 10 days to deal with it. If the member is right, then we would have to consider this, but the Assessment Act says clearly the third Tuesday after December 1. It is now November 27.

Mr. Isaacs: I am not an expert on the exact timing, but I do know the rolls cannot be returned overnight. A tremendous amount of preparatory work has to be done to get the rolls returned on the day on which they have to be returned.

Mr. Epp: And none of that work has been done yet. Is that right?

Mr. Isaacs: I suggest if the day is not Monday of next week, then it is within a couple of days thereafter. Given the committee schedule we have at the moment and given the importance of the various matters that are before those committees, I still have very great difficulty in accepting anything that might postpone this because it is imposing an additional burden and additional difficulty on our municipal colleagues and on those who work in the assessment offices who have to deal with the returning of the rolls. Those people are already facing a pretty tough burden.

Mr. Philip: It is good practice for after the next election.

Mr. Isaacs: My colleague, the member for Etobicoke, refers to after the next election. I was going to make a comment about what would happen when we come near the deadline of this bill and how municipalities are still going to find themselves in difficulty because the lead time that is being provided by a one-year postponement and by the new measures we are so looking forward to, though I don't know where they are going to come from, is totally inadequate for municipalities to do their planning, their budgeting and all the work that will be necessary for the raising of taxes in 1981. The comment reminded me that by the time we get there, then my colleague from Hamilton Mountain may well be in the situation where he has to bring in a bill to postpone the implementation of market value assessment just to get us over the problem created by the present government's lack of action so the new government formed by this party can deal with the matter in a much more proper way.

That is a slight digression from the principle of the bill. There is a problem in terms of the one-year postponement. There is a problem in the way the municipalities will again not have the proper planning, the proper guidelines or the proper information by which to plan their revenue for 1981.

We support the bill, knowing it does nothing for the people of the province except to ensure an already disastrous situation doesn't get even worse. I really don't think it is something the minister can be proud of.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address myself to Bill 164, An Act to amend the Assessment Act. In the explanatory notes, the minister has indicated the purpose of the bill is to postpone to December 1980 the return of the assessment at market value. It seems to be a general policy of the government to year after year introduce an amendment to the Assessment Act to postpone market value assessment.

Perhaps what bothers me most is I don't think the minister can have it both ways. We have seen the implementation just about a month ago of the new equalization factors for municipal purposes which related particularly to market value assessment. That has caused serious difficulties throughout a number of municipalities in the province.

[4:15]

I question the minister's postponing for another year market value assessment when we are using market value assessment now for what one might call tax purposes or tax reform. To use these two particular areas for their own benefit I don't think is correct or justified by the ministry or by the government.

Previous speakers have talked about the standardization of assessment. We on this side are looking and I think every municipality is looking for the government to bring in some perspective in the area of assessment, equalized assessment or market value assessment for reevaluation of assessment in Ontario.

This has been kicked about for 10 years, 1969 to 1979. It will be postponed again to 1980. I don't know when we expect to see market value assessment.

I think it is misleading to use another section of the act to bring in a form of market value. I suppose if I look at it closely enough, this particular section 86 of the Assessment Act is voluntary; it isn't mandatory that every municipality may enter into this program. I don't know. The minister said last year he had about 50 or 60 municipalities interested in it, but only about 14 have carried out the program. I don't know if it has removed any inequity in assessment. I don't think it has. I don't think this particular section does permit a removing of inequities in assessment practices in municipalities or from one municipality to another.

Last year we were debating this particular section again—section 86. I did go into some detail of well-documented history as to the reasons why the government had failed to bring forward market value assessment. Again, I have a letter. I must read it into the record. It is addressed to the Premier of Ontario, William G. Davis. It says:

"Re market value assessment:

"In a regular session November 15, 1979, the council of the regional municipality of Niagara approved and adopted the attached resolution urging the government of Ontario to move towards the implementation of market value assessment, and property tax reform for the year 1981.

"Our council respectfully requests your consideration and support for our petition."

This is from the clerk of the municipality, W. J. Dawson. There is attached a resolution moved by Councillor Huffman and seconded by Councillor Pettit:

"Whereas the province of Ontario has announced a method implementing new equalization factors in 1980—that again is on an ad hoc basis—"whereas the province of Ontario has not indicated what action will be taken in 1981; whereas the 1980 proposals can be viewed purely as a stopgap measure; whereas there is little doubt that the long-term solution is the introduction of market value assessment and property tax reform;

"Therefore, the regional municipality of Niagara urges the province of Ontario to move towards the implementation of market value assessment and property tax reform for 1981 and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Premier of Ontario, the ministers of Treasury and Economics, Intergovernmental Affairs, Revenue and local members of the provincial parliament, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the Association of Counties and Regions of Ontario, and all regions and cities in Ontario and all area municipalities of this region."

So they are deeply concerned. As I have said, I have documented their past documents and briefs submitted to the government. Last year it was an analysis of market value assessment and the effect it would have within the region.

Well, we've seen the ad hoc measures, particularly in the Niagara region, where the introduction of new equalization factors had caused almost complete chaos in a number of smaller communities and in particular the rural municipalities in the peninsula.

I can well recall the amendment put forward by the member for Hamilton Mountain on the matter of the introduction of new equalization factors. He said it would not cause any problems. We on this side and I think even the government side said it would cause chaos in a great number of communities. Well, it certainly did. I have to give credit to the government. They did bring in amendments to say they cannot increase more than five or 10 per cent above any increase in certain municipalities. It will give some relief for a one-year period, but what happens the year after that? Year after year in the House we are going to get back into the same debate, which will take up the valuable time of this Legislature. I just can't understand why I do, in a sense—it is the matter of where they get the revenue.

I think the government is going to have to set their priorities in this particular area because I don't think municipalities can function properly under those terms. They don't know what they are going to receive in equalization grants and apportionment grants. It has an effect on them in the Niagara region and the mover of this resolution, Councillor Pettit, the mayor of Wainfleet, is deeply concerned and I can see why.

If I can find the literature I had here anyway, it related to the recent article in the Financial Post of October 13, 1979, and it's entitled "The Cost of Housing Across Canada." I am just going to pick out two particular areas to illustrate. One is Niagara Falls, which is in the regional municipality of Niagara. There, the cost of a home in 1979 was $78,500. In the area of the city of St. Catharines, perhaps one of the highest-income municipalities across Canada, the homes are valued at $73,500. There is a $5,000 difference there.

I don't know how the assessor in that area has responded to that. I don't think he has. If I look at St. Catharines and Niagara Falls and then come to the township of Wainfleet, perhaps the same home will be selling at a price of $10,000 to $12,000 or maybe $15,000 less, but on market value assessment related to the equalization factors, they will be paying more into the region for enforcement costs and even for the county schools.

I suggest the members are right; it's time the taxpayer had access to the methodology or the procedures the assessors are carrying out. I think it's time they were subject to their peers.

I suggest to the minister that if he looks at the bill, he will see it doesn't do anything in that area. All it does is give him more power to regulate certain classes of property. If he looks at section 90 of the Assessment Act in regard to appeals, every time he seems to get into a problem or somebody is appealing an assessment, he can pull this particular section out and say, "We have considered it and you are being treated all alike." You can take five or 10 properties in a municipality and say, "You are all assessed at the same level." But it could be they are over-assessed and because the assessors have over-assessed a certain particular piece of property it doesn't mean the other five or 10 property owners should have to suffer the consequences.

I suggest that's about what the bill does. It gives the minister more authority in this area and I think it's wrong. For 10 years municipalities and taxpayers have been concerned about this. As I said, the regional municipality of Niagara wants market value assessment with tax reform. I think this is what we are all looking forward to, some method of bringing about equality in assessment practices in the province, but section 86 doesn't give us that. All it does is say the ministry can revalue a property to no more than the highest in the area. It can't go beyond that level.

There's no change in the assessment for that municipality, but it does not remove the inequities within that system—there is no doubt that there are property owners who are not paying their fair share—and it doesn't resolve the matter of market value assessment. We have seen the tax shift from industrial-commercial to residential. It can be seen when one uses market value in the equalization factors, based on the 1978 sales. It is one hell of a mess.

The member for Hamilton Mountain spoke of the return of the rolls. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk was right; I think the assessment rolls are to be returned to the municipality by the third Tuesday after December 1.

I have made some inquiries and some municipalities, particularly in the Niagara region, are really concerned about this area because the ministry can offer no guarantee that the tapes or rolls will be returned so they may apply section 43 for additional assessment purposes. There is no guarantee of that, even for next year.

He says here that apparently, it may be due to a computer breakdown. Nevertheless, the assessment division claims that, hopefully, the municipalities will have their tapes by January 10, 1980. But there is no guarantee on that. From the information I have, some municipalities may not get them until the middle of February.

This says, "This is generally done by December 18 of any given year, with notices sent out by December 3." A year ago, all their notices were done by this time. I believe then there was a commitment from the ministry's assessment division, that there would be some corrective measures made to speed up the return of the assessment rolls. That was promised, I believe, back in 1977.

To date, it hasn't improved any; it has got worse. The municipalities have a tax billing to do. If they receive the tapes by January 10, they will probably be all right, but since there is no guarantee of that municipalities will be left in the dark until they actually receive their tapes.

Regardless of whether or not this bill is referred to the standing committee of justice, and perhaps it is relevant that we do send it there, we need open discussion and open debate on the matter of the procedures and practices used by the assessors in Ontario. I question if they are using the same assessment practice in that region, from one area to another. It may be close, but not that close.

I don't know what rental factor they are using. Maybe they apply it just to St. Catharines and Niagara Falls, which would differ from Port Colborne, Wainfleet or Fort Erie, even taking the sales to a willing buyer from one municipality to the other. I can see the injustices done on the equalization factors based upon market value and I can't justify saying that little people or small urban areas should carry a bigger share of the tax burden for apportionment costs for regional government or even for the school boards. I suggest it is time the assessors were subjected to their peers—let's put it that way—that the taxpayers have a right to know just what they are doing.

When the time comes that a person must appeal his assessment, he should have full knowledge of what the practices are and what methodology is being used in assessment. At the present time, I just can't see that.

A few years ago, before we got into the matter of the proposed tax reform and market value assessment, the taxpayers in the regional municipality of Niagara, and I think that takes in Lincoln and Welland county, had the opportunity to appear before an assessment review court to appeal their assessment. They didn't have to go through the expensive route they have to now to appeal their assessment because members were appointed from within the region or within the municipality or within the county to hear the thing. It didn't become an adversary system which is what it has become now. Anyone who wants to make an appeal today can't take the normal route to appear on their own behalf before a court of appeal. They have to go out and hire expert help to fight it because there is just no way they can get the information. Even the experts in this particular area do not have the information to make a reasonable appeal on their assessment.

There are many areas we should be looking at and I support my colleague in suggesting that this bill be referred to a standing committee of the Legislature, perhaps the justice committee. I think it's time all the facts were brought out. Other segments of the public should have some input to the decision-making process. It's time the minister set a goal and brought in market value assessment, perhaps phasing it in over a period of five years. I don't know what it should be.

I know a few years ago the assessment was based on about 33 per cent of market value, back in 1965 and 1962. There's no reason market value assessment can't be brought in with tax reform—not at 50 per cent, but go to 30 per cent or 32 per cent or 37 per cent. Phase it in until you hit that level of 50 per cent. It can be done.

The problem is not going to be resolved by postponing it year after year because it is compounding problems at the municipal level. It has caused serious difficulties in municipalities because they don't know where they're at from one year to another, what method they're going to have to look at for grant purposes and market value assessment. It's being used now for certain purposes. Why doesn't the minister go all the way and bring in the property tax reform that is required?

I support the resolution from the regional municipality of Niagara. They can see the inequities in the present system within that region and they want to correct it, but they can't correct it as long as the minister is going to postpone this. Section 86 means nothing to a region unless they all get into section 86. I don't think that's going to resolve the problem either until property tax reform based on market value assessment is brought in.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a minute or two of the House on this bill. I feel very uneasy about the position we in this caucus are forced to take to support the bill. I feel very much that for the first time the whole problem of market assessment has had its initiative in the government. It has borne the responsibility for all the stages of the investigation of the concept and the way in which it's going to be applied, presumably because it wanted to take responsibility for the introduction of a better system of real property assessment in Ontario.

For the first time, this minister and this government is trying to involve our colleagues on the right and ourselves in this overall problem the government is now faced with. That's a real conundrum for us, because the minister is trying to have us share in some way this interim measure—if it is an interim measure, and no one will ever know now—by which there is going to be some element of equalization in varying parts of the province, depending on where the wheel squeaks the most. I have a very real concern about us being involved at all in it. As my colleague the member for Wentworth has said, we don't have very much choice about it. It's a kind of catch 22, 10 years later, of the government's inability to come to grips with the question of market value assessment, solve the problems involved in it and introduce it, or discard the concept and start afresh.

Instead, we've had the minister—and I think it was my colleague from Cambridge (Mr. M. Davidson) who first blew the whistle on the minister with respect to the use of section 86—using section 86 as a kind of stopgap measure to produce some form of equalization in those areas where there were serious inequities in the assessment.

I'm not particularly enamoured of the suggestion of our colleagues on the right that the bill should go out to a standing committee in the last couple of weeks of this session of the assembly. I don't think that is going to accomplish very much. I don't think it can do other than embroil all of us in an inextricable problem for which no solution is going to be found in two weeks. However, if my friends on the right decide to do so, they can stand 20 members in their place, as I understand it under the rules, and put the bill out to the standing committee. It doesn't really matter to us here because nothing will be accomplished in that period of time. All that we can do is either vote against the bill or vote for the bill.

We have come down in a very difficult situation to support the bill—or could I say not oppose the second reading of it. I would much sooner put it that way than have anybody indicate that we have supported it. Perhaps nonopposition is an accurate statement of the position we are in.

I have some very basic objections to what the government is proposing and what the minister is saying in the bill. First of all, we are now being asked in a kind of retrospective way, and I suppose in a real sense retroactively, to validate what has been done in the past by the minister under section 86 since he started to use this particular device to solve the problem with which he was faced by those municipalities where there were serious inequities, so serious that the municipal councils asked the minister to take some steps in connection with it.

I always have problems when we are asked to fill a vacuum about the legality of what has been done. The minister said in his opening statement that section 86 is being amended to provide a procedure which would not be subject to attack. I will leave it to those who are more knowledgeable about the intricacies of the kind of procedure the minister proposes to say it is not subject to attack.

I want to point out a couple of things that bother me about the proposed amendment to section 86 and the additional procedures to be provided. It is a strange way for the government to draft that particular provision. It has been the opinion of the minister that the inequity exists, but even if in his opinion the inequity exists he cannot do anything unless he is asked to do it by the municipal council.

I think it is a strange position for a minister of the crown to be in where he can say, "I believe there are significant and real inequities in the assessments within these various classes, but I, as the minister, cannot do anything about it until the municipal council decides that I can do so. Then it is in my discretion to make the adjustment which is involved."

It is relatively elementary that any tax and the base for any tax should be very clear. When you introduce a discretionary element for the minister to make the decision, even if it is at the request of the particular municipality you immediately destabilize that certainty of the base of the assessment which everyone is entitled to rely on so that he knows the base on which his taxes are going to be assessed.

I think there is a very serious flaw in traditional taxing principles. I am not suggesting for a moment it is necessarily illegal. Presumably we in the assembly can do what we want about the method by which the taxing system is imposed in the province. I was worried, as my colleagues in this caucus were, about the OHIP premium changes being done by regulation propounded by the government in the sense that those OHIP premiums were taxes and taxes should be imposed by this Legislative Assembly by act of the assembly and not by the decision of the government by way of regulation.

We took legal opinion on the matter because we felt very strongly about it. We found, of course, that it was our fault. It was our fault here in the assembly that we had allowed that method of taxation to be adopted by the government because the constitution of Canada provides that the constitution of this province, except the Office of the Lieutenant Governor, is entirely in the hands of this assembly. If we passed an act saying we would delegate to the executive the power to change taxes in this province it was our own fault. We were the ones who had departed from the traditional principle that taxes shall be imposed by act of the assembly and not by the executive branch of the crown.

In a funny way, we're being asked—and the analogy is not all that farfetched—to do the same thing. We're being asked now to extend or to regularize whatever the procedures were under section 86. They had not really been used all that often so as to be a matter of great concern to us, but we are now being asked to regularize them in such a way that they can be used in any number of situations. To the extent that we grant the minister or the crown the ability to exercise discretion with respect to the assessment base, to that extent we are granting to the government the ability to vary the taxes of people, because the mill rate, when set by the local municipality, applies to the assessment base as it will be determined by the minister.

I think it's a serious problem for this assembly. I feel concerned and upset and I sense, regardless of the way in which it was expressed by each of the members who have spoken, that members share the disquiet or the sense of anxiety about what the government is trying to do to us over here.

We're being involved in the process. With the lack of clarity by the government about what their intentions are with respect to fair market value assessment, we will have put into the statute and delegated something which may be there for all time. By the time, a year from now, fair market value assessment takes its place, that will be the government's decision; we'll be back where we started and the error of our ways will not exist to catch us out. But if, as I suspect, a year from now we are in the very same position and if we are asked to extend it again, then we are in a funny way grounding in this statute a provision which allows the minister, in his discretion, for what were specific, very limited purposes, to extend a section which will then have very broad application in the province. That causes me immense concern.

I think if I had my druthers on the matter I would simply say to the minister, "No, you're now stuck with fair market value assessment. You've had plenty of time; you've done all your studies. You make it work, and you take the consequences for it." In our caucus we're never as tough on the government as we should be in matters such as this; we decided on this occasion, reluctantly, not to oppose the bill.

May I perhaps speak to my colleagues in the assembly, in all parties? I know my friend, in a moment of being carried away with his rhetoric about the bill, indicated that if we were the government we could solve it. The problem is that I don't think any party forming the government of this province is going to really be able to come to grips with a revision of the assessment procedures in the province and the basis on which the procedures will be adopted that can satisfy a sufficient number of people to avoid the immense political threat which is there for every political party in touching the assessments.

I had some minor experience on a street on which I once lived. I took it upon myself to organize a few of our neighbours in order to try to get an equalization of assessment just on that street. Fortunately, there were more people who were equalized down than up, so I ended up with a marginal number of more friends on the street than enemies. That's the same reality in politics about this whole system. I know of no way in which it can be devised.

I think, after 10 years, we ought to face up to that problem in this assembly and say that if there are fundamental inequities in the assessment system in the province, it's the obligation of this assembly, rather than dragging us in by the back door to this kind of an amendment giving discretionary power to the minister, to say: Let this assembly look at the question of assessment in this province in the light of the work which has been done on fair market assessment and the information which has been garnered, not only about it but about contrasting systems. Let us try to sort it out and let the assembly come up with a report as to how we will deal with assessment of real property in this province. If one wants to put it in crass, political terms, then we can all share the glory, or the opposite of the glory, of establishing the system.

I don't think any significant change will come out of sending it to some standing committee. I recognize the municipal experience of those who have spoken on this bill, particularly the experience of the member for Waterloo North who, I understand, has a number of amendments to introduce to us, but it does seem to me that it should not be beyond the wit and wisdom of the House leaders of the three parties to at least consider this.

The House leader for the government undoubtedly will consult the government as to whether or not a committee of the assembly should be established to review and recommend an acceptable assessment scheme for real property so we don't bedevil each other with this problem over the next many months. If our caucus is the same as the other caucuses we have all spent an immense amount of time preoccupied with trying to work out some method by which real property assessment would be acceptable to us.

Ours has generally tended to be the best of all possible worlds; no one's assessment will be increased and some will be decreased. That seems to have been the only solution we could come to and we have many elaborate propositions to support the rationale for it. But frankly it has been very difficult for any of us to fully understand the knowledge brought to the table by my colleagues the members for Hamilton Mountain, Wentworth and Welland-Thorold and by others very knowledgeable in the field.

Then, of course, we have very special problems in the city of Toronto, in the area which I represent in this assembly.

The last thing I am is one of the five people in this House who are knowledgeable about municipal taxes or assessments. But in a political sense I simply resent the fact that we are being asked to deal with this problem, in this way, 10 years after the government announced it was going to go to a fair market-value assessment.

I would hope the proposal, the suggestion I made, might find some favour and perhaps the three House leaders and the government House leader, consulting with the government, might decide all should share the blame and all should share the glory and have a committee of the assembly. Let it report what the bases are to be for the assessment of real property in Ontario. I emphasize the plural, "bases," because to tell me that one can attribute the same fair market value to the east tower of the Canadian Bank of Commerce is an exercise in which we're not prepared to engage in this party.

Let's see whether or not we can come up with some kind of classification of property, tests to be applied to particular properties which will in some way, even if it were to take two or three years for such a committee to report, lead to a resolution of this problem on a collective basis within the assembly. We could then all take whatever blows or accolades we might deserve because of it.

I would hope the minister might pursue some solutions to the problem, which is evident in the anxiety and concern expressed by all members on this side of the House, regardless of party, who have spoken on this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there any other honourable member wishing to participate in the debate? If not, the honourable minister.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, very simply, I am here with an amendment to the Assessment Act, which deals with two major amendments and a couple of minor ones. I am not bringing something new to this Legislature. There has been a freeze on assessment since 1970 and there is no change in that.

The section 86 program has been operated under the regulations. The assessment programs enforced in the 14 municipalities we have done up to this point have been done under regulation and under authority of section 2 of the Assessment Act; that regulation was passed. The problem, simply, is this: three major corporations have started court actions against the ministry and the municipalities in which the assessment was involved saying they doubt I have the authority as the Minister of Revenue under section 2 of the act to pass the regulation.

The reason for bringing this particular amendment into the Legislature is to confirm that this is the intent of the government; this is the program with which this government is prepared to proceed. None of the things I am proposing here is new. I don't know why the members feel I am assuming more authority than I had before. I have used the authority under section 2 to pass regulations which are almost word for word what is in the amendment under section 86 here, which have been challenged.

This is the right, of course, with any regulation or law. People have the right to apply to the courts to challenge the regulation. My people inform me, and insist at this point, that I do not have the authority to pass the regulations. But the fact remains it may take two or three years to resolve, through the courts, whether or not that is the case. In the final analysis, the courts will decide whether or not I have the authority to pass the regulation.

In the meantime, certain municipalities are sitting in left field. At this point they don't know in which direction to turn. There are three municipalities involved in this particular matter because three different corporations in three different locations have started court action.

Very simply then, I am saying to the members that the amendments to the act, as proposed, are consistent with what is taking place in the ministry up to this point. As well, 107 municipalities have requested an impact study on section 86. Somewhere between 75 and 80 municipalities have now passed resolutions, having looked at the impact study asking this ministry to implement a section 86 program.

If the amendment does not carry, all the municipalities will be left in a position where they really don't know where to go. They would then have to wait for a court decision before they would know finally whether or not the Minister of Revenue has the authority to pass the regulation.

I refer to the remarks of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), referring to the third Tuesday of December to carry out the necessary functions that must take place within the Ministry of Revenue. That refers to sending out the rolls to the municipalities, which is quite true. The assessment notices themselves under the act must be sent out by December 4. This is a much shorter period of time.

I am personally not going to recommend that this go to committee. I see the members of the opposition are in place. If they so desire that this go to committee then so be it.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the minister for clarification on some of the matters he has raised, because I think it is important with respect to this piece of legislation. I wonder if he has intentions to refer the matter to a committee some time in the future, because I think it is very important this matter be discussed or that there is a special debate on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Under the standing order, on second reading when the minister has finished talking, that ends the debate. I have no authority to alter that.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we want it to go to the standing general government committee, if that is the appropriate standing committee.

Mr. Speaker: Twenty members having risen, under standing order 56(c) the bill will be sent either to a standing or a select committee. What is the minister's wish on that? Standing general government committee?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: At the discretion of the House, I would say whichever committee is able to handle it. I don't want to direct it to a committee that is so busy it can't look into the situation. I would prefer standing general government.

Ordered for standing general government committee.

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved second reading of Bill 165, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I have a few short remarks. As part of the introductory remarks on the second reading of this bill I would like to refer the honourable members to my statement in the House on November 6, which dealt extensively with the contents of the bill. In view of those previous remarks, I will only summarize the main features of this particular bill.

To begin, repeal of the statutory liens provision of the Corporations Act, 1972 is a direct result of my ministry's commitment to tax simplification and deregulation. The current statutory lien protects provincial revenues by encumbering all corporate assets. However, after careful review, it became clear it was not necessary to interfere with all corporations in order to protect revenues from a few that may have abused the tax system.

Our studies indicated that removal of this broad and generally disruptive approach to collections and the redirection of efforts to known collection problems would preserve revenue yields, while at the same time easing the work loads of corporations and their representatives. This thinking is reinforced by our experience following repeal of similar statutory lien provisions in Ontario's commodity and sales tax statutes.

Given that the vast majority of provincial corporations posed neither collections nor payment problems, removing the direct interest my ministry has taken in corporate capital assets transfers should present a substantial direct benefit to the province's corporate tax filers.

Members will recall from my previous statement that currently application for a lien clearance must be made for every transfer to ensure that assets are not encumbered for purposes of the Corporations Tax Act, 1972. Passage of this amendment will mean that a registered lien will be required only if it becomes necessary to encumber corporate assets to collect taxes.

This amendment will reduce a costly, and in this instance unnecessary, government involvement in this province's corporate business activities. At the same time through the redeployment of those resources presently required to administer the statutory lien, it will be possible to preserve Ontario's corporations tax revenues through effective and timely collection action.

In closing, I would like to reiterate that the amendments proposed in this bill represent yet another achievement of this government's total commitment to deregulation and tax simplification. Passage of these amendments will protect the interests of the province but will not impede the day-to-day business pursuits of the corporate communities.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, we will be supporting the bill this afternoon. The amendment proposes to improve the taxpayers' services and reduce government red tape. I think we all agree it is time the government moved in a direction of deregulation and simplification of some of the tax legislation that is already on the books.

I want to discuss the proposed lien provision. It will be effective only if the corporation tax branch chooses to register a notice of a lien against the property of the corporation which owes taxes. The provisions will be used when the branch has experienced or expects to experience some difficulties in collecting tax arrears.

If I interpret it correctly the amendment covers two areas—the property lien itself and other liens that may be considered taxable by the minister. I would like to have a further explanation of just what this area means.

The minister has indicated revenues can be protected without the need for impeding the corporate taxpayer. He says, "More effective collection methods, concentrating on delinquent payments and non-compliance with the statutory requirements, has enabled us to protect revenues where the statutory lien provisions has been repealed to date." What measures does he have to enforce the present regulations where there is a corporation that has reneged in payment of corporation taxes?

I think we can accept the principle that they will have to register a lien on the filing of an affidavit, or whatever it may be, with the registry office. So could the minister say what measure he has to protect his ministry so that he will be able to collect delinquent taxes?

Reading further into the details of the proposed change: "The Minister of Revenue may apply a lien on real property in Ontario if the corporation owes taxes, interest, penalties, costs, et cetera, under the act. A notice of the lien is registered in the proper land registry office."

The legislation is only permissive. It isn't that the minister "shall" apply a lien; it is a matter that he "may" in his judgement apply the lien. I was wondering if it wouldn't be too permissive, so there would be more delinquent payment of corporation taxes to the government.

With those few comments, this party will support the amendment to the Corporation Tax Act. Hopefully it will reduce some of the red tape and speed up the process of corporations in exchange or purchasing of property or selling of property. I think it has been a costly expenditure for corporations. I think it is a move in the right direction that we do see some simplification in tax policies by the Ministry of Revenue. Those are the questions that perhaps the minister can give me some information on. What protective measures are there for delinquent taxpayers? Is there a penalty clause under the regulations in the amendment of this particular section?

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say through you to the minister that we are going to support the bill on second reading.

In a discussion I had with the minister very shortly after the introduction of this bill for first reading, the minister suggested to me that I should talk to my colleagues the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) and the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) about the bill. He assured me they would say quite clearly to me that this was a good move on the part of the Ministry of Revenue. The minister was correct. They concurred that getting rid of the statutory liens provision was a good move. However, they also raised a number of concerns with regard to subsections 1 and 3 of section 167 of the act which is laid out in section 1 of this bill, areas with which, unfortunately, I guess, I wasn't familiar enough. They were concerns, as the member for Erie has expressed, about the lack of obligation on the part of the minister under the new section to register a lien under any circumstances and, in subsection 3, the section dealing with the discharge presently existing on registered liens, that there is absolutely no comment about any situation where those liens had to be registered under this new section.

These concerns were expressed to me and we sat down and discussed them and consulted legal counsel and, as the minister is aware, I am going to be proposing amendments to these sections in committee of the whole House. We are in support of the proposal to get rid of the statutory liens, but we think there's a very decided need for some clearer definition in this bill.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of this particular legislation.

I recall some years ago in the practice of law it was a commonplace that every real estate transaction had a letter which went out to the Ministry of Revenue to inquire whether there was corporate tax clearance or not. There surely must have been a tremendous amount of time spent for what was otherwise a routine circumstance. I don't recall in a dozen years of practice more than one or two that came back with any positive claim that had to be accommodated, but there certainly was this requirement of having to have a clearance. It was a valid requisition on title and, as a result, it took time and effort and very often had really no validity in trying to sort out provincial tax obligations. Certainly it's best to have a claim known, but the best way to have that claim known is to have it clearly registered on title in fact it does exist.

I welcome this change because it will put the onus on the ministry to give clear indication to anyone searching a title that there is a claim which can then be attended to as any other obligation on title might have to be dealt with. I welcome this amendment because I think it will save a lot of time, a lot of wasted effort, and I certainly look forward to having it passed as quickly as possible.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, my colleague has mentioned the conflict that my colleague the member for Lakeshore and I had about the bill. As my colleague has stated, we are satisfied with the removal of the statutory lien but we do not want to leave it entirely to the discretion of the minister whether he does or does not register a lien.

We have proposed in an amendment to put in two tests, that is, in arrears for a year and in excess of $1,000. The amendment has been distributed.

I just want to make the point that the two tests aren't necessarily etched in stone. If the principle of the amendment can be accepted or considered by the government, then we would be prepared to accept some different tests about the obligation on the minister.

The other point we were very concerned about is that there must be a significant number of corporations at the present time that are in arrears, that will have the benefit of the removal of the statutory lien, but will not be subject to having that lien continued until such time as the arrears are cleared up. It is that kind of problem we are attempting to address in the amendment which my colleague will be proposing when the bill goes into committee of the whole House, because there may be a little bit of time until that happy event occurs.

We also were concerned that the words "real property" are the only definitive words with respect to the kind of lien that can be registered in the appropriate land registration offices. We wanted to make certain that it perhaps be extended to include the term "leasehold" because of the problems involved with deciding whether a leasehold interest in land is real property or not. The amendment which, as I say, my colleague has distributed includes that point as well. Subject to moving the amendment in committee, as has been stated, we support the bill on second reading.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Very briefly, the member for Erie wanted to know what other means we had of collecting the taxes owing. There are many actually. A few of them are such things as taking security bonds, mortgages, warrants of execution, garnishments, personal guarantees and bank letters of credit. Those are some of the various ways and means we can secure money that is owing, besides placing a lien at the local registry office. There are fairly ample means of ensuring that the taxpayers or the province receive their just taxes.

With reference to the amendments that are being proposed, I have had my staff look at these amendments. I got them only at noon. There are some we can accept. There was one we have some concerns about. However, perhaps it would be better to discuss it in detail in committee.

I can assure the member for Riverdale we are more than prepared to include the clause he wanted included, which was leasehold interests in real property. My staff sees no problem with accepting that amendment. We have perhaps a little different way of proposing the amendment. I will send him a copy of what we are proposing.

We have really no problem with the 60-day amendment that is being proposed either, other than we would prefer to see it changed in such a way that we would be talking about a date rather than the 60 days. But we do have some concerns about the other amendment and we will probably get into detail on it in clause by clause.

In the meantime, I will send members copies of the other two amendments which we would propose to replace some of theirs.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

[5:15]

House in committee of the whole.

SECURITIES AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 156, An Act to amend the Securities Act, 1978.

On section 1:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I see absolutely no reason for this amendment being introduced into the bill. I can well understand that those who are engaged day by day—the lawyers and the accountants—are very concerned about the clear statement we have in the present bill that states, “Misrepresentation means an untrue statement of material fact or an omission to state a material fact.”

That is quite a clear statement of what the fundamental provision of disclosure in this bill is about. I see no reason to provide the kind of legalistic amendment which has been proposed to subclause ii of that definition of misrepresentation to add the words “that is required to be stated or that is necessary to make a statement not misleading in the light of the circumstances in which it was made.” That’s the kind of lawyer’s hair-splitting that gives them the opportunity to get off the hook with respect to the question of misrepresentation.

Perhaps I need not reiterate to this assembly that the gut provision of the securities law of this province, which is time-honoured, is “A proposal shall provide full, true and plain disclosure of all material facts relating to the securities issued or proposed to be distributed and shall comply with the requirements of this act and the regulations.”

That is in section 55 of the Securities Act. We are talking about a misrepresentation about the material facts which are required to be disclosed. I’m opposed to the amendment to section 1 of the bill. Provided I have enough of my colleagues in the House, if necessary, we’ll stand and oppose that particular amendment.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Renwick: I don’t really mind being defeated on that part of the bill as I expected to be defeated. We would have been defeated on the amendment when it was put in the House. As long as we’ve registered our objection, I think time will tell that was the most unwise amendment to have been carried into the Securities Act of this province.

On section 2 of the bill, will the minister please tell us—it’s commonly known, but I think the record should clearly show—the precise circumstances which led to the necessity of the commission’s sitting outside Ontario and being able to sit in conjunction with any other body anywhere else in the world that may be engaged in the regulation of the securities industry?

I don’t have any particular objection to it, but my innate caution indicates to me the minister had a specific situation in mind, whereas I understand the commission met with the complementary commission in Quebec with respect to a very basic problem. As a result of that, the ministry has now introduced an omnibus provision which says the commission can sit outside Ontario with any other body with respect to the regulation of the securities industry.

I wondered why the government decided it must go that broad when after all these years this was the single situation where it was required.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I think the honourable member knows about the Simpsons merger. There was a joint hearing conducted with the province of Quebec. There were technical objections raised as to the validity of the hearing and because of those technical objections being filed it was decided for the future, whether or not a similar matter ever arises, to include this section. It clarifies the right of the commission to hold these hearings.

There have been joint investigations before with other commissions, but since those objections were raised at the time we felt it necessary to clarify it at the first opportunity—and this is the first opportunity.

Mr. Renwick: I don't know why the assembly is asked to consider a worldwide extension of the provision because of that particular requirement.

I would ask the minister to speak to a couple of other questions in relation to that section. I am concerned about the exercise by the commission outside the province of the powers and authorities given to it. In other words, the commission has a number of quasi-judicial authorities and administrative powers it can exercise. When I read this proposed subsection, I tried to think the ministry had thought about that aspect of it and that it was carefully limited to holding hearings outside. In other words it was limited to holding hearings and receiving, in a passive sense, the required information for its decision-making purposes. It could consult with any other body during the course of a hearing, but it was a very real limitation of the power of the commission sitting outside the province so we can be certain that the effective exercise of the decision-making authorities—whether administrative or quasi-judicial decision-making authorities or any other powers granted to the commission under the statute—takes place by the commission in Ontario, although they use the information which they have received at hearings held outside and they may consult outside with respect to that information.

Would the minister please let me know whether or not that is a correct limitation on the power of the commission if we grant this section?

Hon. Mr. Drea: These are extraordinary cases—to have the joint hearing in another jurisdiction. You are really asking for the commission to sit there, receive all the information and then embark for Ontario where it will make the decision. At least that is how I understood you. What is the point? They are surely in a position to render a decision in the securities field, of all fields. The promptness of the decision is most vital.

I could understand if the member was going to oppose the right of the commission to hold joint hearings in another jurisdiction. I wouldn't agree with it but I could understand it. But by the same token, to tell him he can hold a joint hearing in another jurisdiction, but must pack up his information and come back within the territorial limits of Ontario before issuing a decision is drawing a very fine point.

Mr. Breithaupt: It might be more helpful if the minister were able to give us an example of the kind of expectation he has. I can understand the need to work in conjunction perhaps with the Quebec securities commission or that of the state of New York, or possibly even with the securities commission in Washington. If we had an example of the kind of event that would call this procedure into practical use, we would have an idea of the practical use to which this section may be put.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I think the best example, and the one that brought this into the act, was the Simpsons-Bay takeover. There were different proposals emanating from different jurisdictions. Therefore, the only way to really make an effective decision, particularly on the insider thing, was to hold that joint hearing.

I'm sure the honourable member can understand the difficulty when we weren't allowed to have that type of hearing, particularly with such a very large takeover. We're constantly assured in this House that there are going to be more and more takeovers of the dimensions of the Simpsons-Bay takeover—I suppose that's debatable. If there are offers emanating from another jurisdiction, the commission would be in a very difficult situation if it couldn't engage in a joint hearing.

Bear in mind the commission did go to Quebec on that one and did hold a joint hearing. Then technical objections arose with the commission and I think properly so. The concern really revolved around the commission's authority to hold a joint hearing, and at its first opportunity, it wanted that right clarified. I don't think we want a limitation that because something that will affect the securities market in this province emanates from another jurisdiction it is really beyond the scope of the commission. I think we're going to find more and more of that.

The days when the financial centre of the country was in Ontario are over, by popular assumption. There are other places in the country where matters such as that particular type of takeover bid can arise.

We've held joint investigations with the Manitoba exchange. It never came to a hearing, but joint investigations were held. To say we can understand the logic of holding a joint hearing, but assemble all the information and get back within the territory is drawing a very fine line.

Either the commission has the right to enter into joint hearings with another jurisdiction in that jurisdiction, or it doesn't.

Mr. Breithaupt: Does the minister expect other states or provinces to follow this approach providing for extra-territorial meetings? Is this becoming a natural development in securities commission organization? Would this benefit be possible for other commissions?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Bearing in mind that Canada's very fragmented securities legislation is provincial, not federal, this is an obvious step. It's been said quite often in this House that the Ontario Securities Act, with all its ramifications, is really a national securities act; others model themselves after it because the bulk of the business is done here. I think that's a very logical step.

[5:30]

It's really up to the individual province whether it wants to follow along, but on the basis of being able to hold a joint hearing here in Ontario on a matter that has arisen in Ontario but which is of concern to another province, this indeed improves the flexibility and the scope of the commission in the other provinces. It's not just a turnover to the Ontario Securities Commission in the hopes that the Ontario Securities Commission alone will unravel the thing and make the decision here.

Mr. Renwick: This is getting argumentative rather than discussive and I don't think any point can be served by making it argumentative.

The principle that a commission of this province affecting the rights of people within this province would make decisions outside the province is wrong. I don't mind them going out to hear whatever information they want to hear, but I am opposed to a commission of this province making decisions outside the province about matters affecting people within this province. The best paternal will in the world doesn't permit a commission such as this to exercise its authorities outside the province.

I have no problem with it. You're going to do it anyway. The commission rides high, wide and handsome over everybody. All we can rely on is that somebody, somewhere, will object to the extraterritorial decision-making power of this commission so that it can go to the Supreme Court of Canada for a decision as to whether or not a creature like this body can make decisions outside the province which affect the rights of people in the province. I think it's a very real question, but I'm sure the fees will justify the decision to take it to court at some point.

My recollection is that the commission can sit with only one person. Can one person go out and be the commission for the purpose of these hearings?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Two.

Mr. Renwick: Two people must go. Is it the intention, or do you know of any circumstances now where the commission will be going abroad?

Hon. Mr. Drea: None that we are aware of. I should point out too that, in addition to two going, there has to be notice given that they are going.

Mr. Renwick: Everyone knows that in a country of this size it is a significant disadvantage to be told the commission is going to Washington to hold a hearing where decisions may be made affecting people in Ontario. If the commission decides to go, say, to London, England, or Switzerland or Germany to hold a meeting in conjunction with another securities body to make decisions out there, everyone knows that notification has to be given.

It seems rather strange to me that with all of the abilities at the disposal of the commission you couldn't, perhaps, have so phrased this particular amendment to the bill to have limited its authority for the specific purposes for which it is required. I just happen to believe that commission should be required to make its decisions, with the wide authority which is granted, within Ontario without impairing in any way its ability to travel wheresoever it may wish to go. Meeting outside raises a very serious problem for me, particularly when, presumably, it can make a joint decision outside the province with some other commission and not a separate, responsible decision, even though it may be identical with the decision made by the body with which it is meeting.

Those are probably legalistic points, but there will be other days when this particular commission will finally come to the point where there will be some basis by which it will be accountable not only to the minister, who is as ill-informed about these matters as this assembly is, but maybe some day, as I said on second reading, we'll have an accountable body in this House which will see to it that the proper thought and attention is given to the scope of the amendments which are introduced into this assembly.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make one point. In fairness to the commission, this minister is massively well informed by the commission.

Section 2 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments on any other sections?

Mr. Renwick: No comments.

Sections 3 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, both the chairman of the commission and the minister, at various times when they have been speaking about the new provisions in section 62 with respect to short forms of prospectus and summary statements, have limited the application of those to particular forms of securities to be issued. However, I want to point out to the assembly there is no such limitation with respect to the use of the short form or of the summary statement to the two particular instances to which both the chairman of the commission and the minister have referred.

As far as I recall, they have spoken about the summary statement being used with respect to mutual funds and they have spoken about the short form of prospectus being used for junior mining securities. They have indicated that those are the initial areas where they intend to use them, but I think the assembly should be quite clear that the reading of those statements does not indicate as clearly as it should that this is now the introduction of an omnibus provision, permitting the use of short forms of prospectus and summary statements.

Again, it is a kind of gradual encroachment on the question of full, true and plain disclosure, disguised as, "Well, nobody wants to read all that elaborate information in there and so on and so forth, and in this day and age, we can clearly convey to people what is required to be conveyed so there be full, true and plain disclosure."

When you read the strange language of the proposed section you have this provision: ". . . and any such prospectus"—that is, the short form of prospectus—"that complies with the regulations applicable thereto"—that is the governing phrase, "complies with the regulations applicable thereto"—"shall, for the purposes of section 55"—the gut section of the Securities Act; those are my words, that is not in the bill—"be considered to provide sufficient disclosure of all material facts relating to the securities issued or proposed to be distributed under the prospectus."

There is this unusual situation, of course, that the short form of prospectus, provided it complies with the regulation, will not be subject to attack as failing to comply with the act. The regulations can cut down on the very gut provision of the statute which says that "A prospectus shall provide full true and plain disclosure of all material facts relating to securities issued or proposed to be distributed and shall comply with the requirements of this act and the regulations."

If it is used in this way, that the short form prospectus must comply with this act and the regulations, then I could understand it, but as I said at the beginning, disguised as simply a more convenient way to convey information of an essential nature to proposed investors, particularly in junior mining securities, which is the example used, we find that as long as it meets the requirements of the regulations, it will be deemed to be compliant with section 55 of the act.

They are lawyers' games and that is the way the game is being played. Who expects the public to be fully informed about junior mining issues? We had that trouble in this assembly a few years ago. Windfall Mines is a good example of it. We tried to close a number of the gaps with respect to it. Now, for very good reason, there is an endeavour to provide incentives for junior mining securities. I am not objecting to that. What I am objecting to is the way in which this act is drafted, which I think permits the regulations to cut down on the operative, fundamental nature of section 55 of the act.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I am not quite as pessimistic as the member for Riverdale about the hope that the new section 62 will be a benefit to the junior mining community. I recall the comments which I made during the estimates, encouraging some incentive and direction from the ministry which would be clearly seen in the securities market as an attempt to support the need for new junior mining prospects. At that time, the minister said there were commitments he was prepared to enter into and that the new legislation would be coming forward which would, hopefully, stimulate this area of development.

We are well aware there have been some difficulties in the past. The member for Riverdale referred particularly to the Windfall situation, of which anyone involved in the securities field would be knowledgeable. I realize we are trying to stimulate in a way that is going to have, hopefully, the best results for the public with the least interference or drag on the legitimate development of a prospective mining circumstance, which these junior mines usually are. It is a balance which is difficult to strike.

If we have this section now in the bill, we have at least the opportunity to encourage the development of junior mines, where there has not been any development at all I can recall in these last several years. This may not prove to be a perfect section. It may well be that within six months the minister may be back with certain changes that have to reflect the quick way in which the securities market can change.

I think it is still worth while for us to attempt to deal with this matter and encourage them by the use of this section. If there have to be changes or if the regulatory procedure that results from this proves to be less than satisfactory, then surely the ministry can tell us about that at that time. For the moment, I am prepared to give this section a try.

Section 7 agreed to.

Sections 8 and 9 agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. Renwick: In section 10 of the bill, which provides for rulings by the commission, would the minister advise us specifically and categorically whether all such rulings are made in writing and are available to the public?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, on both.

Mr. Renwick: Would the minister advise us what are the ingredients of the decision making process by which they decide it will not be prejudicial to the public interest?

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, guidelines are published. Second, if it is a routine order, there is an informal procedure. If it is a very involved matter, then there is a full hearing.

Mr. Renwick: I take it, so far as the commission is concerned, the minister has said the decisions are public, are in writing and are available to anybody who wants to take the trouble to go and read them. Also they give the reasons on the basis of which they decide it is not prejudicial to the public interest.

[5:45]

Hon. Mr. Drea: As a matter of fact they are all published in the weekly summary, so it's not even a question of having to search them out.

Mr. Renwick: I have seen no reasons of any significance in the weekly summary or in the published monthly summary.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am advised that in this week's weekly summary there are some reasons published. In last week's there were reasons published.

Mr. Renwick: I guess I haven't seen this week's.

Section 10 agreed to.

Section 11 agreed to.

On section 12:

Hon. Mr. Drea: On section 12 there is a typographical error.

Mr. Renwick: I wanted to be able to say that I had, over these many months, got one amendment into the new securities law; this will be the first one.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that section 88(2)(d) of the act, as set out in section 12(2) of the bill, be amended by striking out "offeree" in the fourth line and inserting in lieu thereof "offeror."

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I think a matter of this gravity should be fully and carefully explained by the person who has made the amendment. I look forward to the explanation.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, we have the offeror and on the other hand we have the offeree. The minister in drafting the bill got his hands mixed up. We have to reverse the hands.

Motion agreed to.

Section 12, as amended, agreed to.

Section 13 agreed to.

On section 14:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Drea moves that section 14(1) of the bill be deleted.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I recognize that the minister, in his discussions with me earlier, had stated there were reasons to change this proposed legislation, particularly because some of the details apparently weren't going to work out in the system. Perhaps the minister could let us know what he foresees as a frame in which some changes can be accommodated, so that we would expect an amendment that will deal with the notice of variation we are not going to have in this bill.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I mentioned this on second reading last spring. We are very confident we could have proceeded with this section—that it did meet the tests of the technical objection—but rather than waiting to see whether it did or not, we decided we would delete it at this time and get a full comment over the winter months and bring in an amendment that does categorically meet the tests.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to have that on the record at this point while we were in committee.

Mr. Chairman: If there are no further comments, shall Mr. Drea's amendment carry?

Motion agreed to.

Section 14, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Any further sections for discussion?

Mr. Renwick: I am satisfied with section 16, Mr. Chairman. I have no comment. I have one question on section 17.

Sections 15 and 16 agreed to.

On section 17:

Mr. Renwick: My only question on section 17 is the extension of the director's power to include making allocations. Is this just an administrative convenience for the cabinet? Is it a routine matter that's not of any great importance?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that this codifies what is happening now. There are a number of forms available as to the type of prospectus. The flexibility exists now and all this does is codify the matter.

Mr. Renwick: I do not think the minister understands my point. The power to make regulations now vested in the Lieutenant Governor in Council includes prescribing categories for persons and companies and the manner of allocating persons and companies to categories, including permitting the director to make such allocations.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It gives the director the right to say, for instance, that this is a natural resource company, that is a mutual fund company. That's happening right now. This just codifies that particular selection process. If there is disagreement as to whether the company is a natural resource firm for purposes of the prospectus, this gives the director the right to specify which one it will be.

Mr. Renwick: The practice has been that the Lieutenant Governor in Council has not been doing this and the director is now going to be given the delegated authority. The cabinet has overlooked the performance of this important responsibility. That sounds like a real election issue.

Section 17 agreed to.

Sections 18 and 19 agreed to.

Bill 156, as amended, reported.

COMPULSORY AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE ACT

Consideration of Bill 160, An Act to provide for Compulsory Automobile Insurance.

Mr. M. N. Davison: We were informed some short time ago by the Clerk of the House that the order in committee would be to go back to Bill 165, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, before proceeding with Bill 160. Is there some reason for this switch?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, it was my mistake.

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 165, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments, questions or amendments to any section of Bill 165? The member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, we were informed by the minister that he was going to move some amendments. It may be better if he moved his amendments first so we can sort out ours. We have one amendment that covers the whole of section 1 of the bill.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister, do you have an amendment?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Maeck moves that section 167(3) of the act as set out in section 1 of the bill be amended by striking out "the first day of December, 1979," and inserting in lieu thereof "the 31st day of January, 1980."

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is being proposed in lieu of the proposed amendment by the NDP in which they suggested a 60-day period. We have taken into account 60 days, but we would like to see it noted by date rather than just 60 days because people reading the bill eventually will want to know on what date this takes place. If it is referring to 60 days after the bill has been approved or passed, then they have to know when the bill was passed. It is a matter of simplification on this particular item.

Mr. Charlton: We are prepared to accept the minister's version of our amendment of 60 days to subsection 3. We still intend to move an additional amendment, adding a subsection 3(a), but we are prepared to accept this amendment on the 60 days.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Maeck moves that section 167 of the act as set out in section 1 of the bill be amended by adding subsection 5. "In this section 'real property' includes any interest of the corporation as lessee of real property."

Mr. Charlton: We are also prepared to accept this amendment and I am glad the minister decided to take the suggestion of my colleague.

Mr. Breithaupt: We are also prepared to accept the amendment. It is most worth while, Mr. Chairman.

Motion agreed to.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Resumption of consideration of Bill 165, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

On section 1:

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to have to ask your indulgence for a moment. I think you have a copy of the amendment which I submitted to the Clerk's office this morning. The amendment consisted of several parts to section 1 of the bill. The minister has already moved some portions of that, so I'm going to have to alter slightly the way I move these amendments.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Charlton moves that section 167 of the act as set out in section 1 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"1a. The minister shall register a notice referred to in subsection 1 upon the real property in Ontario or any interest therein of a corporation that is liable to pay tax, interest, penalties, costs and other amounts imposed under this or any predecessor act for an amount in excess of $1,000 where such liability has been outstanding for a period of one year."

Mr. Charlton: In speaking to the amendment I'll start out by repeating our intent in this amendment. It was felt by myself and the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) and a number of other members of the caucus that at some point there should be some obligation on the minister to register a lien against the real property. We felt total discretion was not appropriate—some discretion in the first year of arrears perhaps, and some discretion under a reasonable amount. I should point out, and my colleague from Riverdale did point out during the debate on second reading, we are not hung up on the $1,000 figure. The minister and I did discuss on one occasion, unfortunately after this amendment was already in the process of being prepared by legal counsel, the value of another approach to a limit to an obligation, perhaps a percentage of the total taxes owed by a corporation or company. Perhaps there is some other way of dealing with it. We are not holding hard and fast to the $1,000 figure. If the minister can propose some other way of dealing with this kind of limit, we would be prepared to listen to it and consider it.

In a communication to us earlier, the minister raised a number of concerns, including the fact that the bill in its present form allows him to register a lien immediately. I can see nothing in this amendment which prohibits that. It very clearly says when we reach $1,000 and a year of arrears in terms of time, the minister shall register a lien. I don't think that necessarily precludes the minister from registering a lien prior to that.

However, if legal counsel advises that it does, we are also prepared to deal with that so we are covered in both situations. If something indicates that in the minister's discretion a lien is warranted immediately or within the first year because of the numbers of dollars involved or the reputation of the company involved or whatever the case happens to be, we are prepared to see that the wording is such that these situations are covered.

I can't see anything in our amendment which would prevent the minister from using subsection 1 prior to the year. The proposed subsection 1a merely has us reaching a point where an obligation on the minister's part to register a lien comes into effect.

The minister has also laid out some other concerns or possibilities with regard to this amendment. The minister is saying there may be situations where there are ways of dealing with the arrears other than by a lien against real property. If that is the case, another very simple amendment would cover that by saying, "where no other means exist." I think it would be useful, though, if the minister could lay out for us what other procedures he may have in mind.

At any rate, it seems to us there should be some obligation on the minister's part when, through time and dollars, the situation worsens. Perhaps the minister can offer suggestions on points I have already mentioned, primarily on a better way of dealing with this kind of an obligation. As I have said, we are not totally committed to the $1,000 figure, which I must admit is an arbitrary figure on our part.

The Liberal critic mentioned to me outside the House earlier today that perhaps our $1,000 figure was too high. We would just like to see some obligation or some point at which discretion is no longer there. Through this amendment I don't want to call into question the ministry's integrity. But all of us in this House have seen, at one point or another, discretion abused. I think that is what we are trying to avoid.

Mr. Breithaupt: Could the minister advise us as to the number of companies involved in these kinds of circumstances? One would think that a very small proportion of the many thousands of corporations within the province might be in arrears. If the minister could give us advice as to the numbers of companies or the percentage of companies involved and also the average amounts of money involved in this kind of circumstance, perhaps we would be in a better position to decide whether or not the amendment before us is reasonable.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: To answer the last speaker's question first, I have some figures before me. According to our records, only 800 accounts owe taxes in excess of $1,000 and they have remained unpaid for more than a year. Of the 800 accounts, 30 per cent are secured, leaving approximately 560 unsecured. Some of the 560 accounts may not necessarily own real property.

The process of registering liens for these accounts has been in full swing for some weeks and will be concluded within the next few weeks. We are already registering liens against these properties to ensure that we have the matter under control when, and if, this piece of legislation passes.

Mr. Breithaupt: This concerns accounts greater than $1,000. Can the minister tell us the number of accounts involved owing lesser amounts and what his registration procedures are?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I believe we have something like 22,000 accounts owing under $1,000. Some of them may be as low as $1 or $2. I can't give the member a breakdown of exactly what percentage of those accounts are $500 or $900, or anything like that. It ranges from $1 to $1,000 and there are 22,000 cases. The ones we feel insecure about are being registered as well as the ones above $1,000. We are still registering liens.

In many cases, of course, we won't register liens. As I indicated earlier to the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty)—and this was a question the member for Hamilton Mountain had asked—we have means other than liens to collect or secure accounts. I listed six of them. One is taking security bonds and shares; the second is mortgages; the third is warrants of execution; the fourth, garnishments; the fifth, personal guarantees; the sixth, bank letters of credit.

We use all these means to secure any money owing to us from corporations under the Corporations Tax Act. We have all these means at our disposal. It's not always necessary or prudent to register a lien against the property. We may secure the money owed to the province by other means; these are six of the other means we do use and have been using prior to the introduction of this bill.

Because all these things are available to us, we don't feel there is any danger that the taxpayer will lose out on money owing through taxation because of the amendment to the Corporation Tax Act we now have before us.

The member for Hamilton Mountain did mention some of my concerns about the amendment. It's a matter of opinion, I suppose, as to whether or not this amendment could be interpreted to mean we must register a lien and we must wait a year to do it. We're concerned about that because in some cases we may want to register a lien immediately. While we know that is not the intent of the amendment, it may be interpreted that way, depending on who is reading the section.

[8:15]

We have cases where there could be situations in which we believe a corporation is intending to dispose of its real property. We would want to register a lien very quickly in that case. We wouldn't want to get into a legal argument as to whether or not we were able to do that.

I am told by staff, in answer to a number of the members' questions, that liens are also being registered on accounts where tax is less than $1,000, which is what I indicated to you a little earlier. The liens presently being registered are not restricted to the ones in excess of $1,000. It depends on the circumstances involved as to whether we place a lien or whether we do it through one of the other sources we talked about.

A couple of other concerns we have in the matter of this amendment is the proposed amendment to the bill would require registration of a lien after a year. That's the way it's written. As I indicated earlier, we have ways and means of ensuring the money is going to be paid to us other than liens. My legal staff would interpret this amendment as indicating that after one year I must place a lien, whereas I might want to use a different method under different circumstances. This is one of the other concerns we have about it.

In all of the other taxing statutes we use liens and we use other means of securing money that's owed to us. Our tax loss has been very minimal. I think we have done very well in collecting the taxes due to us through the various means we have at our disposal at the present time to ensure the money owing is going to be secured.

In short, there are circumstances in which I would not want to wait a year. It's a concern we have. I might want to register a lien where the tax owing was less than $1,000, but would not need to register a lien, in any event, if other adequate security was there and available to the ministry.

Mr. Breithaupt: But you wouldn't want to have to do it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes. Actually, Mr. Chairman, while I realize the good intent of this amendment, I would prefer to reject it at this point because I believe everything is covered. There is no danger of having a tax loss because of the proposed amendment we have before us.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, the minister has suggested the amendment was of good intent. It would seem the minister agrees with the intent. It would seem to me the concerns he has raised can be easily dealt with in the wording. The two major concerns are one, he may want to register a lien earlier. It seems to me we can deal with that in wording as an addition to this subsection. Two, he has a concern there may be other ways of securing the taxes owed. If that's true, it seems to me we can deal with that in the wording as well and still accomplish the good intent of this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, when I said "good intent" I wasn't referring to the amendment itself but to the intentions of the member.

I feel there are adequate facilities at our disposal at the present time to ensure there is not going to be any tax loss. I don't like to be tied down to this sort of situation where there could be some doubt as to whether or not I should impose a lien prior to the year and under $1,000. I'm concerned about that.

If there was any doubt in my mind that we were not going to be able to collect the tax dollars owing to us then I would probably be very supportive of this amendment, but I just can't see where that situation will arise. I still would prefer our way because I think this amendment is more or less redundant. It is not going to do anything we can't already do, other than instruct the minister to do certain things under certain conditions.

I am already charged with the responsibility of collecting the taxes that are owed to the people of Ontario and I can't evade that responsibility. What we are doing here is recharging the minister.

VISITORS

Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence, I would like to take this opportunity, and I think the other members of the Legislature will support me at this moment, to introduce the Tran family, new to Canada from Southeast Asia, with Reverend Denholm from Northminster United Church, Sue Watson, Mr. and Mrs. Nosworthy and Mr. and Mrs. Al Jang, active sponsors of the Tran family. I would like to welcome them to the Ontario Legislature.

CORPORATION TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Charlton: I have one final comment to make to the minister. Several days ago when I mentioned this also in the debate on second reading, the minister suggested to me I should discuss this bill with two of my colleagues, which I did. He suggested that on the basis of his knowledge of their expertise in the area, I have done that and, as I have suggested, they agree with the intent of the bill.

Those people to whom he has referred me also suggested in the strongest terms this amendment is necessary. They see some problem if it is not there. The minister referred me to their expertise since I am not an expert in the corporate tax field just as the minister is not an expert in the corporate tax field. It seems to me, therefore, if there is a concern there by somebody who has a fair bit of expertise in this field and if it is as strongly felt as it is, then perhaps we should all reconsider it.

If we deal with the two major concerns about this amendment the minister has expressed, we deal with those in wording. I don't think the minister can tell me how this amendment can do the operation of the ministry any harm. If we deal with the two concerns the minister has expressed, the one of still having the ability to register a lien prior to the year and less than $1,000 if the situation in the minister's mind warrants it, and the other of getting himself off the hook and not having to register a lien, if he can secure the taxes owed by some other method, as he suggested.

I don't have wording on the top of my head and I am not legal counsel. If I had the wording of it it wouldn't be the correct legal wording, but those two matters don't seem to me to be very difficult to deal with. If they are dealt with in the wording of this amendment, I can see no harm that will come to the ministry because of this amendment. It would cover the concerns that have been expressed to me by those experts to whom the minister referred me.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: My final remarks on the matter, as far as I am concerned, are that I certainly did talk to the member for Hamilton Mountain and I suggested to him that he speak to the two other members of his caucus because I know they are experts in this particular field. I must remind the member for Hamilton Mountain that four amendments were proposed and two of them have been accepted, so I think that little conversation was fruitful. It doesn't necessarily mean because I suggested he talk to his colleague that I have to accept every amendment they might produce.

I think when you are batting 50 per cent that is a pretty good average. My staff is telling me that amendment is not necessary and all of the necessary legal terminology and rules and regulations are there to ensure the taxpayers of Ontario are not going to suffer any tax losses. To bring in an amendment such as this would really do nothing more than what we can already do now, so I don't see the need for the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any further discussion on the amendment moved by Mr. Charlton?

All those in favour of Mr. Charlton's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.
Amendment stacked.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Chairman, will that be stacked until 10:15 p.m.?

Mr. Deputy Chairman. It will be stacked until 10:15 p.m. regardless of whether we have dealt with another bill in the interval.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to section 1 of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Charlton further moves that section 167 of the act as set out in section 1 of the bill be amended by adding thereto subsection 3a:

"The minister shall register a notice referred to in subsection 3 within 60 days of the date on which the Corporations Tax Amendment Act, 1979, comes into force upon the real property in Ontario, or any interest therein, of each corporation that is liable to pay tax, interest, penalties, costs and other amounts imposed under this or any predecessor act for an amount in excess of $1,000 where such liability has been outstanding for a period of one year or more on the date on which the Corporations Tax Amendment Act, 1979 comes into force."

[8:30]

Mr. Charlton: Just before I speak to the amendment Mr. Chairman, there should be one other change to it as a result of the minister's amendments. "The minister shall register a notice referred to in subsection 3, before January 31, 1980"—which is the amendment the minister moved prior to the supper hour—"upon the real property in Ontario."

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You're deleting everything after "subsection 3."

Mr. Charlton: Deleting everything between "subsection 3" and "upon the real property in Ontario" and substituting therefor—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I see.

Mr. Charlton:—"on or before January 31, 1980."

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Let me read that then. I am not reading the whole amendment but just 3a as I presently have it.

"The minister shall register a notice referred to in subsection 3 on or before January 31, 1980, upon the real property in Ontario or any interest therein of each corporation that is liable to pay tax, interest penalties, costs and other amounts imposed under this or any predecessor act for an amount in excess of $1,000 where such liability has been outstanding for a period of one year or more on the date on which the Corporations Tax Amendment Act, 1979, comes into force."

Mr. Charlton: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be very brief.

This amendment obviously is complementary to the other amendment and dependent on it. It deals with the question of the existing unregistered liens. The minister has already stated that some of those are in the process of being registered now. This amendment is just to ensure that all of those in the category suggested in the proposed subsection 1a, should be registered in the 60-day period of grace which is now given to the minister in the amended subsection 3.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, I understand the amendment the member for Hamilton Mountain is making. But as he said it's complementary to the amendment under 1a and because of that and because of the reasons I have already given, I must reject this amendment as well.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further discussion on this proposed amendment?

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to direct a question to the minister as it relates to this amendment. How many outstanding liens are there that go beyond one year?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I already gave that information. I don't know if the member was here. According to our records, 800 accounts at the present time were taxed in excess of $1,000 as owing and the taxes have remained unpaid for more than one year as this amendment refers to.

Mr. Breithaupt: There could be many, many more older than one year.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: These are all of the accounts in excess of $1,000.

Mr. Breithaupt: There may be many more that are less than a year old.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Oh yes, there are lots that are not yet a year old. These are the ones that are a year old and over $1,000.

Mr. Haggerty: Could the minister indicate the highest number then? He said $1,000. Is there anything up around $200,000 or $300,000, something in that category?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I haven't those figures here. I couldn't tell you that. I don't know whether my staff would have that information with them or not.

Mr. Haggerty: Could you give me the total that is outstanding beyond the one-year limit? Would your staff have that?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I will have the staff check and find out.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, the minister has just given us one of the reasons why we want to see in this bill the obligation that is laid out in the proposed subsections 1a and 3a. He doesn't know, but if he has an obligation perhaps he will sit down and find out so that none of this stuff gets by us.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If the member thinks that because this amendment was passed I am going to keep track every day of how much money is owed by corporations in Ontario, I think he is dreaming.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, as I understand the minister's previous comment he is opposed to this amendment because he feels it's unnecessary. I want to suggest to the minister that my colleague, the mover of the amendment, has consulted experts and those experts believe the amendment may add something to the bill. Surely the fact that it is unnecessary is not a good enough reason for being against it.

It is our duty here to make legislation clear, to make it unambiguous, to make it helpful to the public. In those circumstances, surely if this helps clarify what the bill is going to do, then it is an amendment that should be supported by the government. I urge the minister to consider it in that light.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I have considered it in that light, as a matter of fact, and I have had my legal staff look at it. It was my suggestion that the member discuss it with the people you say are professional people and I agree they are. I am trying to co-operate. Out of four amendments we have passed and accepted two. I think that's a pretty good average.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Charlton's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

COMPULSORY AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE ACT

Consideration of Bill 160, An Act to provide for Compulsory Automobile Insurance.

On section 1:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall subsections (a) to (f) of section 1 stand as part of the bill?

Agreed.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I move that subsection (g) of section 1 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "(g) 'insurer' means the Ontario automobile insurance plan."

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I don't see any part of this bill dealing with an Ontario automobile insurance plan. Can the member point out to me how that is in keeping with the spirit of the bill?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Section 1(g) simply defines an insurer for the purpose of this bill and it defines an insurer as an insurer licensed under the Insurance Act. What I propose is an alternative definition for the word insurer. The definition I propose is the Ontario automobile insurance plan. I think that is perfectly in order, Mr. Chairman. I don't see any problem whatsoever.

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps we could be informed as to what this animal called the Ontario automobile insurance plan, is. I am not entirely familiar with the details.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I would like to thank the member for Kitchener for inviting me to explain to the House what the Ontario automobile insurance plan is.

Mr. Breithaupt: It seemed only fair.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Yes, it was very good of him.

The Ontario automobile insurance plan, when we manage to carry my proposed amendment and subsequent amendments, mere technical alterations, in this and other odd bits of legislation that might be necessary, will bring into being in Ontario a public automobile insurance plan. As I was explaining to the House—

Mr. Nixon: A point of order.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I think the honourable member for Hamilton Centre is trying to explain why he thinks he can bring this within the bill. Then I will hear the honourable member.

Mr. Nixon: I am on a point of order. Is he on a point of order?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I understood he was on a point of order because I had questioned whether or not this was properly part of the bill.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I was speaking to the motion; I was asked to explain what it was.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Yes, all right. I had asked that the committee be told how he was to fit this into the bill. I can't see it yet, and I wanted to give him ample opportunity to explain how he was going to fit this proposed amendment into the bill.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I don't have any trouble doing it. Section 1(g) of the bill simply defines what an insurer is. We have to define insurer for the purposes of this legislation.

Maybe I should read in full the definition given in the bill. "Insurer" means an insurer licensed under the Insurance Act and carrying on the business of automobile insurance, but does not include an insurer whose licence is limited to contracts of reinsurance." That then becomes the definition for the word insurer in this bill and carries with it a certain set of important consequences for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I understand that. My problem is there is nothing in the bill dealing with an Ontario automobile insurance plan, and it seems to me that to deal with that you are—

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Chairman:—expecting there will be something to follow, which I suspect will not be in keeping with the principle of the bill.

The honourable member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk on a point of order.

Mr. Nixon: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you are aware that the honourable member is simply attempting to change the principle of the bill by proposing amendments which will change it into a state-operated automobile insurance program. There is ample opportunity to discuss this, but it is not the principle of this bill.

It could very well be that the honourable member is anxious to establish this new authority and appoint me its chairman, and we can discuss the matter when and if this ever comes about; but I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is clearly out of order. This is not the time to have this lengthy debate and you should so rule.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The chair did not wish to jump to that conclusion until it heard the arguments.

Mr. Van Horne: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Yes, the member for London North.

Mr. Van Horne: This whole discussion is out of order, because in fact the member for Hamilton Centre would seem to be addressing himself to the Insurance Act, which we are not discussing now.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Perhaps I am not explaining it very well. We are dealing with an act to provide for compulsory automobile insurance in Ontario. Because we are dealing with an act to provide for compulsory auto insurance in Ontario, we, as legislators, are allowed to make alterations, to make amendments as long as we remain within the principle of the bill. All I'm trying to do is present a better and fairer way of providing compulsory auto insurance to the people of Ontario.

I think my amendment is perfectly in order. I can't see any problem with it at all. I look forward to your decision and I look forward to explaining the advantages of this definition as opposed to the disadvantages of the definition that's currently in the bill.

[8:45]

Mr. Breithaupt: This legislation before us clearly flows from commitments made in the speech from the throne in February of 1978 following the report of the select committee on company law. The involvement with respect to compulsory automobile insurance was clearly debated on second reading of this House and the principle of the bill was approved by this House.

That principle is twofold: One, the provision of compulsory automobile insurance within Ontario; and two, its provision through the present insurance industry. As a result of that, any attempt to amend this is clearly not the principle of the bill that was passed in this House on second reading.

I believe the proposal to change, in a somewhat cute way, the definition of the word insurer is working against the principle of the bill which this House passed.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I'm surprised at the confusion that reigns here this evening. People seem to be reading between the lines.

Under the definition, an insurer means an insurer licensed under the Insurance Act. I'm sure the chairman knows that there are 184 companies I could define; if necessary I will write out the names of the 184 companies to which this definition applies.

All the amendment is doing is adding one more company, the 185th company. How can there be any implication that the principle of the bill is not being adhered to?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I'm hearing a point of order, if the member will make it reasonably short.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That motion does not add a new class of insured. That motion is very plain. It says, "The only insurer in the province is the automobile plan" and there is no such thing.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Let me hear the member for Sudbury out.

Mr. Germa: How did the minister get the floor, Mr. Chairman? I was speaking when he arose. You might explain that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I recognized you.

Mr. Germa: How did you recognize him at the same time?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I don't think I did, but he was a little more pressing than you.

Mr. Germa: Was the minister out of order?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I don't think the chair is obliged to answer that point. If the chair took up the position that it had to answer the points every time a member is out of order we'd get no business done in this House. If you will proceed with your point of order.

Mr. Germa: I had a very good argument formulated, Mr. Chairman, which was disrupted by the minister.

As I was saying, this is only adding one more company to the list of 184 presently licensed by the Insurance Act. I submit that because we are not deviating from any principle covered by those 184 companies the amendment is strictly in order.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Since it's your question we'll hear from you once more; then I'll make my ruling.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'd like to raise a point of privilege first, in regard to the comments made by the member for Kitchener when he called my amendment "cute." I consider the word "cute" to be unparliamentary and I would hope he would withdraw that remark.

Mr. Breithaupt: I would certainly withdraw it with respect to the member but as far as his amendment is concerned I still think it was cute.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: To the point of order, the member for Hamilton Centre.

Mr. M. N. Davison: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, when we discussed this bill during second reading the whole focus of the debate revolved around the necessity for compulsory automobile insurance to be accompanied and brought in through a non-profit, publicly-owned, government-run automobile insurance program. That was the entire focus of the debate on second reading. All the amendment does is take one small step towards that; it simply brings a proper definition to the word insurer to Ontario. I think it is in order and we should have a debate and a vote on this matter.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The chair is ruling the amendment is not in order. It is not within the principles of the bill as approved in second reading. That is my ruling on the proposed amendment.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Roy: I want to get back to the point I raised with the minister during second reading, about the operator having compulsory insurance and my concern that if one wants to avoid the provisions of this section he will purchase insurance, get his registration and then cancel his insurance.

The minister talked about the difficulty of the enforcement of that particular section and that we may be in a position to have better enforcement once we start linking names to plates. He described the difficulty in doing that now.

I would like the minister to tell me what we have at this stage to prevent this abuse? What sort of follow-up do we have, apart from a driver being stopped and being unable to produce insurance? Is there any way at all we can follow this through? Secondly, when does the minister think we will be in a position to associate name to plate and give this effective enforcement?

I think the minister understands that for the percentage of people who don't have insurance now who will be forced into buying insurance if they want to drive on our highways, there is a strong possibility, without being overly paternalistic, or pessimistic, towards them, the percentage of people trying to avoid insurance from that group will be higher than the general public.

I think this section—compulsory insurance—will only be effective if there is proper enforcement. I would like to have the minister's comments.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Just to put in into perspective, the figure used right now for those who don't have insurance is about 250,000, or four per cent. Those are the people who never made any pretences or fooled around; they just haven't had insurance at all. That's always a great comfort to everybody, at least it has been in the past, to know that 96 per cent of drivers are covered by insurance. Indeed, I think that's been probably some of the reasoning as to why this bill is only coming in now.

The member has touched upon a very important subject.

Mr. Roy: What you are saying is four per cent don't even have the government insurance.

Hon. Mr. Drea: They don't have anything.

Then we get to those whose insurance has lapsed. They don't cancel; they just buy it for 30 days. They used to take the pink card down when the pink card was required. Now they sign on their form that they do have insurance for the 1979 licence year to avoid paying $150. We know that because they have accidents and it all spills out.

I explained to the member the other evening the difficulty with putting in a system to beat an offender at the licence counter, to ensure he won't be able to do that. It is virtually impossible on a manual system. We say an insurance company must notify somebody when insurance is terminated. If the insured decides after 12 months of insurance he doesn't like the agent, he doesn't like the company, he would like somebody closer, the resulting interchange is obviously a tremendous task but the big problem is the interchanges might be mismatched. In other words, the cancellation notice comes in and the driver gets something from the government saying his licence is suspended, all because the slip of paper saying he really did have insurance didn't come.

Implicit with a plate-to-owner system is total computerization. Bear in mind that's a computerized system for every licence issuer. It's not quite as simple as putting the system in the government offices, because the small offices really handle the bulk of licence renewals, except in Toronto.

As to when that computerization, along with plate-to-owner will come, I can give the member a reasonable guess—It's not in my ministry—I had hoped it would be here by 1979; obviously, it is not. I would think a reasonable guesstimate on the earliest we could look for it would be 1985.

In the meantime, what steps are we taking? First of all, as the honourable member knows, falsifying a licence application is an automatic $500 fine. Allowing the insurance to lapse and not having in force property damage and public liability up to $100,000 is an automatic fine of $500. If a person lies in the beginning, when he has no insurance, there's $500, plus the other penalty. If he has his insurance lapse, there's $500, plus the other penalties.

In addition to the other fines the court may impose, depending on what the driver's doing, he has to buy insurance in order to get his driver's licence back. And when he buys insurance after being caught, he's going to have to prepay for 12 months.

Those economic sanctions add up to quite an imposing amount. Also, we've extended the limitations period beyond the usual six months to one year. It's up to three years.

If you are in an accident, Mr. Chairman, the ordinary limitations will not protect you. You're playing up to three years on it.

I agree with the member; enforcement will be difficult until we computerize. Computerization is very essential and will make the law more enforceable. Until then, enforcement is going to come from being on the highway.

The RIDE program, for instance, provides for more enforcement on the road than was there in the past. So do the spot checks. I will tell the member for Ottawa

East, we're going to find most offenders by way of accidents, speeding, or being stopped by a policeman. That's exactly what we find now. They have claimed to have insurance; they don't have insurance; the motor vehicle accident claims fund has to pay out for them. That is how we're finding them now.

I'm relatively optimistic about it because the people who want to beat the cost of insurance are concerned about economics. The economic sanctions in this are so substantial—in addition to losing your driver's licence, if you're an habitual the plates coming off the car—that it doesn't make any sense to try to beat the system.

Mr. Roy: My concern is very often directed toward the victim of one who does not have insurance. What is the fund now, is it $100,000?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The fund will no longer pay. This is where the victim is probably in much better shape. The fund will only pay for an accident involving a stolen car or for a hit-and-run accident where there is not an identifiable driver. Under this, your own insurance company will act for the uninsured, just as it does now, where there is a vehicle from out of province that is not insured and hits your vehicle, or when you're in another jurisdiction and an uninsured vehicle does damage to either your vehicle or yourself.

It's not under your collision coverage, by the way. The insurance company, acting as though it was its own insured, will pay you. If you don't like the settlement, then you can go to binding arbitration or the courts. The binding arbitration is on the insurance company, not on you. The insurance company will go after that person for the fund.

In terms of the service to the innocent victim up to the $100,000 limit, the member is quite correct, the $100,000 limit is not only for the old motor vehicle accident claims fund, but it's also the minimum package that can be sold by a licensed insurer in the province. Up to those limits you will get better service because the MVAC, traditionally, has had to go to great lengths to protect the rights of the uninsured and so forth. But you will get better service.

In addition to whatever court penalties there are, the uninsured driver is going to have to repay that insurance company. I somehow think they will get him a little bit better than we've been able to. Bear in mind, after the first year I got collection agencies out there looking for between $40 million and $60 million which has never been paid back into the fund by people who promised to pay. We're not talking about blood from a stone or anything. Indeed, in terms of the innocent victim, the innocent victim is covered.

Your problem is going to be not so much on the $74,000 or up to $78,000—it's dropped down quite a bit; it was a higher fee—that we know we're paying into the fund, but it's going to be on these lappers who, traditionally, have done this. The only thing I can suggest to the member is that on-the-street enforcement will be up, particularly because of the RIDE program, which wasn't around even a year ago; secondly, the economics of it are that the penalties are so substantial that, realistically, you're far better off to buy the insurance package. I think most of them will.

Mr. Roy: Yes, I quite understand that but, as I explained to the minister, my concern very often was for the victim of all this. When he gets into an accident, he may be facing a driver who is not insured. As I understand what the minister is saying, the fund only pays if the car was stolen or if it is a hit-and-run type of situation. Otherwise, if you're talking about lapses and that sort of thing, your own insurance company pays and then takes steps to see what it can get.

This must be an agreement you've worked out with the insurance industry. Would the minister bring to my attention what sections amend the Insurance Act to that effect?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Section 16(3) of the bill amends section 230 of the Insurance Act.

Mr. Roy: That's in Part II of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Section 3 agreed to.

Sections 4, 5 and 6 agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, section 7 is that section which sets up and establishes "an unincorporated association of insurers to be known as the Facility Association."

The Facility Association, as we all should know, is designed to accept those risks which the ordinary insurance company has deemed to be high and consequently has refused coverage.

That is supposed to be the principle by which an insurer is put into the plan. This is where the compulsory part comes in and this is where I object to it. I object to the establishment of a compulsory system which forces me to participate in the profit motivation these insurers are deemed to follow. We know the problem of uninsured vehicles is caused largely by the insurance companies and their instinct for creaming the market.

They cannot stay away from seeking out what they deem to be the good risk, the high profit maker for them only. Their only consideration is the bottom line figure.

Whenever the public of Ontario is put into a situation of compulsion and transferred into the Facility, they have a right to expect that service is offered at the lowest possible price. That is not the case of the Facility Association.

Let me just go ahead to section 73, Mr. Chairman, to show the relationship. I will read the section: "The association shall, in its articles of association, establish a plan to be known as the plan of operation for providing a contract of automobile insurance to owners and licensed drivers of motor vehicles who, but for the plan, would be unable to obtain this insurance."

I just happen to have a copy of the plan of operation, and within it is described what will happen to surplus funds, that is profit. There is a provision in the plan for profit to be distributed back to the insurance companies participating in the Facility Association.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, remember that document hasn't been approved. Perhaps I should read the member something first. That document was only out there November—

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Sudbury has the floor, unless he wants to yield to the minister.

Mr. Germa: Could I ask a question before the minister explains?

In 7(3), to be known as the plan of operation, can the minister tell us what plan of operation, if not Facility Association plan of operation, we are talking about? Let him define the document known as the plan of operation.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I will try to help him out. That document is a draft document that hasn't been approved. I want to read something from a letter, November 26, 1979, which is addressed to the general manager of the Facility Association. This is on page three, and I can give you a copy of it if you want. "(5) We expect the Facility Association rate basis will not generate a profit on the Facility Association portfolio business."

I will read that one again for you: "We expect the Facility Association rate basis will not generate a profit on the Facility Association portfolio business. However, as provision against the unlikely event that a profit emerges, it is expected the Facility Association will submit a suitable schedule for refunding such profits to the Facility Association policyholders."

I know of no other way you can guarantee absolute rock-bottom prices. If a penny is made it must be sent back.

Mr. Germa: The letter as read by the minister says we expect you to do this. What proof does the minister have that this is the principle by which the Facility Association will be governed?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, it is very simple: otherwise we don't approve their rates.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, what we are being asked to approve in this legislation is the plan of operation. How can we approve the plan of operation unless we have that document in our hands? The plan of operation is the backbone of how the Facility Association is going to function. One miserable letter, written by the minister to the general manager, does not constitute a plan of operation. The plan of operation is a 25-page document. Here we are approving in principle—we have gone further than that now, we are approving in fact the plan of operation which we have not seen. We are giving carte blanche permission to the Facility Association to go ahead without our scrutiny.

Can the minister alleviate my concern as to how much power we are granting to this organization known as the Facility Association?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Section 10(2) of the bill says: "Prior to the 31st day of December, 1979, the superintendent"—who is sitting in front of me—"may, by order,

(a) prescribe the articles of association and bylaws of the association where the articles of association and bylaws are not filed in accordance with subsection 1; or

"(b) amend the articles of association or bylaws of the association filed under subsection 1 where he believes on reasonable and probable grounds that such amendment is necessary for the carrying out of the intent and purposes of the association and this act."

You have got it there.

Mr. McClellan: No, you haven't

Hon. Mr. Drea: Then vote against it. I'm not going to go through this three or four times. You won't even listen.

Mr. McClellan: What kind of nonsense is that?

Mr. M. N. Davison: The minister quoted to my colleague from Sudbury a letter he had written to somebody?

Hon. Mr. Drea: This is the fifth time. I was trying to help out the member for Sudbury. Believe me, it is the last time tonight I will volunteer anything. The particular document the member for Sudbury was reading from is a document that has not yet been approved by the superintendent. That's all, we have that document.

The letter that was written is in response to that document. The letter is dated November 26, 1979 and is to Mr. John M. Mathews, general manager, Facility Association. It talks about Ontario rate filing and what it does. On page two it says: "The following requirements apply to the manual of rules:

"(1) Effective December 1, 1979, private passenger rule 25, driver record 5, provision A coverage should be deleted.

"(2) It is expected by February 1, 1980 at the latest that a driver's record forgiveness rule be submitted for approval to prevent drivers who have established five-year, claim-free records being immediately moved to driver record 0 on their first claim in a number of years.

"(3) It is expected that by February 1, 1980 at the latest an appropriate multi-vehicle discount rate will be submitted for approval.

"(4) It is expected that the wording of general rule 5, additional charges, shall be modified to ensure the dollar amount surcharge for all perils coverage does not exceed the dollar amount surcharge for collision coverage.

"(5) We expect the Facility Association rate basis will not generate a profit on the Facility Association portfolio of business. However, as provision against the unlikely event that a profit emerges, it is expected that the Facility Association will submit a suitable scheme for refunding such profits to the Facility Association policyholders."

What I am trying to say is, notwithstanding what is in there about refunding to the insurance companies, that will not be approved and that will not be the procedure. In order to have their rate filing approved, as they must, particularly in conformity with section 10 of this act, they must be in a position that if they are making any profit on it to propose a plan of refunds to the individual policyholders.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I would like to thank the minister for answering my question. As I extracted the information from his last comment, the quotation he had provided, which he called number five, in response to the document the member for Sudbury was referring to, is a letter from the minister. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Drea: From the director of insurance services.

Mr. M. N. Davison: From the director of insurance services to the general manager of something called the Facility Association dated November 26, 1979. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

[9:15]

Mr. M. N. Davison: I have a substantive question which goes back to the question raised by the member for Sudbury, but I would like to ask the minister first how it is there is in existence something called the Facility Association when this Legislature has not passed the bill. It's in section 7(1) of the very bill we are talking about now: "There is hereby established an unincorporated association of insurers to be known as the Facility Association." Did somebody already have the name before the minister got to it or what?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, the Facility Association cannot be formally established until this legislation is passed. In order to prepare for it, so they won't start up business in the morning from scratch, they have been working on it for some time. Another reason is that they have to operate under some message of intent from us, otherwise there would be some difficulty setting rates and so forth in combination with the Combines Act.

Mr. Charlton: This is absolutely disgraceful. The minister has had almost two years since his promise to bring this legislation in; but he didn't; he dragged his feet. Now he has got the association working away; they have their own little general manager and the Legislature hasn't even passed the legislation. He doesn't know, I suppose, in what condition the legislation will emerge from committee of the whole House. As a matter of fact if my amendment earlier in the evening had carried it would have emerged in a quite different way.

I think it is very arrogant of the minister to go ahead and set up this organization, before the bill has passed committee stage. He has a Facility Association which hasn't yet been established and it has a general manager. The minister is engaged in writing back and forth with this alleged organization over the past number of days. That's arrogance for you.

Mr. McClellan: I remain mystified by the minister's assurance that his letter to the association constitutes a guarantee of non-profit operation. It doesn't. All it constitutes is the particular understanding of this particular minister at this particular time. It has no assurance with respect to what happens in the future if this minister changes his mind or if the government changes the minister.

The business about section 10 doesn't solve the problem either. I would suggest an easy way out; that is to put the principle expressed in the letter into section 7 by way of amendment. What is so difficult about that? I don't want to try to draft an amendment, I haven't been working along on this bill; but I would guess the minister or his staff could draw an amendment to cover the points set out in his letter relatively quickly. We could stand this section down for a few minutes and let the minister draft something we could have a look at. But let's not kid ourselves; we're not going to take the assurance of any individual just because he writes a letter to somebody, or because there is general discretion within another section to give the official power to set conditions that the conditions are going to be set. That's silly, that's irresponsible legislation.

So let's put it into the bill. Let's put it clearly in the bill that, for example, there is hereby established an unincorporated non-profit association of insurers to be known as the Facility Association. There would need to be, I assume, another subsection dealing with the dispersal of any accrued profits. That's what I don't know how to draft, but I am sure the minister does. Why doesn't he do it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's redundant.

Mr. McClellan: It's not redundant. It certainly is not redundant, because there is no provision in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is redundant.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The member asked me a question.

Mr. McClellan: I think I still have the floor.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Bellwoods has the floor.

Mr. McClellan: I asked the question and all the minister said was that it's redundant. I say I look in the bill and I don't see it in the bill. I want to see it in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, the minister does not set the rate, the superintendent of insurance does; therefore, it doesn't matter what minister is here, the superintendent of insurance does it.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, this is about the silliest thing I have ever engaged in.

The superintendent is going to guarantee this is a nonprofit corporation. How is he going to do that if it's not in the legislation? The minister agrees it's not in the legislation; it's in a letter of intent but the letter of intent does not constitute legislation. That's the simple argument or the simple objection we have.

It's even worse than that. What we are asked to do is adopt a document known as the plan of operation, which by the minister's own words is not even written yet. He says the text I have is not approved, so this is not written. We are asked to adopt this document which hasn't even been written. How can that make sense?

The minister has the cart before the horse, obviously. What should happen here is that document—the plan of operation—should be placed in front of us or appended to the bill, and we would know what we're talking about, because there are other things in this plan of operation to which I object as well. We're going to be in trouble all the way through the bill unless we get that basic principle answered.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Chairman, I would place a bit more, not a lot more, credibility in the guarantees of the minister, viewing the way things can happen around here, if this was the only statement the minister had ever made. This response of November 26 is from the superintendent of insurance to the chairman of the non-existent Facility Association, but in fact in that month that's the second interpretation put on the process of the Facility Association by either the superintendent or by the minister.

On November 2, 1979, the minister stood in the assembly and put it in a much different way to members of the assembly than the superintendent of insurance has put it to the non-existent Facility Association. The minister's phrase, "Rates created by the association will be subject to approval by the superintendent of insurance to confirm that they are properly calculated and ensure that high-risk drivers are treated as fairly as possible." That's a good deal different from phrases like "at the lowest possible cost," "no profit" or "if there's profit it will have to be turned back."

There are at least two different interpretations, one by the minister on November 2 as to what the Facility Association was and how it would work, and another interpretation by the superintendent on November 26. I don't know which of them is the real policy, and I don't know if there's a third or fourth possible policy that has been kicked about in the past month, or in the past year and a half or two years.

I think the suggestion of my colleague from Bellwoods is very good one. If the minister is firm in the position he has taken, that this company should operate as a non-profit company, that this company should return any surplus or any profit back to those drivers, he should put it up front in the legislation.

Mr. McClellan: I am quite prepared to move the amendment at the suggestion of the minister.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. McClellan moves that section 7(1) be amended by adding after the word "unincorporated" in the first line the word "nonprofit."

Mr. McClellan: It seems self-evident that this will put in the statute what the minister seems to want.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Germa: Still on section 7, Mr. Chairman, in order to ensure that the Facility Association is a nonprofit operation, to ensure that the lowest possible automobile insurance rates are given to the people, the board of directors must include somebody other than those in the insurance industry.

Does the minister have any correspondence which changes the method by which the directors are appointed, as indicated in this document known as the Facility Association plan of operation? I will read to the minister how they plan to set this up. He can tell me this is not yet approved, but I have no other document to work with other than this one.

"The board shall be composed of 10 directors who shall constitute a representative and equitably balanced cross-section of the automobile insurance industry. To be eligible to be elected or appointed as a director, a person must be a senior official of a member."

If the minister wants a full cross-section of the automobile insurance industry on the board, he has to have the consumer represented or he has left out the biggest part of the industry. The consumer contributes the $800 million a year plus in premiums to the insurance pool of Ontario, and if the whole automobile insurance industry is going to be represented on the Facility Association the minister must include someone who bought a policy and is not connected with the insurance industry; otherwise, this doesn't stand.

Can the minister explain how this board of directors is representative and will guarantee that this organization is operated at the lowest possible price, to give the lowest possible rate to those people forced into the Facility by his dictating? This is dictatorship, and when you dictate to people, you have to be a little careful and give the semblance, anyway, that they have some participation in this dictatorship.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I think the member would be well satisfied if he read section 11 of the act. It provides that a report by the directors must be given to the superintendent along with all information, et cetera, so that it can be verified and checked and reported.

There is an amendment coming up which may save a bit of time. I really have no terrible objection to it, but it is redundant because the superintendent of insurance gives an annual report, through me, to the Legislature. The superintendent of insurance, in regard to Facility Association, will be making a special annual report in his report, which will be tabled by the minister in the Legislature.

Mr. Martel: Drawing the entire board of directors from the industry is like putting Dracula in charge of the blood bank.

It might be an old line, but if I were a consumer and I wanted protection, I would want to be assured that there would be representation from the general public on that board. I might think the superintendent of insurance is a lovely fellow, but I have had differences of opinion with the superintendent of insurance in the past and I suppose I will have some in the future; I would like someone who is, let's say, more neutral.

I would feel more comfortable if that board were made up half of consumers at large, maybe from a consumer agency to represent my interest on this board. I'm from Missouri. I guess I'm a doubting Thomas. Twelve years in this place have convinced me if I want some form of protection, I should have someone on that board who has the same interests at heart I have.

The minister well knows that in various other boards and commissions we usually attempt to have the consumer represented. If you're talking about the self-governing professions, we always take pride in the fact that a number of people on those boards are from the general public. I don't see why we would not want the same thing here just to give everyone a little more comfortable feeling.

Maybe some of you people over there are totally convinced they will do it all properly. But as a member of a profession, I have found we as teachers on occasions tend to be over-protective. I suppose in the legal and other professions it is somewhat the same. I know in the medical profession that happens. To balance it, we take a few people from the outfield area, if I might use that term, of the association or the profession. Justice doesn't just have to be served, it has to appear to be served.

With the greatest of respect, I would think the minister should insist that a half, or if that's a little too strong for his taste, maybe a third of that board should come from the public. As I say, someone from the various agencies voluntarily involved in consumer protection might serve on that board. The minister should give that some thought before he rules out of hand.

As I say, while it will go to the superintendent of insurance, there are those of us, at least speaking for this member, who have differed on occasion with the superintendent of insurance. To give it a really fair chance, I would urge the minister to accept the suggestion. He might want to put the number in himself, but I would urge that the minister himself ensure there are people from outside the industry on that board.

Mr. Renwick: I'm not certain I understand the operation of section 7(4) in so far as it relates to section 5(b). What is the distinguishing factor that determines whether or not an application is an application under the plan? Subsection 4 states: "The association shall ensure, through its members, that a contract of automobile insurance is provided with respect to every application for automobile insurance submitted under the plan to an insurer under clause (b) of section 5."

What is the distinction and on what basis does an application become an application under the plan as distinct from any other kind of an application? I take it there are basically two classes of application: one under the plan and one not under the plan. What determines when an application becomes an application under the plan?

Hon. Mr. Drea: When someone comes in to purchase insurance, the agent or the direct writer, the agent particularly, attempts to place it with one of his companies. If he cannot place the risk he puts it into the plan. Does that answer the member's question?

Mr. Renwick: I take it then that the basis by which an application becomes an application under the plan is that it has been refused by an insurer; would that be a correct statement?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It may not necessarily be refused by the company; it may be on the basis of convictions or the very high risk it represents to the companies the agent is writing for that he might proceed through the plan.

Am I answering the point you have raised?

Mr. Renwick: I think we're talking about the same question. As another way to approach this, is the person whose application has become an application under the plan advised at any time that his application is now under the plan and that he is subject to the rules of the association?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. Renwick: Is he given a reason it is under the plan?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I don't know that he is automatically given a reason. If he were to ask, it would certainly be on the basis of his convictions, his at-fault accident record and so on. It might very well be the person would say, "That's not correct, it's not me."

Mr. Renwick: Is there going to be a uniform basis by which the various insurers make the decision they are not going to accept that application?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No. It's very difficult. It would depend on the area of the province. It would depend on the particular agent. An agent might say to the applicant, "I have to place your insurance through the Facility." Certainly that particular driver has every opportunity, if the competition exists in his area, to go to a direct seller or to another agent where he may get insurance outside the plan.

In some of the more remote areas of the province where there might be only one agent, the reason would be handed down that way. We want to make the process as uniform as possible, but we still have to recognize some of the exceptions that may arise, depending on where one is in the province, or on the applicant's driving record, which could also be significant.

Mr. Renwick: I am aware of the basis on which people are rated higher for insurance purposes. What I am concerned about is does the person who is refused insurance in the ordinary market, for whatever reason and regardless of how many companies he has gone to, have in writing the reasons he has been refused? Does he have any appeal against going through the plan, since he knows that under the plan he is going to have to pay more than if he was insured in the general market?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I don't know how many written replies the applicant could get, but if he is not satisfied he can come directly to the superintendent of insurance as is done now. If a person feels his rate is wrong, he has that opportunity now. We get a great number of such cases through the superintendent of insurance and they are adjudicated fairly.

With regard to a uniform process, the member knows it does not necessarily involve just the number of accidents. The high rate could result from one spectacular accident and the causes for it. If one were to consider three convictions, they could be three very minor convictions rather than more serious ones, such as for impaired driving, which being under the Criminal Code would almost automatically get one into the Facility Association. This uniformity, at least as I understood the member, is somewhat difficult to achieve.

But on the practical end of it, somebody, because of a subjective judgement, may be paying a higher rate than they should. Where do they go? The obvious answer is right to the superintendent of insurance for an adjudication or a review of the matter, just as is happening now.

Mr. Renwick: That's not in any statute. That's the minister's version of consumer protection of some sort; that you can come to the superintendent and ask that it be done, ask him to use his good offices, is that what it amounts to?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not necessarily. The present system has worked well for a goodly number of years. I haven't received complaints from members that people haven't been able to get a remedy when they have difficulties. I think it has worked well. I think it's a very effective form of consumer protection.

Mr. Renwick: Does the insurance policy a person ultimately gets on an application under the plan indicate that he's under the plan?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No. It could be written by any insurer. There's no such thing as a Facility Association policy. If you're asking whether we're going to have an insurance policy that says Facility Association, the answer is no.

Mr. Renwick: It's not going to have a special stamp on it or anything to indicate that he's different from his fellow citizens?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No. It's just a pooling arrangement to make sure there is equity for the policyholders who get their insurance outside of the plan.

Obviously if it's a relatively small company they might have to raise their rates to cover a significant number of high risks. It's just a pooling arrangement and there shouldn't be any stamp or anything else on it. It might very well be that at times in our careers, the honourable member and I might be very high-risk drivers and at other times very low risk. There shouldn't be that type of thing on it.

Mr. Renwick: I'm not sure when you use the term "agent" in section 5 and again in section 7(4) how that relates to the direct writers. I take it the direct writers, being insurers authorized to carry on business in Ontario, are by this statute bound to be members of the association?

Hon. Mr. Drea: They are licence agents within the meaning of the act.

Mr. Renwick: But they write insurance directly and not through agents?

Hon. Mr. Drea: For licence purposes, notwithstanding they are not agents, they still get an agent's licence, even though they are in direct selling. In here, you could have agent as the independent agent or a member of the Registered Insurance Brokers of Ontario, as we understand it, or the direct seller; under the Insurance Act they are both agents.

Mr. Renwick: So the term "agent" is an all-inclusive term, whether or not they are writing for direct writers or not?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. Germa: I'm still concerned about the control of the Facility Association. I did bring to the minister's attention the appointment to the board of directors. The minister seems to feel that as long as they are executives or senior officers of an insurance company they are going to look after the welfare of the consumer. I don't agree with him on that, and I guess we're not likely to change his mind, but let the record show this in no way satisfies the consumer out there when he's forced into this association.

The association, according to this plan of operation, shall call a meeting on a yearly basis. The voting rights within the association are not controlled by people in the usual democratic sense of one person, one vote. We are elected to this Legislature on the basic principle of one man, one vote. But for voting purposes within the Facility Association, according to this plan of operation, which we in theory have not seen or approved, if an insurer of the Facility Association writes in excess of $46,500,001 in premiums he will have five votes at the annual meeting, and an insurer writing less than $4,650,000 will have only one vote.

[9:45]

What you're doing here is transferring the power to the big dog in the field. The senior insurers of the province are going to rule the Facility Association, make no mistake about it, because about five of the big operators are going to have the majority of votes. Some of these insurers are offshore insurers and may well not be voting in the best interests of the people of Ontario. There's just that slight chance these people might not be acting in the best interests of the consumers of Ontario.

I have an objection not only to the way the board of directors is appointed, it's non-representative of the consumer, but the voting rights at the annual meeting are also non-representative of the consumer.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Those who are bearing the bulk of the risks for high-risk drivers across this province really have a say.

Mr. Martel: They have what?

Hon. Mr. Drea: "Say."

Mr. M. N. Davison: Before I become totally confused and lose track of all the Facility Associations I've heard about tonight—I so far have tracked three of them. There are three. There is the Facility Association which will be established by the passage of An Act to provide for Compulsory Automobile Insurance, Part I of Bill 160, that's one. There is the Facility Association that exists, perhaps only on paper, in that document from which my colleague from Sudbury has been reading, which was tabled before the select committee on company law. Then there is a currently existing semi-clandestine operation to which the superintendent of insurance corresponded on November 26, 1979. There are three different Facility Associations.

Here's my question: Inasmuch as the Facility Association is not clearly defined in all its aspects in legislation in Bill 160, can the minister tell me what the base will be for filling in those blanks and filling in those spaces? Will it be the 1977 document from which the member for Sudbury has been quoting or will it be this operation that's already going on out there somewhere entitled the Facility Association? Which of those two?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It will be the latter, but I want to make one thing clear: The Facility Association cannot exist until after tonight. Of course, if this bill does not go through tonight it won't exist at all, properly formed and using that name. I think the member is begging the question, although I have tried to explain it as best I can.

The legislation provides for the Facility Association. There will only be one Facility Association. In order to have the Facility Association ready to go on December 1, it was being set up in various stages. It is not empowered to do anything until this legislation is passed and, subsequently, until it meets the standards set down by the superintendent of insurance.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Can I try this one last time? As of February 21, 1978, as far as the citizens of Ontario were concerned the government had no intention whatsoever, at that time or the day before, of implementing compulsory auto insurance.

Hon. Mr. Drea: What?

Mr. M. N. Davison: The first time the government committed itself to the implementation of compulsory auto insurance was February 21, 1978. I can understand how there might be some kind of "at-the-post" Facility Association, with the minister having his people all ready to go; so that at midnight of the night we finish this these people can race into high gear and get going in performing their function. I can understand that. It is also okay that the minister and his superintendent of insurance are writing to this organization.

What I don't understand is how the select committee on company law can receive a document from a Facility Association back in June 1977, which is long before the government announced any intention to bring in compulsory auto insurance. What was the Facility Association, which existed, or might have existed, or was proposed at that time?

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, Mr. Chairman, it wasn't operating; it had no authority.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Can you tell me the name of the general manager of the Facility Association, who is the person to whom the superintendent of insurance wrote on November 26?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It was John Mathews; I read it out to the member.

Mr. M. N. Davison: John Mathews?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Was John Mathews not the general manager of an organization or group—

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have no idea.

Mr. M. N. Davison: —that presented a brief to the select committee on company law?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have no idea.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The minister has no idea?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have no idea; that's three times.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Exhibit 47 to the committee was a presentation to the select committee on company law by the Facility Association, represented by Mr. Colin Atkinson, deputy chairman, Mr. Ronald Walker, and Mr. John M. Mathews, general manager. So, in fact, this Facility Association, which is going to swing into action at the moment we pass this legislation, is an organization that I take it has existed for at least two and a half years; is that correct? They were working on this long before it was introduced in the House.

The same group of people have been the Facility Association. It really didn't occur to the government that there might have been some adjustment in all that time, but this happy little group has been working all the way through, and it is a fait accompli. Obviously there is good reason to believe that whatever is included in this green paper and in that exhibit 47 will be what the Facility Association is.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that we have to debate the plan of operation, and none of us in the House has a copy of the document approved by the minister. We have the cart before the horse; we are approving the plan without officially having seen the document.

Is the minister satisfied with the agency commission as proposed in the Facility Association plan of operation?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. Germa: He approves that forcibly, by dictate, the consumers of Ontario are going to have to pay an insurance agent 10 per cent of premium? Is that what the minister is saying?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes. It's less than the agent would get if he was booking it outside of the plan.

Mr. Germa: There is a difference, Mr. Chairman, in that a private agent out seeking business has certain expenses imposed upon him in seeking business. He might have to drive two blocks, two miles or 10 miles to seek the business. But in this case the consumer is dragged into his office, kicking and screaming to buy an insurance policy. There is no expense placed upon the agent. That is where the minister fails to understand the 10 per cent in my mind is in excess. When I, by compulsion, must come in and beg to do business with this agent, why should he be allowed to rip off 10 per cent of premium?

Some of the premiums on these policies are going to be pretty high, Mr. Minister. I think 10 per cent is a little in excess of what we should expect.

Mr. M. N. Davison: On exactly that point, Mr. Chairman, that sheds rather interesting light on the debate we had a bit earlier about the difference between the statement in the November 26 letter, the immediate response that was made to the member for Sudbury when he used the term "at the lowest possible cost" and the minister's original statement.

What becomes quite clear now is that anybody involved in the process can rake off a profit, can rake off percentages like 10 per cent when they are doing very little work in this field, as long as at the end the Facility doesn't show a profit or the Facility doesn't make money on the deal. It is quite possible for everybody else involved to make as much as they can, perhaps even more if some other plan of operation is approved than the one that was issued in 1977. It means those people in the highest category categorically will not get their insurance at the lowest possible cost. I think the minister should admit that.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister what input the government of Ontario has in determining who the servicing carriers will be under the Facility Association?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am sorry, I didn't hear the last part of that question.

Mr. Germa: I will repeat my question. Can the minister advise us what influence the government of Ontario will have in the appointment of the servicing carriers under the Facility Association?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The carriers are the ones who came in and were willing to do it at the time, and we approved them.

Mr. Germa: Once again, Mr. Chairman, different carriers service their policies in different manners. Some insurance companies have a good reputation as far as service is concerned. Each insurer operates in a different fashion. Some of them have a good record of servicing their clients; other insurers have a horrible record of servicing their clients.

We know one insurer that gives good rates in Ontario but gives horrible service. They will do everything but pay a claim. That is why they can give good rates. They are famous for not paying claims. Are you saying to this House that you are going to have no control over who the servicing carrier is?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The service will be there. If a person says someone is famous for not paying claims, I wish he would tell the superintendent of insurance about it.

Mr. Germa: We have seen the statistics and the superintendent has seen the statistics, Mr. Minister. Maybe the minister should interest himself in the figures of claims payouts by various insurers in Ontario and then maybe he will take my question a little more seriously than he seems to have taken it. I am serious about this.

Hon. Mr. Drea: So am I.

Mr. Germa: There are some insurers that should not be the servicing carriers.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Name them.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I will give you one. If the minister would like the name of an insurance company that I wouldn't like to see handling any insurance in this province, period, if I could do anything about it, I'll give him the name of Allstate, a company that ripped off consumers to the tune of $15 million in one year until they were obliged by the AIB to return that money to the consumers of Ontario.

There are a number of insurance companies operating in Ontario that during the life of the Anti-Inflation Board were obliged to pay back money they had ripped off from their consumers. Many of those same companies then found very inventive ways by which they could end up not paying or try to get out of paying that money back to the consumers of Ontario.

Maybe when the minister looks for bad guys in the insurance industry, ones we should be looking at very carefully, he might go through the AIB records to see which of those insurance companies were wearing white hats and which were wearing black hats.

Section 7, as amended, agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Breithaupt: My only concern is with respect to subsection 3, concerning the service of documents on the directors or officers of the association.

I understand of course that there will be 10 directors and possibly there would be three or four persons who would be classified as officers of the association. This kind of service is not quite what I had hoped for. I would have thought that the service would be more properly done at a known address even if it was initially through the office of the superintendent of insurance.

It could be, obviously, that we can't know a street address at this point because the operation may not be in any permanent headquarters. We might know the particular officers who might be served. But I would have felt that there was some opportunity perhaps to use the office of the superintendent as the information point for which the names of the directors or particular procedure might be followed.

I just thought that service in this way, on any one of possibly 15 people or whatever, just didn't seem to me to be very thorough or practical. There may be reasons in law why this particular approach is being followed. There may be the hope that anyone who is served is very quickly going to get on with finding out what is to be done about the documents that have been served upon him or upon her.

I just was wondering whether the minister could comment on this approach—why it has been taken in this way. It may be quite satisfactory, but I just raise the questions because I had them on my mind, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am advised by the legislative counsel that the approach is a very standard one and is the best we could arrange.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Germa moves that section 8 be amended by added thereto the following subsection 1a:

"At least three of the directors of the association shall be public-interest directors appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council from among the Canadian citizens resident in the province who are not associated with any insurer."

Mr. Germa: The obvious intention of moving that amendment is to ensure that the consumers of Ontario have representation on the Facility Association to guarantee it will deliver insurance at the lowest possible rates and at the least possible expense. Only in this way can we ensure the principle the minister has enunciated in his letter, that it shall be a nonprofit corporation—that is, to have someone there to ensure that some charges are not passed on which would preclude the rate from being the lowest possible delivered on the policy.

The principle is quite consistent with representation on various other boards and commissions. In fact, the Facility Association could very well be a public service board in that it is set up to take on all comers and, theoretically, to service the people of Ontario. The people of Ontario have no choice in the matter other than to participate in this association.

There are many reasons why the minister should reconsider his originally stated position and ensure that the consumers of Ontario have representation on this board. After all, the minister carrying this legislation through the House is entitled "the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations." He sometimes forgets the consumer part of his portfolio. This is one time when he can take that job seriously.

I know in his heart of hearts he has the consumers' best interest. I am sure in the dark of night when he is alone he often wonders how better can he serve the consumers of Ontario and how better can he protect those consumers out there. Then when the light of dawn comes and he has to face the cabinet he is in—and we know he is a lone wolf in that cabinet—all of these thoughts he had in the middle of the night are gone by the wayside.

Here we are. There are very few of that cabinet in the House and the minister could quite easily sneak this amendment through without the rest of the cabinet knowing it. Then when they wake up in the morning, they will find out he has truly protected the consumers of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am not going to accept that amendment. It's a grandstand play by the member. In his heart of hearts he knows what he is doing tonight. He just wants to stall the bill. In the dark of night when he is alone, which is a little bit more often than I am, I don't know what he does, but when the dawn comes he has to carry on with these charades in the House. Therefore, the amendment is not acceptable.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I think the reason my colleague from Sudbury has run into conflict here is that he has been overly generous in the compromise. If I had been moving that amendment, I would have asked for a majority of those people to be consumer, public interest, representative people; certainly half, five at worst.

I find it really quite unbelievable the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations won't put just three, 30 per cent of the people, on the board. I wouldn't be surprised if the member for Sudbury could be further compromised into proposing even two, but I think it should certainly be five. The minister has an obligation to make sure there is consumer representation.

The more and more I hear about the Facility Association, I wonder if the reason that amendment from the member for Sudbury was rejected may not be, seeing that this little Facility Association is already existing and operating and has its own fancy little stationery and general manager, that it already has 10 directors. Maybe already you've picked out the 10 directors and they are operating on the Facility Association and you would have to fire three of these people to get some consumer, public interest representation on the Facility. That wouldn't surprise me in the least.

I think it is a good amendment, and I would hope the members of the Liberal caucus would take a look at it and ignore the minister's blithe charges about grandstanding by the member for Sudbury. It is a good amendment; there should be some consumer representation on the Facility Association.

Mr. Renwick: You forgot to tell us how the directors will be appointed to the board of the Facility Association. If he will not have any public interest directors on there, could he tell us how the members will be selected? Obviously, they will be from the private interests.

Hon. Mr. Drea: To be eligible or to be elected or appointed as a director, a person must be a senior official of a member. To provide representation for each jurisdiction, at least one of the directors shall be a senior official member actively engaged in the business of automobile insurance. In a jurisdiction, not more than five directors may be senior officials of servicing carriers for the association.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Could the minister inform me who are the directors of the currently existing semi-official clandestine Facility Association? Are they people who meet the requirements of the legislation the minister has before us? Who are those people? Are those the people who will simply be put into these positions with the official third version of the Facility Association?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I will send them by note to the member when I get them. I don't have them here. I will send them by note to you.

You are not going to finish this tonight. You are just fooling around.

Mr. M. N. Davison: We are trying to get some consumer input into this association.

I would suggest that rather than voting on this particular section before we find out who these 10 people are, if they indeed exist, who are already operating on this current association, that we stand this down until we can get the names of these 10 people and see exactly in whose interest they are operating. I don't think it would be appropriate to proceed with the vote on my colleague's amendment until we have that information.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Germa's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: We agreed that vote will be deferred, but in view of the fact it is now 10:15 p.m. and we agreed to take votes on the other bill, I think the committee should return to the other bill for those votes. This vote will not be taken tonight, is that right? Do you wish this one taken? Do you want this one taken tonight?

Som hon. members: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right. We have to call in the members for two deferred votes on Bill 165 and one on proposed amendment to section 8 of Bill 160.

The committee divided on Mr. Charlton's amendment to section 167 of the Corporations Tax Act, as set out in section 1 of Bill 165, which was negated on the following vote:

Ayes 20; nays 64.

The committee divided on Mr. Charlton's further amendment to section 167 of the act, as set out in section 1 of Bill 165, which was negated on the same vote.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Bill 165, as amended, reported.

The committee divided on Mr. Germa's amendment to section 8 of Bill 160, which was negated on the same vote.

On motion by Mr. Wells the committee of the whole House reported two bills with amendments and progress on another.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, may I at this time table the answer to question 354 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 4932.)

[10:30]

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 28, the member for Wentworth has expressed his dissatisfaction with an answer given earlier. We will listen to him very attentively for the next five minutes.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will stop the clock for those who are not interested to make an orderly and quiet departure. I want to remind members the House is still in session.

TELEPHONE CHARGES

Mr. Isaacs: I appreciate your stopping the clock, Mr. Speaker.

Last Friday I asked the minister whether he would provide financial assistance to those who wished to intervene before the Ontario Telephone Service Commission in opposition to proposed general rate increases of the so-called independent telephone companies. I mentioned specifically the current application from the Community Telephone Company. I drew his attention to the fact that the federal government has provided funds to interveners before the CRTC in Bell Canada hearings. The minister's response to my request was no.

I regard the minister's response as a clear case of the Ontario government's treating customers of the so-called independent telephone companies as second-class citizens. Not only has the federal government provided taxpayers' money to assist interveners before the CRTC, but the Ontario government has itself intervened before the CRTC in opposition to Bell Canada. In fact, the minister was boasting about that during question period earlier today. That effort has also been made possible by money provided by all Ontario taxpayers.

The so-called independent telephone companies provide 178,000 telephone numbers to taxpayers of this province, yet those taxpayers receive absolutely no assistance in their fight with the telephone company. Indeed, they contribute to the cost of the fight with Bell Canada for which they obtain no benefit at all. The government is not giving these taxpayers fair treatment.

Taxpayers who are served by the Community Telephone Company come from exchanges as widespread as Adolphustown, Caledonia and Nairn, to name just three of the 21 telephone exchanges, which carry a total of 22,000 telephone numbers.

I want to give just one example, that of Mr. and Mrs. Gillis of Mount Hope, who receive multi-party-line service, and somewhat unsatisfactory service at that, from the Community Telephone Company's Caledonia exchange. The present basic monthly rate for Mr. and Mrs. Gillis's telephone service is $16.50. The proposed rate increase would lead to a basic monthly telephone rate of $29.60 for telephone service for these people.

Community Telephone Company is not your friendly local telephone company with the president living just down the street. It is, in fact, a branch operation of a huge multinational corporation that is attempting from its American headquarters with its high-priced lawyers and other financial experts to rip off 22,000 telephone customers in this province. How are the telephone customers going to fight that without some help?

How does the minister reconcile his appearing before the CRTC against Bell Canada with his refusal to help these people before the OTSC? Surely CRTC and OTSC are similar regulatory bodies, and the people need equivalent help. Will the minister at the very least provide one member of his staff for a few days to work with these people to help them fight the telephone company? That seems to me to be a very elementary and straightforward request, and I do not understand the minister's refusal to assist.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I am very well aware of the application before the Ontario Telephone Service Commission at this time for a very substantial rate increase, perhaps the highest rate increase application I have heard of for any utility. There may have been higher ones but I am not aware of one. I know this has the 22,000 subscribers in the 21 or so exchanges very concerned and I can understand that.

The question basically was regarding the funding of interveners in such cases. It has not been the policy in the past of my ministry, or of the government, to fund interveners in such a case. I think there is quite a difference to be drawn between intervening in a case for a Bell Canada rate increase to the CRTC, and to an application by one of the local telephone companies to the Ontario Telephone Service Commission.

We have about 35 or 36 private telephone companies in Ontario, either privately owned or municipally owned, that generally offer an excellent service to the citizens of the community. Sometimes we do hear from subscribers that they wish they were part of the Bell system, but the province has no way of telling a private telephone company it must sell out to Bell or telling Bell it must buy that company. Certainly in most cases I don't believe the subscribers would want that to happen.

The policy of the Ontario Telephone Service Commission and the holding of its hearings are on a much more informal basis than the CRTC. I agree with the honourable member that my ministry, on behalf of the people of Ontario, does appear before the federal regulatory body. This is not necessarily to give blanket opposition to a rate application but to ask pertinent questions, to make sure the rate that is granted is based on the proper information, and that all the questions are drawn out in the hearing.

The hearing will not be held in Ottawa, as a CRTC hearing is. It will be held in the local community. I believe this company applied for a rate increase last year. Hearings are usually located by the chairman in the areas where there has been substantial complaint or opposition or interest shown by the subscribers. As I recall this, last time hearings were held in the village of Erin or Hillsburgh and down in the Newcastle/Orono area. This company has a number of exchanges in the eastern Ontario area. It has some at Orono, it has the exchange up at Hillsburgh and it has a number down in the Haldimand - Norfolk, Hamilton - Wentworth area.

I cannot say tonight where the hearings will be held. The chairman of the commission, Mrs. Bielski, will set the dates and times and places for those hearings when the time for the submission of input to this application has expired. The normal practice, and I would expect it would be adhered to, is that there will be local hearings in those areas, so that it will be easy for the people involved or their representatives to make their submission to the commission.

I am sure the honourable member is well aware that I as the minister cannot interfere in or really comment on the merits of an application for a rate increase while it is being considered by an independent regulatory body, such as the OTSC. Ministry officials have been contacted by the subscriber groups and have attempted to provide information without offering any opinions in the case.

Mr. Speaker, I assure you there will be a full and fair hearing of this rate application and it will be dealt with appropriately.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Bellwoods, for up to five minutes.

DEATH OF FOSTER CHILD

Mr. McClellan: I note with some concern that the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), who was here for the vote at 10:30, is not here now. Perhaps if he is within range of my voice he would do us the courtesy of returning to the debate.

Mr. Speaker, on January 12, 1979, Shawn Lee Mandamin, a ward of the Kenora Children's Aid Society, died in Winnipeg of injuries sustained at the hands of the foster father with whom he had been placed by the Kenora Children's Aid Society. Shawn was 16 months old at the time of his death. He was a member of the White Dog Indian band at Shoal Lake and had been removed from his natural mother and placed with a family headed by a Mr. Joseph Jolicouer in September 1978. On November 9 Mr. Jolicouer was found guilty of manslaughter in the death of Shawn Lee Mandamin.

I raised this question this afternoon in the House for two purposes. First, I want an explanation. Baldly put, Mr. Speaker, what has happened in this province is that a child has been killed by child abuse in a children's aid society foster home, in what is supposed to be a place of safety. I want an explanation. I asked for an explanation this afternoon from the minister and did not receive it.

I want, by way of an explanation, a tabling of the results of the investigation the ministry has carried out. When I asked for that this afternoon the minister did not give us any assurance that these reports would be tabled. I repeat this request again tonight, that any reports available to the minister be tabled and put before this House.

Second, and I think more important, I want an independent inquiry into the state of foster care in this province and in particular the state of foster care as it is available for ethnic minorities and our native people. We are aware from ministry documents that there has been a decline over the last decade in the number of suitable foster homes available in this province.

I have talked to officials within the ministry and senior officials in charge of the ministry's foster-care program tell me that the problem in foster care is a simple one of matching the child to the most suitable home. The officials tell me the optimum ratio of available foster homes to homes actually in use ought to be three to one. In 1978 there were 4,619 foster homes in use. Ideally there should have been 12,000 foster homes available to maintain a ratio of three to one, but in fact there was something in the vicinity of only 6,500 homes available.

The ministry has allowed the foster-care program in this province to deteriorate as part of its constraints and cutbacks and I want an independent inquiry that will look at the whole question. I suggest the model of the Garber task force on child abuse, which served us well. I am not content to leave the question in-house within the ministry. I think it is far too serious for that.

When the minister answered me today he dismissed the Paquette incident. You will recall the Paquette child was placed back in her own home because of the absence of foster-care services for francophone children in the Ottawa area. She was put back in her own home where she had been tortured and abused in the past. When she was put back in her own home she was tortured and abused and killed.

The minister said that was many years ago. I remind the minister that less than a year ago the Paquette children were placed back in that same home because there was still no foster-home facilities for francophones in the Ottawa area.

The problem has not been solved. The minister does us no service by refusing to participate in this debate or by refusing to provide explanations to such urgent and distressing questions. He does us no service by refusing to appoint an independent public inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

The House adjourned at 10:45 p.m.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

COMMUNITY INFORMATION CENTRES

354. Mr. Grande: Will the Minister of Culture and Recreation table the names and locations of all the community information centres in the province? Will the minister also table the amount of funds that each of these centres has received for each year 1975-1979 inclusive? [Tabled November 13, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The information requested is as follows:

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

ELLIOT LAKE URANIUM MINES

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I have a national emergency; I just broke my glasses. I don't know if I'll get through this statement or not.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) tells me we're the same age. I'll find out if that's true. Yes, indeed we are. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker.

Honourable members will recall last May I tabled in the House the final report by the Environmental Assessment Board on the expansion of the uranium mines in Elliot Lake. Today I wish to table part one of a two-part government response to the findings and recommendations of the board. I am tabling this on behalf of a number of ministries which are listed in the report, therefore I wish to emphasize at the outset that questions relating to the programs for which my colleagues have direct responsibility should be directed to them.

This part one report deals specifically with the community aspects of the board's report. It includes the government's response to matters related to population and housing, hard services and the provision of social services. The second report, to be tabled shortly, will deal with the government's response to findings and recommendations concerned with mining operations per se.

The rate of community expansion at Elliot Lake is significant in terms of both rapid population growth, relative to other communities in Ontario, and the dependence of this growth on conditions in the uranium mining industry. As a result of the expansion of Rio Algom Limited and Denison Mines Limited and their affiliated companies in the area, we expect the population of Elliot Lake will have grown to 23,700 persons by 1984 from 10,700 in 1977. A further jump is expected to increase population to 28,000 by 1988.

The government has monitored the rapid resurgence of the Elliot Lake area since the uranium mining companies signalled their intention to proceed with the expansion. Very early in this process the government was advised by the municipality of Elliot Lake that council would assume the responsibility for co-ordinating and putting into place the new community infrastructure required to support the influx of people expected as the mines expanded.

The municipal decision represented a bold and unique opportunity for a resource-based community to assume responsibility as the developer, particularly in view of the decline suffered in the early 1960s. The government of Ontario welcomed the initiative in the context of its policy to have municipal governments assume a greater role in the planning and administration of rapid growth.

The province, in assessing its role in the expansion of Elliot Lake and the adjacent municipalities, recognized problems could arise as the expansion proceeded, notwithstanding the proficient manner in which matters had been handled to date by local government. Consideration was also given in our assessment to the scale of the expansion, the area's location in northern Ontario and environmental matters related to uranium mining, milling, waste management, air and water quality and radioactivity.

The hearings and subsequent report of the Environmental Assessment Board assisted greatly in focusing the government's attention on many of these issues. Having carefully reviewed the situation and the board's report, the government decided the local municipalities have demonstrated the capability to manage growth and its effects. Normal provincial support programs from the various ministries are applicable, of course, and are being used by the municipality. Special provincial involvement should only be necessary if significant or unusual problems emerge.

The ministries directly or indirectly involved will monitor the situation during the next few years until a measure of stability is achieved in the community. Should significant problems emerge, the Ministry of Northern Affairs would be co-ordinating any necessary activities. Should action by the provincial government be considered necessary at some time during the expansion, the issues will be referred to the cabinet committee for resources development for action.

The report I am tabling today is subdivided into sections following the same sequence as the chapters in part two of the Environmental Assessment Board's final report, which deals specifically with community assessment. It is, therefore, self-explanatory. Should honourable members have any questions they should direct them to the ministries which are directly concerned.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker; and my thanks to the Treasurer, his glasses have dollar signs written all over them.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES DISPUTE

Hon. Mr. McCague: Copies of my statement are being handed to the leaders of the other two parties.

As members are aware, the Ontario Public Service Employees Union, representing Ontario government public servants, has requested a separate bargaining category for correctional officers and certain pay-related classes. The government has not acceded to this request as there are many other groups of employees that might make similar arguments for a separate category. This could lead to a doubling or tripling of the number of categories with which the government would be required to bargain.

On the question of salaries, the government still believes the reduction of the existing differential between the salary levels of the province's correctional officers and those of other jurisdictions can be resolved at the bargaining table. However, in a further attempt to resolve the impasse, I met yesterday with Mr. Sean O'Flynn and several correctional officers on the union's negotiating committee.

On behalf of the government, I proposed that the question of a separate category for the classes proposed be referred to an independent third party for adjudication and that the parties agree to be bound by the decision of the appointed adjudicator. I further offered to meet the president of the union to consider the names of persons who might be asked to accept this assignment.

Last night—and I am sorry I must vary from the statement slightly—Mr. O'Flynn agreed to consider this proposition. I have received at my office a telephone message from him saying the people involved and the union as a whole find this offer acceptable. (See correction below.) I did point out we already have the Shapiro report which is that of an independent body.

HYDRO RATES

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier having to do with a statement he made, not in Ottawa, although there are a number of questions arising from that, but which he made in the House a couple of days ago. I quote from page 1435-2 of Instant Hansard. The Premier said, ". . . cost of kilowatts in the rural areas . . . compare favourably to any other rural jurisdiction."

Is he not aware that the cost of electricity in rural Ontario is the highest in Canada west of New Brunswick? Is he not further aware that his former Minister of Energy, the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor) has indicated in a recent statement that 800,000 rural consumers are being ripped off by the policy of the provincial government in that they are paying rates for electricity that are higher than elsewhere in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think we really get down to a definition of what is meant by a rural consumer. I am referring primarily to those in the agricultural community. I will give the Acting Leader of the Opposition an example. Up until about two years ago the people in Bramalea, representing some 30,000 to 35,000 customers, were considered as part of rural hydro. They were charged by Ontario Hydro and were paying a higher rate than in the older part of the city of Brampton. They are now part of the city and are paying a common rate. There is still no question that there are people who are sort of in the urban environment who are still customers of Ontario Hydro.

I really haven't looked at the figures in a definitive sense from all of North America, but in general terms I think what the bona fide farmer is paying in terms of electrical costs is really quite competitive with comparable jurisdictions in this country. There is that grey area where there are a number of customers who are considered in Hydro's rate structure who, I would acknowledge, are rural by definition but who, in fact, are not farmers or not involved in the agricultural industry and really are part of some urban environment.

I don't have any other specific examples, but I think I could find these for the Acting Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: I must say really that the Premier's statement encourages me a great deal, because there is a clear indication the information he has, either at his disposal or in the back of his mind, is incorrect.

I am not talking about the farmers who live in Bramalea or who live within a stone's throw of the Premier's house in Brampton. We are talking about the ones who live in rural Ontario. Is the Premier not aware that the real farmers are paying higher rates than in any other rural community, than any other farmers in Canada west of New Brunswick? For example, for 1,000 kilowatt-hours in Ontario, the price is $39.50. Even in Newfoundland, it is $34.61 while in Quebec it is $24.40.

Will the Premier take my assurance, and if not will he check it himself, that real farmers, the people milking cows and pumping water and so on, are paying rates higher than farmers elsewhere in Canada? Would he further agree that if those figures are correct he will take steps to correct this situation so that the farmers, in the words of his former Minister of Energy, are not going to be ripped off by the policy of the provincial government?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would be delighted to get a breakdown of those figures and to give the honourable member the assurance this government has always taken the approach that we do everything we legitimately can to assist the farm community in this province. I think the record speaks for itself what we have done for—

Mr. Riddell: You say that with a smile on your face.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's true. The member know it's true. The farmers in his community will be the first to admit it. In fact, the farmers next door to him, in his colleague's community, not only admit it, they give credit to the government of Ontario without any question whatsoever, just like his colleague, when he writes his weekly column, gives credit to the government of Ontario when it suits him—not always, but when it suits him.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Could the Premier kindly explain to the House why the government of Ontario, in co-operation with Brewers' Retail, ensures that beer is available across the province, despite the cost of transportation, at the same price to every consumer, but does not take any comparable steps to ensure that electricity in rural Ontario is not overpriced relative to the price charged to urban consumers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I won't ask Mr. Speaker to rule on the validity of that being a supplementary question. I can only say the price of beer, which is equal across this province, does not reflect any personal prejudice on my part in favour of beer.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: When the Premier is undertaking to correct what is obviously a very serious anomaly in the selling price of electric power, would he also take it upon himself to correct the illusions being created in certain recent publications of Ontario Hydro, certain propaganda publications which tend to indicate people in Ontario really do have a low price for power?

The name of the recent publication escapes me, but it's facts you wanted to know about Hydro and were afraid to ask. Would the Premier take steps to eliminate these illusions about the price of electric power the utility is now trying to promote?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't think they really are illusions. One can get into a legitimate discussion as to the breakdown of prices between various consumers of Ontario Hydro, whether it's the municipal utility, whether it's the direct customers or what have you, but I think it is fair to state that in any relative sense, on any comparative basis, electrical rates in this province compare very favourably with just about every other jurisdiction in North America. I would go so far as to say they are much lower than the majority of other jurisdictions, certainly much lower than in western Europe, much lower than in Japan.

Mr. Nixon: We don't live there, we live here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All right. Much lower than almost any other place in Canada.

Mr. Nixon: That's not a fact.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is a fact.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary, the member for London Centre.

Mr. Peterson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate your recognition after this month and a half in the desert.

May I ask the Premier how he explains the disparity between the energy he has spent trying to fight higher oil prices, and all of the energy of his government has been devoted in that way on a matter over which he really has no control, when here is a matter over which he does have control, and we have seen no energy, no attention and no thought given to that matter over which he does have control? Why the difference?

Hon. Mr. Davis: In fact we have devoted a lot of time and interest with respect to all energy-related matters. I'm very intrigued to hear the member for London Centre say he wonders why we have made the effort we have with respect to energy pricing because it's something over which we have no control.

I just wish he would communicate that to his leader, because he goes around this province saying the Premier of Ontario can solve all of this. I respect the member for London Centre's point of view on this far more than his leader's, because the member happens to be right. At the next leadership convention, he may make it.

Mr. Speaker: The Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet has been trying to catch my eye. I don't know exactly why.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES DISPUTE

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what this is a point of; however, it's been mentioned to me by three members of the House that in my remarks I said the union had found my proposition for third-party arbitration on the matter of the ninth category to be acceptable. In fact, I meant to say "unacceptable."

Mr. Nixon: I could assure the honourable member who rose to correct his statement that it does make a difference. On that basis, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Correctional Services. Will he explain to the House how he is going to ensure the safekeeping of the inmates of his correctional institutions? Is it a fact that many of the problem prisoners are being let go on temporary absence permits, tickets of leave, special paroles and so on, and that he is solving the problem by—

Mr. Peterson: By opening the door.

Mr. Nixon: —by opening doors?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying, with respect to the question of so-called problem prisoners being released on temporary absence or any other form of open-door policy, that is not the case, that is just not happening. If it is, I would ensure it was stopped immediately, but I give the member the assurance it is not happening and that is not the case.

With respect to contingency plans, this ministry has contingency plans for virtually every circumstance and every possible happening, including the withdrawal of services. The contingency plans are in place. It is fair to say the jails will remain functional should a strike occur. Remember, it's an illegal strike, so should a strike occur the jails will remain functional and we will take all steps necessary to protect the public. The member can rest assured of that. The jails will continue to function.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: The minister is aware there were a large number of jail guards and people protesting the government policy before the Legislature last night. Is he also aware there is an indication from those who know about these things that the policy, if not the minister's that of those directing the correctional institutions, is that many problem prisoners are being set free? Since he has made an undertaking that is not the case, will he provide the House, as soon as he can, with the numbers of prisoners who are receiving tickets of leave, temporary absences and so on?

Hon. Mr. Walker: I certainly will, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Would the minister not use this last minute opportunity to discuss with his colleague, the Chairman of Management Board of Cabinet (Mr. McCague), the possibility of backing off from the hard line position they've taken, inasmuch as this has been a request from day one for correctional officers, and grant the separate bargaining category?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, let's just get one thing straight. Five years ago the union agreed to the number of bargaining units which were established at that time; there hasn't been a change in the circumstances.

Two months ago, I found out about the interest of having the ninth category for the first time. It's something that would normally be brought to the table as a bargaining point, and bargaining has not even begun. It seems to me logical, on the part of the union, that they consider discussing this matter in the proper forum. There are ways of averting an illegal strike. We have not been the ones who have chosen to go on an illegal strike. These people have a way of coming forward and discussing these matters; in fact the chairman of management board has indicated today, in a very conciliatory way, the entire matter of a separate ninth category is something he is prepared to put to binding arbitration. How much more conciliatory does the member want us to be?

Mr. Bradley: I have a supplementary to the minister, Mr. Speaker. If the representatives of the union were prepared to give an undertaking to either this minister, or I suppose more appropriately the Chairman of Management Board of Cabinet, that there would not be a further request for yet another category in the foreseeable future, would the minister then be prepared to entertain the possibility of complying with the request in light of the fact that would really remove what has been the number one reason for not allowing the additional category?

Hon. Mr. Walker: The basic concern here, and I think the member appreciates it, is not the question of a separate category, because we have been treating correctional officers in a very separate and distinct way.

Five years ago they received a special consideration far and above what other members of the same unit would receive, and it was the union that refused to permit it. Last year the correctional officers received a special two per cent distinction, so you would have to say that a separate category really has been, in effect, dealt with in a practical way.

The real issue here is one of wages. It is fair to say that there is a legitimate complaint on the part of correctional officers in that there is a large disparity between what is being received by them now, about $16,000 per year, and what, say a first-class OPP constable might be receiving, $21,000 a year. We hope that gap is going to be narrowed. Not only do we hope it is going to be, but the chairman of management board has given an undertaking that he is prepared to extend a special consideration in that case with respect to salaries. Negotiations haven't even begun yet; they are to start next week and here we are talking about an illegal strike.

Mr. Mancini: I would like to redirect my supplementary to the Chairman of Management Board of Cabinet, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the fact that the union had originally requested 12 categories and had ended up accepting eight; that it always wanted and for the past five years has continued to ask the management board for an extra category, a law enforcement category; in view of the fact that the 3,000 law enforcement employees cannot make their point when they have to negotiate alongside 6,500 health-care employees; in view of the fact that five other provinces across Canada have law enforcement categories; and in view of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that—

Mr. Speaker: Order. A new question, the member for Ottawa Centre.

GAS AND OIL PRICES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Premier, Mr. Speaker, about the agreement reached this week on oil and gas prices which will raise in Ontario the price of gasoline from $1.05 per gallon to approximately $1.95 by 1983, and which will raise heating oil prices in this province from 70 cents per gallon to $1.30 per gallon by 1983, a cost to every family of $540 for gasoline and $560 for fuel.

Could the Premier say why Ontario has not been pressing the federal government for the $10 billion that will be raised in revenues in this province from the petroleum sales between 1980 to 1983, in order that it may be used in and by this province to cushion consumers, cushion small business and to get this province growing in terms of alternate sources of energy?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have no comment on Mr. Broadbent's release. I am under the impression that no agreement has been concluded, that there are still some things outstanding to be resolved. While the NDP national leader apparently made some statements today, I am quite obviously not going to comment on what would be, at this moment, speculation.

In respect to the latter part of the question, if the leader of the New Democratic Party would read once again the things we have been saying, the material that was presented, the paper that was developed in August, he will find all of those matters dealt with at some length in those papers.

Mr. Cassidy: Since it is clear, Mr. Speaker, the only matters yet to be decided in the discussions between the federal government in Ottawa and Alberta are whether even more money should be shovelled out to the multinational oil companies and to their political allies in that province, could the Premier explain why this government continues to put its trust in the weak Conservative government of Canada, rather than insisting that the money raised from oil taxation in this province be redirected, repatriated to Ontario, so that we can ensure consumers are protected, and we can ensure that we get going on energy self-sufficient and alternate sources of fuel?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I really don't want to labour it. Please read what we have been saying. The member will find much of that contained therein. Perhaps also he will not find contained therein the acceptance of this government of the general principle of equalization of oil prices across Canada.

I have to confess to the member that I support the use of revenues to have equalization of oil prices across Canada. If he doesn't happen to support it, I do support it, because I guess I am more interested in the constituents in Ottawa Centre than the member happens to be, because they happen to be the beneficiaries of that policy.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: Since the Premier admitted, very interestingly during a former question, that he had no control over the ultimate price that would be arrived at for petroleum, would he not agree that all of the machinations in which he has engaged over the last few months, creating the illusion that he has some bargaining power at Ottawa, have been a most disappointing hoax on the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, because I think the honourable member really knows in his own conscience what he is saying is not factually correct. Certainly it is not supported by recommendations from his own leader, who over the years has been totally inconsistent on this issue.

I said at the very outset that in terms of the negotiating position, or in terms of this province having some legal ability to influence the question of price, these tools were not available to us. This was said in August. It has been said on many occasions. If the member will go back in Hansard and read the things that were debated in 1973-74-75, he will find I was very frank about the same situation.

What the member for Halton-Burlington is suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is that the government of Ontario should have just sat back, acquiesced and not expressed a point of view. I would say, with respect, I think what we have done has been right, and I think what we have said will have some impact on some aspects of what ultimately is decided.

Once again, if the member goes back in history he will find the former government in 1974 was as committed to the philosophy of world price as is the existing administration, if not more so. He will find both of the producing provinces wanted world price then. We had no more cards to deal on that occasion than we have now, and the reality is that for four years we have been substantially below world price.

I have no idea what the ultimate price decision will be, but I will make a prediction for the member that in the current year, or in 1980, much as the producing provinces may want more we will not be at world price at the end of 1980, either.

Mr. Conway: He would bet on the sunrise tomorrow morning.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will make another prediction for the member. One of the basic questions we have been asking, and one of the basic policies we want to see accepted, is that whatever the ultimate price may be, it will be substantially below that of either the Chicago price or world price, whichever happens to be lower.

If the member will recall the discussions of some two weeks ago—I know he watched them very carefully in between other chores that were more important to you than watching television—the first minister said and it was supported, perhaps not by direct response but I think implicitly it was supported, that our price ultimately would be below that of world price, which is significant. It may not be so to the member, but it is to the manufacturing sector and consumers in this province.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Could the Premier explain why this province is continuing to support the increased export of natural gas from Alberta, which the federal government is now prepared to endorse by allowing a further three and a half trillion cubic feet of natural gas to go from Alberta into the United States, when Canada will need that three and a half trillion cubic feet as one of the essential means of moving towards energy self-sufficiency in the heating sector during the 1980s?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I hardly regard that as a supplementary; that is a separate issue, that is the question of export of natural gas.

Mr. Makarchuk: It is part of the whole package.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think I replied to this a few days ago. The question was identical, and I said then Ontario was not supporting increased export of natural gas before the National Energy Board at this time. If the honourable member will go back again, if he will listen, I am telling him what was said, and he can either accept it or not accept it. I have made it very clear we were opposed to increased export of natural gas until such time, obviously, as the National Energy Board made its determination, until we knew just what alternatives were available and until there was some national approach to the whole question of energy.

I would just remind the leader of the New Democratic Party that in this country we have to recognize something else. If there are significant surpluses—and that is the terminology I have used—and acknowledging that at some point in the far-distant future frontier gas will cost more than existing gas, which no one debates, one has to remember we are still modestly dependent on our American neighbours with respect to coal for Ontario Hydro.

That may come as a surprise. It may be that the member can disassociate us from them on one issue but not on another. I think the honourable member must be very short-sighted. He doesn't have the perspective he says he has in terms of international relationships if he can say, on one hand, "We have a surplus but we are not going to give you any"—if, in fact, we have it—yet on the other hand says, "Please share your coal resources with us because we happen to need it for the generation of our electrical energy."

I have to say to him human nature doesn't work that way. That isn't how human beings deal with one another. With respect, I'm not sure we can have international relationships if we don't recognize there has to be a two-way street.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: On November 2, the Premier responded to a question, which is recorded in Hansard, concerning the excise tax and his government's position, by saying there was no way he could table a telephone call in the House as to the government's position.

Would the Premier assure the House he will table all documents he will be sending to Joe Clark which state his government's position in its opposition to the proposed 25-cent gasoline tax hike?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't want to be unkind, but I would only ask the member for Essex South where he has been for the past two months. I really mean that. I don't need to table any information. I would just encourage him to read those things I have said. I have made abundantly clear our reaction to a proposed excise tax. There is no tabling of correspondence; there is no need for that. My point of view has been very clearly put. It was put, if he watched, at the first ministers' meeting. I don't know how much more evidence he wants of our point of view.

Our opposition to the excise tax has been publicly stated, just as it was stated when the former administration imposed a 10-cent excise tax some three or four years ago. Read it.

OTTAWA COURT FACILITIES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Premier about the Cartier Square development in Ottawa on which he commented during his visit to Ottawa yesterday. Can the Premier explain why there has been no consultation whatsoever with the community in Ottawa or with local authorities in Ottawa about the proposed swap of the teachers' college for land for the courthouse in Cartier Square?

In view of the virtually unanimous opinion of people at a community meeting in Ottawa Centre last night, which included the elected officials from the area, that they were opposed to non-public uses, such as the mess in the teachers' college, and that they wished a three-month freeze on further agreements until there was public consultation, will this government agree to that three-month period so there can be a process of public consultation and input on the future of Cartier Square?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think what the member for Ottawa Centre is saying is he wants at least a three-month delay or longer of this particular facility.

Mr. Martel: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well it is what he is saying. I am saying very simply we want to move ahead with the courthouse. We have been criticized by him and some of his colleagues because we have not moved ahead with it. We have had some modest criticism from the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy), who I must inform the House, was at the press conference yesterday about 4:30 o'clock or whenever it was. He was so overwhelmed by the announcement that, obviously, he is still in Ottawa today recovering from that great event, but it was great to see him there.

Mr. Conway: He is in Ottawa watching the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) hand out the contract.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No; I am only guessing that he really wants to get as much experience in the old court facilities as he can before he moves into the new one on a more permanent basis. I can only say to the member for Ottawa Centre that we want to do it in the proper fashion. We are quite prepared, in terms of having the bar association and other groups offer advice, but we are not prepared to delay the project.

I would just ask the honourable member—this is a little bit of friendly advice—to go and talk to the construction unions in the Ottawa region and find out if they want this delay for a prolonged period of time. We want to see a little economic activity, we want to see some growth taking place, we want to see jobs created. I know that it's offensive to the honourable member, but that happens to be our point of view.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the Attorney General's department has not yet communicated to the Ministry of Government Services exactly what facilities they will require, or what square footage they will require for the building; and since I am told by the ministry that they will not have plans available for the courthouse—ready for tendering—until at least September of next year; why will the Premier not accept that there was a mistake made in failing to consult the community and that further agreements relating to Cartier Square should be stopped for three months until that process of consultation can take place?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have to say to the leader of the New Democratic Party that we don't intend to stop the process. To suggest we will hoist those agreements for three months, four months or whatever length of time is involved—people can change their minds; I want to get that order from the government of Canada in council, or whatever it is, now. We have been trying to get something for the last three years and I want to get it immediately.

There is no question that it will take the Ministry of Government Services a period of time to design the facility. This will give people an opportunity to express a point of view, but please don't urge us to delay a project that is now overdue in the interests of that community, the economy of that community, the aesthetics—all of those things that we feel are important.

We want to proceed. I don't want to call up the government of Canada tomorrow and say, "Listen, we have been pushing hard for three years. Please delay it for another three or four months." I want to complete it.

The design and all of those things will take time. There will be a chance for people to contribute a point of view. Please don't hold up progress in Ottawa Centre. I urge the leader of the NDP, as the local member, to get on the side of progress.

Mr. Sterling: Supplementary: In light of my conversation this morning with the executive of the Local 527 of the construction workers' union in Ottawa, who said he and the other union executives and members are overjoyed by the announcement of a courthouse in Ottawa and that construction should begin as soon as possible; and in light of the high level of unemployment in the construction industry in Ottawa; will the Premier assure us he will go ahead with the construction process as soon as possible, in full consultation with the community and with the Carleton bar association?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can give the very distinguished member this assurance: in spite of the objections of the member for Ottawa Centre, we intend to pursue this project just as expeditiously and as reasonably as possible.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the government's abdication of any responsibility for consulting with the community in Ottawa, could the Premier explain why the government of this province was prepared to give up jurisdiction to the Ottawa Teachers' College, a building which has stood open to the public for almost a century? Why was the government prepared to give up jurisdiction to that building without even having any thorough study as to whether or not that teachers' college could be renovated and expanded to form the courthouse facility?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there was an assessment of the Ottawa Teachers' College. We have all looked at it. I know the college very well; it's a great facility. The only problem is that it doesn't make sense to turn it into a new courthouse.

[2:45]

OLC SALE OF LOTS

Mr. Bradley: In the absence of the Minister of Housing, Mr. Speaker, I will direct this question to the Premier, if I may.

I am in receipt of a letter that is addressed: "To whom it may concern." It is from the Ontario Land Corporation, and offers serviced lots at favourable prices in the cities of Welland and Niagara Falls, 14,500 in Welland and 11,000 in Niagara Falls. My question to the Premier is this: Could the Premier tell the House who receives this particular letter and what criteria is used to determine who shall be on the list of those receiving this particular letter which offers these lots at favourable prices and under favourable terms?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure who was on the list. Quite obviously the member for St. Catharines has that. If he wants to make a tender on any of those lots for his own use I don't think there would be any conflict in that. It might be a great spot for him to build a house. I have no idea, but in the absence of the Minister of Housing I would be delighted to get that information for him.

If there are any of the honourable member's constituents who have had that circulated to them I will undertake to make sure they have that same opportunity.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Since I received a letter from an individual who identifies herself as "to this time of Conservative membership," and who is complaining of the fact she did not have the same opportunity that apparently only registered builders have, would the Premier undertake to ensure the average citizen in Ontario does have the same opportunity to purchase these serviced lots at this price and not just a selected group?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the member will find it is the policy—and I am only guessing at this—of the land corporation to offer lots to those people who are in the industry. I doubt they offer them to individuals who wish to build a house of their own; they would be offered to registered builders who are part of the building organization. I will check this out for the honourable member and get an answer for him, but that would be my guess.

HEALTH SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Breagh: I have a question for the Minister of Health. The minister is aware of the case of a Mr. Joe Miller, here in Toronto, who has obtained legal services to protest to the Ontario Medical Association about extra billing without notice. I wonder if he would report on the status of that case?

How does the minister reconcile people who are now getting lawyers to represent them in cases of extra billing with the statement from the communications officer at the OMA that, "It is not possible, however, to resolve third party complaints"? This is in response to a letter from the honourable member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart).

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe I am aware of that particular one, but I will certainly check into it.

My experience has been, with other cases that have been raised by the honourable member and some of his colleagues, that they can and do assist in resolving individual cases and problems. There are examples of that in the media this morning, as a matter of fact, where that did happen.

Mr. Breagh: It is obvious in at least these two cases it is not working out. Is the minister now prepared to give serious consideration to private member's Bill 169 which says in a publicly-funded hospital, using publicly-paid-for equipment, with publicly-funded nurses and technical staff, at least in that situation the doctors would provide it at the OHIP-approved rate?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the member knows, it is the feeling of the government, supported by the hospital association and the medical association, that all services should be available in public hospitals at OHIP rates. That isn't to say there won't be some instances where there are misunderstandings or problems, but those can be resolved through the office of the minister, or more particularly through the boards and the administration of the community-owned and community-run hospitals.

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of the Environment has the answer to a question asked previously.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, on Monday of last week the member for Niagara Falls asked me some questions concerning Olin Chemical Corporation in Niagara Falls, New York. Frankly, I was somewhat disappointed by the fact the member chose to imply the ministry was unaware of the matter simply because I said I, personally, did not have all the facts at my fingertips.

My regional staff are in regular contact with their counterparts in New York state and much information is exchanged as a matter of course, particularly since the New York state officials are examining landfill sites in their area to see what potential problems may exist and what can be done to solve them. We are continually being advised of the results and programs.

With respect to the Olin Chemical Corporation, I am informed the company engaged a hydrological consultant to prepare a report on any potential problems with this landfill operation. My staff discussed the report with the New York officials. In summary, the report states it is possible, and I repeat possible, that as much as 1.4 million gallons a year of run-off may be leaching into the Niagara River from this landfill site. The New York State Department of Environmental Conservation has given the company until April 9, 1980 to submit plans for dealing with this leachate problem.

To reassure the residents who use the Niagara River as a source of drinking water, my ministry, as I am sure the member knows, continually tests and samples this river water.

Mr. Kerrio: In regard to the statement the minister just made, the Olin report says the sediment contamination revealed in recent reports almost certainly confirms earlier fears that the chemicals were eventually ending up in the river.

Is the minister aware that while the fish that are caught commercially in Lake Erie are fit for human consumption, the fish in Lake Ontario are not? Isn't that an indication that the 200 dump sites located along the Niagara frontier should have a very high priority as it relates to our Ministry of the Environment and the officials in Niagara Falls, New York, so that we know exactly what's going on in a much closer relationship between the two ministries?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: How often do I need to report that the two departments are in continuous contact? I've said it a dozen times. I cannot say it more forcefully than that. They are in continuous contact with each other.

Mr. Kerrio: But what is happening?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The member can say they aren't, but I tell him they are. Having done so, I put on the record today that the DEC is giving the company until April 9 to bring in plans to solve that particular problem. They have to look after their jurisdiction, as we must on this side of the river, and I think the member would agree that we are doing so.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West, with a new question.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I think I'm out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sorry—the member for Huron-Middlesex.

Mr. Riddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased that you notice there is a distinction.

Mr. Speaker: Duly in rotation.

PETROLEUM ALLOCATION

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food: Is the minister aware that under the federal government's petroleum product allocation plan the agriculture and food processing classification category has been moved from its previous A designation, as critical, to a B classification along with such services as garbage collection and snow removal?

Does he not feel that food supplies would be of critical importance if there was a rationing program? Has the minister protested this change to the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch), who is supposed to be working very closely with the minister's federal friends in Ottawa as they develop their contingency plan, and has he made it quite clear that this change is unacceptable?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I was not aware of the proposal the honourable member has mentioned. We, as the government of Ontario, are ready to support agriculture in any way necessary to see that there's an adequate supply of energy for agriculture.

Mr. Riddell: That's a similar response to that which the farmers got this morning at the federation convention. However, let me try this one: Since a former Minister of Energy in this government—I forget which one it was because they have changed so rapidly—was so vocal in the government's opposition to Bill C-42, The Energy Supplies Emergency Act, when the previous federal government introduced it, and went as far as calling it "a camouflaged War Measures Act for which there is no present need," why is this government so silent on it now that its Tory friends in Ottawa have announced they are going to establish an energy supplies allocation board under the existing legislation?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The Minister of Energy is not here, and I am sure that he would be only too glad to respond. I, as the Minister of Agriculture and Food, was not aware of this particular part of the proposal.

EAST OF BAY PROJECT

Mr. R. F. Johnston: My question is for the Minister of Government Services and concerns the east-of-Bay superblock. If the minister is aware that in 1973 the Premier (Mr. Davis) promised to develop this site "compatible with the desires of the city of Toronto"; if he also knows the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs has used the words, "co-operation, consultation and co-ordination," as the watchwords of that ministry's involvement with municipalities; is the minister going to ignore the city of Toronto executives' request for his participation in a reasonable planning process in order to resolve differing objectives for the superblock, or is his ministry going to continue to be identified by the watchwords "clandestine, closed and covert"?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: My ministry looked at a plan the mayor of Toronto submitted to us, but it didn't meet the ministry's long-term use for this site. I think the member should also know we did have a meeting this week in which we discussed the possibility of the Y purchasing a piece of this property. At this time, we haven't decided whether or not we are ready to sell that property to them or whether the government wants to sell it.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Supplementary: The city has also agreed that the Y can have a portion of that property. Forgetting for a moment that the minister's unilateral intervention will undermine the city's attempts to secure a new bus terminal, is the minister not aware of the importance of this site in the city's policy of providing affordable housing in the downtown area? Does he not agree that detailed planning discussions must take place between the province and the city if those plans are going to develop? Why has the minister taken so long to discuss this matter with the mayor, and why has he told him that he will not discuss it further?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: We have had some discussions with the bus company for the part along Wellesley and fronting on Bay Street; but there are preliminary discussions and if we went ahead the bus company would have to obtain all clearances from the city of Toronto. If they were to go ahead, we would be looking to the bus company for office space of between 250,000 to 500,000 square feet. This is what would be necessary in the long term to meet some of our requirements for office space.

We haven't yet decided what we are going to do as far as the Y is concerned, but the matter is still under negotiation. I understand from the honourable member that the mayor is in favour of the Y plan, although that is not the impression I got from my discussions with him the other day. I gathered he wasn't interested in having the Y on that particular site, unless it were to be on Bay Street, which is not acceptable to us at this time.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Does this minister not understand that the planned process for the east-of-Bay area has gone on for several years; that many citizens have given freely of their time in order to try to develop, in concert with the government of Ontario, a plan for that area? Does he not understand that unilateral decisions made by this government against that background are shabby and disgraceful? Will he not go back to the municipality at least to discuss both the Y matter and the bus matter?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Some time ago the government assembled this piece of land for its use in the future. We are looking at two possible uses for it right now, keeping our needs in mind. I think I have a responsibility to look at the government's needs for this property as well. If the mayor wants some additional housing property, he can assemble a piece of land in the same way we did.

[3:00]

AUTO INDUSTRY

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Treasurer. Since our trade deficit this year in autos and auto parts is going to exceed $3 billion, does he not think it is in keeping with at least the spirit of the auto pact that the auto industry build some of the small-car facilities in this country in view of the down-sizing that is taking place in the market?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes.

Mr. Laughren: Is the Treasurer aware that—I suppose he wouldn't be until I tell him—yesterday General Motors' executives in Oshawa told us they had no intention whatsoever of building any further small-car facilities in this country? In view of that, will the Treasurer call together the industry leaders, the federal government and the union leadership to talk about this problem? Will he insist that this happen—that some new small-car facilities be built in this country so we can begin the process of protecting Ontario jobs?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member has often accused us of paying too much attention to the assembly of vehicles versus the construction of component parts. It seems to me the most recent announcements GM made—I am not defending them—were that they were investing a good deal of money in the Windsor area for components of the X cars. These are not their current subcompact but their compact model. I also understand that part of their plan was to expand at Oshawa and in St. Catharines. I thought there were engine plant divisions being made in those directions.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Haggerty: I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications. The minister is aware of the federal Minister of Energy's fuel allocation board relating to all areas of petroleum consumption and the possibility of petroleum rationing. What studies or planning has the provincial ministry completed to date regarding alternatives for public transportation for urban connections beyond the present GO system? Have any contingency plans been initiated to extend the GO system beyond the communities now serviced?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, this is somewhat of a confusing question. I said in this House the other day that we do not have any plans to extend the GO rail service beyond the present limits and the announced expansions that are under construction at the present time. In the long range, we're giving consideration to the possible electrification of the GO rail system as an alternative energy source for that segment of public transportation.

As for the bus industry, I think from an energy point of view buses are buses, regardless of who owns them, who runs them and who rides on them. The private-sector bus industry and the semi-private-sector bus industry is very capable of handling all needs as far as bus transportation is concerned.

Mr. Haggerty: Supplementary: Has this ministry appointed a petroleum conservation committee to study transportation resources operations to review and to improve public transportation in the light of the tightening up of the consumption of petroleum fuel and its supply?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would say no to that question. We do have a transportation energy management program. I don't know what the member calls his committee, but we haven't got one of those anyway. The Ministry of Energy and my ministry have a program called the transportation energy management program. It has been working for a couple of years now on all aspects of transportation energy and what provisions can be made for the preservation of same.

HOPPER CARS

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Would the minister report to the House what action he has been able to get from his federal counterparts to make hopper cars readily available for the shipping of corn from Ontario to the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's interesting that I just sent that information across to the member's colleague on his left.

Mr. Braugh: That's why we asked the question.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I realize that. Two weeks ago today I sent a telegram to the Honourable John Wise, Minister of Agriculture, Canada, which said, "We wish to bring to your attention the inadequate performance of Canadian National—"

Mr. MacDonald: What action did the minister get? We know he's done that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: What action did I get? I got a response from Mr. R. R. Lattimer, a vice-president of CN Rail. In it he admits to a shortage of hopper cars. He points out they need approximately 150 more hopper cars to supply the area. He points out in the telegram—I can read it if you wish, Mr. Speaker—that the grain dealers themselves did not ask for sufficient cars, so they were not allocated.

If I might go on further, I would point out to the House that in 1977 Ontario had 155 million bushels of corn. In 1978, we had 140 million bushels. In 1979, the expected crop is approximately 170 million bushels, up about 15 per cent from last year. There was sufficient storage for the corn crop we had in previous years. Due to the exceptional weather for the harvesting period, the corn was harvested in a three-week period instead of the usual six-week period.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: We all know—and the minister has just confirmed—we have corn running out our ears and no place to store it. What we want are hopper cars to get it to the market that wants it in the Atlantic provinces.

My supplementary question to the minister is since all federal governments, Liberal as well as Conservative, have tended to ignore eastern agriculture and to be preoccupied with western agriculture, will he make representation to his kissing cousins in Ottawa to have Hugh Horner made not just a grain co-ordinator but an agricultural products co-ordinator, so he will lift his sights from the prairies and take a look at the problems of transferring corn from Ontario to the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I could take up the time of the House. The honourable member has read both our telegrams. We have pointed out the urgency of it, both to CN Rail and to the Minister of Agriculture, Canada. I can assure members it is getting our full consideration.

DREE AGREEMENT

Mr. Villeneuve: I would like to ask the Treasurer if there is any hope of the DREE agreement being signed in the near future with the federal authorities. I have no fewer than 28 municipal drain projects. It's going to cost the taxpayers in my constituency alone over $980,000 extra in taxes if this agreement is not reached.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Where there's hope, there's promise and, as a politician, I make many. I would promise we will be signing this agreement at last, hopefully, within the next 10 days and, hopefully, in the town of Kemptville.

SALES TAX REBATES

Mr. Eakins: Would the minister tell the House if it is his ministry's policy not to refund retail sales tax paid on the cost of goods sold in a real property transaction, in the event that a buyer goes bankrupt before paying the seller, thereby preventing the seller from receiving either the money for the total sale or the sales tax on the cost of goods that had already been submitted to the ministry? Is it his ministry's policy not to give back the sales tax that was previously remitted by the merchant in the unfortunate circumstance of dealing with a company that experiences bankruptcy?

Hon. Mr. Maecck: Mr. Speaker, I believe we have some legislation under which some adjustments can be made, up to a period of 18 months, in a matter such as the member has indicated, but in general terms, that's quite true. If the tax is collected and submitted, the responsibility is on the person selling the product to collect the tax. If he chooses to give credit to someone who goes bankrupt he is out that money, as well as the money they owe him for the product.

In some instances, and I would have to refer to my legislation in detail before I could give the honourable member a definite answer, some adjustments can be made. I think it's for a period of 18 months.

PETITION TELEPHONE RATES

Mr. McEwen: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from 954 persons objecting to a rate increase proposed by the Community Telephone Company of Ontario Limited unless the following conditions are met:

1. Service be improved and billing methods be utilized by the above company which will be satisfactory to all customers;

2. Extended area service be made available for customers who have no other alternative but to use the Inverary exchange.

Out of 1,189 subscribers in this particular area, there are 954 objections. One hundred and thirty-nine cottagers could not be reached for their reaction and 43 permanent residents' telephones were either not in working order or had been disconnected. Those persons whose telephones were disconnected by the Community Telephone Company of Ontario were not given any reason for the action.

Only nine subscribers have indicated that they are satisfied with the above-mentioned telephone company.

There are also two resolutions with this petition. One is from the council of the township of Loughborough and the other is from the council of the township of Storrington, and they protest the proposed increase and the service given to subscribers by the Community Telephone Company of Ontario. In addition, there are eight letters from individuals complaining about the service and the proposed increase.

ORDERS OF THE DAY PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

HEALTH INSURANCE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Cassidy, on behalf of Mr. Lawlor, moved second reading of Bill 168, An Act to amend the Health Insurance Act, 1972.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has up to 20 minutes, and if he wishes to reserve any time, he can notify us.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will reserve any time left at the end of my speech.

I am proud this afternoon to propose the bill to restore one-price Medicare to Ontario and to bring to an end the extra billing of patients, which has become too common a feature of our medical scene in this province over the last year and a half. I am particularly proud because this bill, An Act to amend the Health Insurance Act, is so widely supported by the people of Ontario.

Over the course of the last month, over 275,000 people have signed the NDP's petition opposing the cutbacks in health care and opposing extra billing by doctors. Not only that, 75,000 people signed the similar medicare campaign petitions or ballots of the Ontario Federation of Labour. That makes more than 350,000 residents of Ontario who are colling with the New Democratic Party for an end to health cutbacks and an end to extra billing by doctors.

These people will finally give their verdict on the government's handling of the health system when we come to the next provincial election, but we need action now to rectify the most urgent problems by stopping the hardships that are created on people who are having to pay doctors their extra bills.

I want to say to whatever few members of the government have stayed in the chamber for this debate, it is not too late to join with us and get back to the original intention of medicare. I ask the government party not to block this bill, but to allow it to come to a vote and for it to become law in Ontario.

I want to remove any possible confusion which has been created by the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), who seems so puzzled by NDP policy. Bill 168 does not remove the doctors' right to opt out. We fully understand some doctors were never in and other doctors have stayed out because of the administrative hassles of dealing with OHIP under a Tory administration.

What we are saying is that opting out should no longer be of expense to the patients, because they already pay once for their health care through premiums and twice through taxes. They should not have to pay a third time by means of the doctors' extra billing. What the bill does, though, is to remove the doctor's option to charge his patients any more than OHIP will pay.

To give them credit, it is significant that 82 per cent of the doctors in Ontario remain within the plan and are content with the OHIP fee as a fair fee. We give them credit for that. What we deplore is the fact that other doctors have chosen to opt out and to charge extra fees which in some cases are quite extortionate.

We are simply saying the health insurance plan of this province should meet all of the health needs of the people it covers. We are simply saying the original intention of the federal medicare act, which was to have medical care on uniform terms and conditions, should continue to be a reality in this province. We are saying the goals of universality and of accessibility which came with medicare 10 years ago should not be abandoned by the government.

I want to point out some of the problems we are facing with opting out right now with which this bill attempts to deal. In the first nine years of medicare the opted-out fee schedule under the Ontario Medical Association was approximately 11 per cent higher than what OHIP paid. In my opinion 11 per cent is too much. Nevertheless, most of those doctors—the few doctors who remained opted out—were billing privately at a rate that was only marginally above what the patient got back from OHIP.

Effective in May of last year, however, the Ontario Medical Association acted unilaterally and raised the rates to the point where they now are an average of 43 per cent higher than the rates paid by OHIP. In other words, a surcharge which was an annoyance has become a surcharge which is a real deterrent for many and is a complete obstacle for some people in the province to getting health care from the doctor.

In the second place, the averages about opting out don't tell the full story. Eighteen per cent of the doctors in this province have now opted out, but if you look at specific areas you find the degree of opting out is much greater. Forty per cent of the doctors are out in the region of York, 25 per cent in the city of Toronto, almost all the family doctors in Stoney Creek and in some hospitals, like Women's College Hospital, all the gynaecologists have opted out. In a number of hospitals across the province all of the anaesthetists have opted out—they seem to be the worst in terms of refusing to tell their patients in advance that extra billing is going to take place. In my area in Ottawa 42 per cent of the allergists, 48 per cent of the obstetricians, 45 per cent of the ophthalmologists, 40 per cent of the radiologists and 40 per cent of the cardiovascular surgeons are out of the plan. The averages conceal the true story.

Third, even if you accept the figures that have been given to this House by the Minister of Health, they show there is an enormous amount of extra billing in the province and that extra billing ought to stop.

The minister told us the other day there had been 38 million claims paid by OHIP since April. He said that effectively opted-out doctors were billing above the rate about half the time; that is because some of them bill through the hospital at the OHIP rate. That means that three million times in the course of the last six months people have had to face that extra doctor's bill. What it doesn't tell us is in how many other cases did they have to go down on their knees to beg, did they have to fight with the collection agency, did they have to decide not to go to the doctor because they feared the doctor was going to extra-bill them.

If 18 per cent of this province's teachers came to school on Monday morning of next week and told the students that before class could begin the students were going to have to come up with a fee equal to 40 per cent over what the province and local municipalities pay for education, it is clear the province wouldn't put up with that kind of behaviour; they would deal with it. Yet this is precisely what is happening in terms of medicare and the province is not dealing with it.

Mr. Conway: Do you know much about separate high schools?

Mr. Cassidy: Separate high schools are an exception, that is right. But in the public high schools it is as though teachers were being allowed to opt out.

I ask the government, would they allow teachers to opt out and to charge extra? I am sure the answer is no. Why then should it be the case that doctors, who earn two and a half times as much as teachers, should have that privilege?

Ellen Roseman, who has been following this matter in the Globe and Mail, quoted one patient this morning. After her doctor extra-billed her she said, "I waited until the OHIP cheque came in and then sent out a cheque for the same amount. I haven't heard anything since, but I am now worried about my status at the hospital. Can I be black-listed and refused treatment by anaesthetists in the future?"

She might have asked, "Will I risk the collection agency coming after me in the future?" Those things are happening in the province right now because of bills generated by opted-out doctors.

Two of my colleagues have submitted bills which are to be read in conjunction with Bill 168, which essentially say it should not be allowed for collection agencies to intrude on the doctor-patient relationship. We should get collection agencies out of the consulting rooms and we should ensure the doctor-patient relationship is based on caring and not just on cash.

I see the member for Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling) is very disturbed; he looks disturbed over this matter. I ask him to join with our party in supporting this bill and to defend the residents of his riding who also signed this petition in large numbers.

The bill will end the iniquitous practice of extra-billing patients who didn't know before they were billed that the doctor was opted out of OHIP. We have brought those cases before the minister again and again. They have gone to collection agencies, they have gone to the college of physicians and surgeons. They have gone to the Ontario Medical Association and they have come to individual members of this party. The minister has failed to respond.

He came up with a gentleman's agreement in the spring. That gentleman's agreement has been proven to be not worth the paper it was written on or the words with which it was uttered. We have kept proving that. Even after the minister told the OMA for the second time they had to shape up, they have failed to do so.

I think it's offensive that the president of the Ontario Medical Association, Dr. Douglas Caldwell—I am not sure if he is here today—is not only himself an opted-out anaesthetist, but he publicly admits that as a matter of practice he does not adhere to the gentleman's agreement which has been put forward by the government, under which he is meant to tell the patient in advance if he is going to extra-bill. That particular doctor doesn't tell the patient in advance and then quite cheerfully extra-bills at the end. His most recent letter to the profession said if they didn't tell the patient in advance, they should take the opportunity of telling the patient that they were going to extra-bill before they submitted the bill.

That is some gentleman's agreement. We have had enough of trying to get the minister to recognize the failure of his agreement and to get the minister to recognize the need to act toughly to make his agreement stick.

The bill before us today amends the Health Disciplines Act in such a way that it will be professional misconduct to bill over OHIP without prior notification. There too, the voluntary route which was tried in the spring hasn't worked. We believe doctors will adhere to the law if the law is firmly put down. We deprecate the fact the government hasn't been prepared to change the law. That's why we are bringing forward this bill which will change the Health Insurance Act and will define it as professional misconduct for a doctor to consistently charge over the OHIP rate or to fail to reimburse a patient for an overpayment after it's been discovered.

The principle of this bill is simply that OHIP should once again take full financial care of patients as it has, throughout the history of our health insurance plan, taken such generous care of our doctors. I want to comment on that for a moment because I am sure one or two members of the government are going to talk about that as well.

There isn't anyone in this House who is going to maintain doctors should be paid the same rate as apprentices who are working in a factory for their first year. In fact, there is general support in this province, as in other provinces, for the principle that after eight or 10 years of training and because of the demanding and responsible work they do, doctors should be relatively well rewarded. However, when their average incomes are three and a half times as high as the average industrial wage in Ontario; when doctors in this province earn, after expenses, in net terms, $55,000 a year and when specialists earn $62,000 net a year, then one has to ask whether some of the demands they have been making in terms of opting out and their very hefty fee increases are justified.

The OMA has preferred to focus on what has happened to medical incomes over the last few years. They don't talk about the big increases in incomes that doctors enjoyed with the introduction of OMSIP, with the private medical schemes that came in during the 1960s and with the introduction of the present medical scheme in 1969. Those had the effect of paying doctors for services to patients whom they used to treat for free. They had the effect of eliminating the need for doctors to wipe out or to forget bad debts.

There was an enormous increase in incomes at that time, which they are welcome to, but they should not now turn around and say, "Well, we want it again and again and again," nor should the public of this province be made to pay because of an argument that general practitioners are underpaid. When one looks at the maldistribution of medical incomes that prevails right now, clearly there's a problem of GPs getting too little in relation to specialists. The answer there is to redistribute incomes within the medical fraternity, rather than giving specialists as well as GPs a big extra bonus.

We feel, as well, the surge in medical incomes has reflected the bias in favour of costly medical treatment that comes with a fee-for-service system of payment and the failure of the government over 10 years to bring in community clinics, community medicine and medicine which is outside of the hospitals and to get away from the high-technology, high-cost type of medicine we have tended to practise in Ontario.

I should tell the government if it looks at the doctors who are opting out, too often the people who are opting out—who can afford to opt out—are the specialists and not the GPs, the best-paid doctors and not the worst-paid doctors, the doctors in Toronto and places like that which are already well serviced by medical services and not the doctors up in Timiskaming, North Bay and northwestern Ontario.

If there was ever a case to pay doctors extra for dedication, for time on the job and for constant and relenting devotion to duty, it surely would be with the doctors who serve tens of thousands of square miles in serving the people of northern Ontario. Yet, in the main, they are the opted-in doctors, because the economic conditions of the people they look after cannot permit them to opt out. So the doctors who may deserve a bonus don't get it, while the doctors living down in the major cities like Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton, London and Peterborough, are the ones who have opted out.

I would like to spend some more time spelling out in detail what this party feels about the current stress on fee-for-service medicine. We think there should be alternatives. We think doctors should have the option of working on a capitation fee. We think clinics should be made available. We think all of these changes ought to have been made many years ago. We have talked about them many times as well because we want to see a move to less institutional care and more preventive care to get health care into the community.

What I do want to note, however, is that there is now increasing support for the kind of alternatives we have spelled out in our health green paper some time ago, which have been implemented by the steelworkers in the group clinic up in Sault Ste. Marie which has been operating since 1963. The medical reform group, a ginger group of doctors, is saying "Stop the extra billing. Get community medicine. Let's do preventive work." A third of the doctors in the province at the very least are clearly at odds with what their leadership is saying, when the leadership resents and rejects any change in the medical system. As far as the public is concerned, there is enormous support for major changes in terms of the medical system.

I want to turn, finally, to the negotiating process between the medical association and the government with respect to the payment of physicians. I recall the government's announcing this process in the spring and saying the aim was to come up with a fair negotiated settlement. We understand that that means. We are familiar with labour negotiations. We are familiar with what a fair settlement can be. If that's what they come up with, then more power to them. We think, however, if there is a fair income agreed to in the negotiations, it doesn't need to be supplemented.

I ask the government members to defend how one doctor should be able to opt out and get an income which by definition is too high and, therefore, unfair while eight other doctors decide to stay in the plan and to take the OHIP rate. If the rate is fair, it's fair and that's the end of it. In the hope and expectation a fair fee schedule will be agreed to between the OMA and the ministry, I am today moving this legislation. It says very plainly that doctors may not charge their patients above the negotiated fair rate in Ontario.

I have to say that the medical profession operates as a closed shop, if anything, far more closed than anything that has been demanded from such retrograde employers as Radio Shack or Blue Cross or Butcher Engineering. There are rights of discipline and rights of control in the medical profession that make Ontario's trade union movement look like a bunch of softies.

We resent the fact that the doctors have unilaterally taken for themselves an 11.9 per cent increase in the OMA fee schedule. They have expressed themselves as dissatisfied with 11.25 per cent coming from OHIP—which is on the table right now—while at the same time they have sat silently by while health-care workers earning as little as $180 or $200 a week have been forced to settle, under our antiquated laws, for increases of between four and six per cent.

If the increase that comes through is to be fair to doctors, it must also be fair to the people of Ontario. The fair increase given to doctors must define the limit. We believe that in the negotiations now going on, the government of Ontario should insist, as a condition of the new OHIP fee schedule for 1980, that the doctors bring a complete end to extra billing. That should be an unequivocal condition of our negotiations with the doctors of the province.

It is to that end and to return Ontario to one-price medicare that I am moving this piece of legislation. I am moving second reading of Bill 168.

Mr. Sterling: You might say I was opted into this particular speaking engagement. The honourable member who had anticipated speaking on this particular bill had to chair the standing general government committee this afternoon so, as I said, I was opted in. I do so with a lot of conviction.

Mr. Cassidy: Are you in favour of the bill? Yes or no?

Mr. Sterling: That is pretty easy to answer. There isn't very much to support in the bill, as far as I view it. I really am quite amazed.

I will have to look a little closer at the petition that was presented here by the NDP because I wasn't aware of all the problems that exist in my riding in relation to health care. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, there are probably few politicians in this Legislature who are in closer contact with the people than I am.

I know that at this time we are arguing with the Ottawa-Carleton Health Council to obtain a nursing home in one of the areas in the township of Osgoode, but that has no relation to this particular piece of legislation.

Ten years ago, this province enacted medical insurance legislation that was far-reaching. It had five basic principles: universality, comprehensiveness, accessibility, portability and public administration of the plan.

The framing of this bill is an indication of a fundamental difference of opinion about the medical profession in Ontario. I think they have done, and are doing, a tremendous service for us today. It is obvious that this opinion is not shared by the third party.

In the last 10 years this province has undergone a great deal of change. Certain factors have remained constant, like our need for health insurance. Others have expanded, such as our population, obviously. Some have diminished, such as our spending power. All of us must reorder our priorities and programs to cope with the demands placed on our health-care system.

This government is committed to maintaining our health insurance system, in spite of what I deem to be an hysterical smear campaign launched in this province by the New Democratic Party. Okay, the system is not perfect, but we try harder every day. I think we end up with a great deal of success.

Let me outline the system because I really do fear that the members of the NDP have come to their conclusions without really understanding them.

First, any person in this province can visit a doctor—any doctor—of his or her choice. Second, doctors may bill their patients within the health insurance plan or they may bill their patients directly.

The first paragraph of this bill says, "The bills submitted to the patients in respect of insured services cannot exceed the amounts that have been determined by the plan."

This government does not believe in this type of control. Basically, we don't believe our doctors should be civil servants. In the past, the government and the medical profession have been able to reach reasonable accord. Doctors have demonstrated high standards of professional service, which this government fully recognizes.

Since April 1 of this year no fewer than 38 million claims have been processed by OHIP and only nine per cent of these have been done on an opted-out basis. We heard the leader of the third party indicate that 18 or 19 per cent of the doctors had opted out, so it's interesting to note that only nine per cent of the billings are from opted-out doctors. In fact, there have been fewer than 100 complaints since the government and the OMA signed their agreement in the spring.

Mr. Conway: It is one thing to be McMurtry's lackey, Norm, but now to be Timbrell's as well.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I'm having a little difficulty speaking above the interjections here.

If insurmountable problems did arise this government would intervene to protect the interests of the people. But it is our opinion that this situation has not arisen, nor is it likely to because we and the OMA have a sensible and rational attitude towards health care. If this is such a desperate situation, why do we have today in Ontario 19 per cent more doctors than we had six years ago? Our population over that period of time has only increased by 7.5 per cent.

From time to time we hear a member bring forward a problem revolving around a single incident and such problems have been brought to this Legislature. I might add that there have been cases brought to this Legislature where names have been given but where patients haven't given permission to use their names, which I think is a questionable thing to do.

Do the opposition parties, or does the NDP really want to improve the system and solve individual problems? That party deliberately ignores letters sent to them by the OMA requesting that it be notified of such problems when they exist in their constituencies. The NDP ignores that service.

This bill would turn the government into the judge, jury and executioner of the medical profession. The Health Disciplines Act states—and I will read this portion: "It is the duty of the minister to ensure that the activities of health disciplines are effectively regulated and co-ordinated in the public interest, to have appropriate standards of practice developed and ensure that these are maintained, and ensure that the rights of individuals to the services provided by health disciplines of their choice are maintained."

No one, Mr. Speaker, can fulfill this mandate without the co-operation of all concerned groups. This bill would destroy any further co-operation as it has existed between the medical profession and the government of Ontario.

I am beginning to think, really, that the third party is truly upset that our health system is working as well as it is—and it is working very well. In fact, we continually have delegations from foreign jurisdictions come to our province to visit with our Minister of Health to find out about our system, because they think it is an example that should be followed in their jurisdictions.

Mr. Duksza: Has it ever entered your mind to see why it doesn't work?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sterling: That certainly isn't the indication we get from most people.

Mr. Conway: Has the shah asked to come here yet?

Mr. Sterling: The shah has not been invited.

The ideas contained in this bill constitute a serious, misleading threat to the health-care system of our province.

The Ministry of Health is responding to long-term planning challenges. The demands on our health system are becoming greater. Perhaps the members have forgotten the period prior to 1969 when a government-sponsored health insurance plan did not exist. There was a need for a universal insurance system in this province and we believe that need has been met.

The bottom line of this debate is that the province is getting a damned good health-care system for its money. I only wish that the NDP would quit using the medical profession as a whipping person.

Mr. Stong: I rise to speak on this bill, not as a major speaker for my party because I will be followed by the critic, but as the first speaker with respect to some of the principles in the bill.

Bill 168 represents a hodge-podge of contradictory, inconsistent and confused principles. It undermines the principle of the Health Disciplines Act and it denies a basic freedom of choice to a very legitimate professional sector of our communities in Ontario. This bill represents the illegal governmental interference with an overregulation of a very necessary discipline. It represents only the beginning, in my respectful submission, of the NDP's intentional restriction of the freedom of all professional disciplines.

This member supports the principle that was enunciated by resolution in the Ruston plan, introduced by my colleague from Essex North (Mr. Ruston) and debated in this House in June. I might say that the bill before us goes far beyond what is legitimate and proper draftsmanship. It demonstrates either an ignorance of or an utter disregard for the acceptable and recognized principles of draftsmanship in legislation. It denies or it ignores the clarity of statement of principle; it denies or ignores the simplicity of statement of that principle; and it ignores the observation of the inherent rights and freedoms and protection of those same inalienable attributes.

Bill 168 goes far beyond meeting and dealing with those problems mentioned by the member for Ottawa Centre. It is therefore unnecessary legislation and inasmuch as it is unnecessary, it is bad legislation and it must not be supported. The bill is tantamount to killing a mosquito with a sledgehammer.

I might refer to a letter I received from the vice-president of the Ontario Medical Association and the branch in the regional municipality of York. He says, "This letter is simply written to reiterate my feeling as a private physician that I will be given the chance to continue with freedom in the practice of medicine in Ontario and not be a legislative civil servant. As a private citizen in Ontario I also reiterate the necessity for the Ontario Legislature to introduce more freedom in the health-care system and allow me, as a private citizen, to get 100 per cent physician-care coverage on an insurance basis, or at least allow insurance companies to give 100 per cent coverage.

"As you are well aware, at the moment only OHIP is allowed to cover physician services and legislation allows only 70 per cent coverage of that service. This, I feel, is a breach of civil liberties and should be corrected in the near future."

If we can refer to the bill itself for a few moments, I will demonstrate the confusion and the contradictions and inconsistencies of principles enunciated in that bill. If we look for a moment at section 1 of the bill, we notice it reads, "Where a physician or practitioner submits an account to a patient with respect of insured services, the amount charged by the physician or practitioner shall not exceed the amount payable by the plan for the insured services." The words are quite explicit, "shall not."

If we go down to subsection 4 of that section we come across the word "consistently," which indicates and recognizes the fact that the words "shall not" are not mandatory—are not in fact meaningful. In fact, there is a very inconsistent and confused principle between those two sections.

The member for Ottawa Centre also says this bill guarantees a physician's right and freedom of choice to opt out of the OHIP plan. He says the bill allows and does not interfere with that freedom of choice.

But when you read the bill, Mr. Speaker, you find that a physician who opts out and chooses to follow his choice can charge only a predetermined amount for his services—a predetermined amount which is consistent only with the plan from which he intends to extricate himself. Some freedom of choice; some hollow protection of principle.

If we look at the bill and deal particularly with the word "consistently," first, the bill does contradict the Health Disciplines Act. In that sense it is unnecessary; again, in that sense, it is inconsistent legislation. It sets up a professional misconduct for a consistent action.

What is a consistent action? Where is "consistent" defined in this bill, pray tell? When does it become consistent? The ninth time? The 10th time? The first time? Is it inconsistent if a person charges the same patient over and above the OHIP plan? Is it consistent if he charges two different patients different prices?

The bill is vague; the bill is inconsistent. The bill does not observe the recognized principles of draftsmanship. The draftsmanship is vague; it is indefinite and it is inherently discriminatory. The principles are contradictory. They are confused. For those reasons, we cannot support this bill in principle.

Mr. Duszta: The New Democratic Party leader, in introducing Bill 168, documents the importance our party attaches to health care. The intrinsic importance of that bill is that the Ontario government has allowed physicians to opt out of OHIP in increasing numbers until the foundations of our publicly-funded health-care system are threatened. The system is being destroyed by the collusive actions of the government, whose increasing right wing ideology, uncaringness, incompetence, negligence in the discharge of its public trust, and irresponsibility on behalf of working people, combined with mean-spirited, irresponsible and greedily organized medicine is leading to the destruction of the system.

There are three aspects to our party's historic concern for health care. First, we believe that health care is a right, not a privilege. All members of society have a stake in the health system. Consequently, quality health care must be equally accessible to all and all people must participate in making the decisions which directly affect their own health. In the same way, doctors must be put under some kind of control by the community at large and not left to their own devices.

Second, health and social services are part of the social wage, on the same lines as the money wage. Consequently, the fight for universal health care is a significant part of our party's struggle to equalize the distribution of wealth and income in our society. It is very important for all doctors to remain in OHIP, since for the one in five patients who goes to a physician and has to pay extra, it seriously affects his income, especially if he is on the lower wage scale.

The health-care system is also a business and a major component of our economic system. Ontario citizens must have a say in running this business and not allow private entrepreneurs, like physicians, to do what they feel like doing.

The implications of this are quite clear. The health-care system must be universal and accessible wherever one lives, of quality compatible with what is best and modern without financial barriers and the profits, if there are any, must belong to all Ontarians and not to the few physicians or American corporations that provide us with health and hospital supplies.

When we look at the whole health-care system, we have to look seriously at the role of the physician, since the bill really deals with that more than anything else. There are two aspects of the role of the physician. First, I would like to deal with the way in which the physician plays a major role in the general delivery of health care and, second, at the way the physician is paid.

Under the present system, the physician is paramount in our health system and plays a very significant role. He will always play a significant role because he has been trained to do a particular role. In our party's updating in a new and more modern proposal for restructuring Ontario's health-care system, the physician will play a role only in co-operation with other health professionals. It is really idiotic of us to say the physician is the only person who delivers health care in our system. There are a number of other health professionals who share co-equally in that responsibility in terms of health care. Because of a distortion in the system of paying physicians, we concentrate only on physicians. The role of the physician at the moment is that of someone who is in charge of the system, whereas we must move to a physician's being a part of the system and a part of the team.

The second part that is important is that a physician gets paid quite differently from all other health professionals. A physician gets paid a fee for service, which is a system which has its own problems. It's a traditional method of payment to the physician. Unfortunately, the behaviour of the provider, which in this case are the physicians because they are almost the only ones who get paid on a fee-for-service basis, is biased towards overservicing.

Before universal medical insurance, the penury of a large portion of people acted to limit demands on utilization of medical services. Since then, however, the number of services has gone up sixfold in the last 15 years. It is the fee-for-service system which rewards overservicing done by physicians.

It isn't the patient who demands more and more service. Quite often, the patient does not know what he needs, so he consults a physician. It is the physician in his position as a provider who, in effect, decides what kind of service the patient will get or not get. It is the physician who, because he is rewarded by fee for the service provided, tends to repeat service after service and produce the overservicing. Most of the time people will say it is the patient who does it, but actually it is the physician who does it. It is related directly to the fee-for-service system.

There are other ways of dealing with it. One of the major disadvantages of fee for service is it is probably the main cause of the present excessive number of unnecessary surgical operations performed in our province. Someone once said Canada doesn't lead the world in many things but it most definitely leads the world in unnecessary surgery. It may be related to the behaviour of our physicians in the sense of overservicing and also to the way they get paid.

There are other ways of paying a physician which are much better. If we move a physician towards being a member of the team, it is illogical for a physician to be paid so differently and so much more than other health professionals. I base this argument very simply. When one looks at a situation where a number of people are involved in providing health care to an individual, it isn't the physician alone who does most of the work.

[4:00]

In hospitals, very clearly, there are nurses, social workers, lab technicians, X-ray technicians and a whole support staff that provide health care. Only physicians make that claim and only the physician gets paid as excessively as he does at the moment. When I say "excessively," note the physician gets paid four times as much as the composite industrial wage and his income has increased progressively since the introduction of the original insurance scheme. It may be a little less now than it was a couple of years ago, but it is still significantly higher.

It is that increase which is so distorting in terms of the relationship and the direct provision of health care by the various health professionals. We must move out. One way of doing it without moving towards the general destruction of the system is paying physicians either a capitation fee or a salary or a combination of ways. This party is committed to a multiple approach paying physicians. At the moment, we're saying physicians should only charge what OHIP will pay. If physicians are allowed to be paid more than OHIP would provide, if they are permitted to charge whatever they want, they will destroy the universality of the system as well as any attempt to control the course or the co-operativeness of the health professions.

The physician must, in effect, be stopped at the level OHIP now pays, which is quite generous.

We should look at the role of the physician and consider what was said in the letter read by the member for York Centre about freedom of action as a physician. I am a great believer that physicians indeed must have some freedom in terms of clinical decisions, but even then, the other people who participate in the provision of health care, including the patient, must have a direct input into what kind of health care they get. On the whole, a technician—and that's what a physician is—can be trusted, at least within the limits of delivering health care, to make a good clinical judgement.

I see no reason why a physician should, at the same time, be able to make a decision about how he should be paid and how much he should be paid. That amount would seem to be as much as the market can bear. That is what the parties mean. The physicians who cry all the time about the free-enterprise system and their freedom to perform, really are crying to be free in the sense of monopoly of the delivery of health care and how they get paid.

Not since Louis XIV controlled the salt trade so completely in France has there been such a group as the physicians of Ontario, who totally control the delivery of health care.

I would like to conclude by saying—

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Duksza: Let me just conclude with one sentence. I am a physician, a member of organized medicine, and I wish my co-workers would wake up to the fact that they are being greedy more than anything else. They should realize their responsibility to deliver good clinical health care to Ontario residents.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I am saddened to hear the comments by the last speaker, the member for Parkdale. First, he feels so many of his colleagues are greedy. I don't think that's a word I would want to see applied to doctors and those who deliver the wide range of health care in this province.

I am also shocked and upset to hear he took issue with the letter from a doctor read by the member for York Centre, when he spoke about something as basic as freedom and as we in this debate discuss it relative to the bill before us.

Above and beyond that, I am deeply distressed about the increasing attacks against our health-care system in the last two or three months and the charges and the accusations hurled across this House. They represent a threat to those beyond the daily politics in which all of us participate and observe in public life.

The people of Ontario are being given the impression—and, I submit, an unfounded impression—that our health-care system somehow needs to be saved. From what? It needs to be saved from the fabrication of the opposition, particularly the third party. We in Ontario are in the enviable position of having many excellent, natural human resources to draw on. There have been significant advances made in medical technology and public health and we here in Ontario have been a leader with the system we operate and under which we have those services delivered to us.

We have become entranced, I suppose, with the sophistication and growth of research and diagnosis. Things have come a long way since the days when needles were used over and over again. Doctors have achieved a high regard in the community and we are lulled into thinking our limitations as physical beings might be solved by a shot, a pill, an x-ray or some new wonder drug.

I don't wish to undermine the importance of these developments, but they have come at a cost. It is a cost that most of us realize we have to pay. Compared to our neighbours to the south and people in other jurisdictions in the developed world, we have it pretty good here in Ontario.

What do we really expect from our health-care system? What happens when it doesn't live up to our expectations? What price are we willing to pay? At the same time, can we ignore our responsibility to look after ourselves? These are only some of the questions that are being asked by health-care professionals and the people of Ontario.

How do we go about meeting these high expectations in a way that is fair and equitable to the majority? We assist our senior citizens, the handicapped, the medical students, the hospitals and others. This province devotes 28 per cent of its budget to health-care financing and planning.

It is a system in transition, and the changes we are making now will serve us well in the future. There will always be cases in dispute between a doctor or a patient and the structure designed to facilitate health payments.

However, to use isolated cases—and we heard that again from the leader of the third party when he referred, in his opening comments in the debate, to a particular case outlined by someone in the Globe and Mail. I suggest there is a danger in using isolated cases as proof that the system in total is faulty when millions upon millions of doctor and patient claims are successful. It is deceptive and irresponsible.

Mr. Cassidy: Three million were double-billed by doctors in the last six months.

Mr. Jones: I heard the numbers the member referred to. He took a percentage of the total. No one will deny they are large. But when he takes a system that size and tries to point out individual cases, I say it is deceptive and I say it is irresponsible.

The members of this House are well aware of the government health-care policies. They pretend not to be, but I know they are. They are also aware that the hospital administrators, the doctors and the nurses are doing their level best to find new ways to adapt to the changing demands of patients. In the midst of this fine work, members of the opposition—particularly the third party with its present little vote-getting cause—are doing their damndest to incite a conflict where in fact it doesn't exist.

Ontario is fortunate in having skilled doctors. Like all individuals in this society, they have the freedom to practise their profession when and where they wish. The member referred to the fact that 82 per cent of the doctors in this province are within the OHIP system for their services and many of the remaining doctors bill OHIP through billing groups. The doctors and this government are concerned that everyone gets a fair deal. Let me repeat that. Both the doctors and the government want everyone to get a fair deal.

There sits our Minister of Health who works untiringly towards that design and the member wants to make it a political issue and ignore the fact that millions and millions of people are served every day so very well by the system we have in this province under this government.

What is beyond me is the idea that a group of professionals, any group, should always be required to bill a specific amount for its services. There is no question we get what we pay for in life.

I listened to the leader of the third party's debate with Mr. Gilbert on a phone-in show; they had a debate at great length and the member acquitted himself well, I say to him, except again some very glaring holes became clear and that's the issue of this bill we have in front of us today. The bill asks us to make it law that "the amount charged by the physician or practitioner shall not exceed the amount payable by the plan for the insured services." By implication, the opposition is tarring and feathering every single health-care professional in this province and this government is not prepared to work with any group under those circumstances and conditions.

Efforts are being made on all sides to negotiate fee schedules as equitable as possible. A panel consisting of three members of this government and three representatives from the Ontario Medical Association is currently at work in assisting both parties to reach a fair fee schedule. That is an example of desire by this government for co-operation, not conflict.

The government is taking steps to control health-care costs and we have all been involved in those debates. The drafter of this resolution was very prominent and active in those debates that took place in the social development committee of this Legislature. We all addressed them.

The leader of the third party alluded to almost an implication that this government was going back to institutionalization and it wasn't going in the direction to meet the increasing needs of clinics and grass roots health care and that is not so. Members from all three parties very clearly endorsed that direction and we have seen evidence of it by this government and this minister as they are moving very directly there.

In the Lakeshore debate, we saw all of that focus by members from all parties and we have seen the evidence in the funding and the mechanism taking place.

Mr. Cassidy: Who closed the St. Catharines health clinic?

Mr. Jones: Again, there we go identifying certain examples for the specific purpose of the debate and overlooking the overall system.

We have the leader of the third party come out with these inflammatory ideas, at the same time ignoring the enormous costs involved and I found he had a lot of trouble with that in his debate on the recent radio program. They make it sound like a cut-and-dried issue, as though they have our best interests at heart.

Strong-arm tactics are what he is proposing. They are not the answer. Everyone in this province has an opportunity to see the doctor of his or her choice. In this province no one will be denied medical treatment that he or she requires.

Our health-care system is already beginning to adapt to changes and challenges of an aging society, for example. No doubt the number of OHIP claims will rise and so will the costs, since the elderly do tend to require more costly, long-term care. Doctors will also have to adapt to these changes. Our ability to meet these challenges rests on flexibility not rigidity. We have an obligation and a desire to encourage and develop the medical resources at our disposal. If we keep burying this initiative in a mass of legislation—yet one more piece being proposed today by the NDP—and regulation, then we are doing no one a service.

This is not, and will not become, a do-or-die situation that forces our medical community in this province to impossible decisions.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Jones: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Coming from a riding such as Mississauga North, where we recently had our medical system all come together to answer a very large need, I saw it exemplified in an example where I resist the suggestions and attacks that keep continuing to come from that third party for political reasons, so I oppose this bill and urge all other members of the Legislature to do so too.

Mr. Conway: It is with interest that I rise to participate in this particular private members' hour. I have noted with some degree of interest the concern, the awareness and the agitation, justifiably so, on the part of organized medicine in this province over the last few weeks with respect to Bill 168. Someone, somewhere, has very consciously generated this interest, in my view.

Quite often in the past few days I have been approached by my colleagues in the official opposition saying that while they were home on the weekend they had been approached by the leadership of the local chapter of the Ontario Medical Association—a leadership which was vitally interested in and concerned about the disposition of private members with respect to Bill 168. It became clear to me in this matter, as it has become clear to me in other matters recently, that this interest was carefully and knowingly generated. As far as I am concerned, that generation was, and can be, traced to the Hepburn Block and to the minister himself. The tentacles of that most political of ministries stretch out across this province in 1979 in an enthusiastic, partisan, vigilant fashion. I only hope that in the final analysis those tentacles don't recoil to choke and strangle any prime ministerial ambitions that may be resident in the Hepburn Block these days.

What was most concerning to me was the expression put by many doctors to myself and others that the government and the minister felt it important that it be understood that they could not give any assurance that this particular bill was going to be vetoed as is their regular wont in this particular part of private members' hour. Well, we shall see what we shall see.

I shall listen with great interest to the actions of honourable members opposite when the time comes for the roll call on the first of the questions which you, Mr. Speaker, will put. I remember well the disposition of the government on June 21, 1979, when the resolution of my good and honourable friend from Essex North (Mr. Ruston)—dealing with another aspect, another approach, to this particular matter of the remuneration of doctors in this province—was being dealt with in private members' hour. I shall look with great interest—and listen with greater interest—to the honourable members opposite at a quarter to six this evening.

What of the Lawlor bill? What can we say of Bill 168? Well, there's no question, Mr. Speaker, that politically it is an overt declaration of war on the medical profession in this province.

Mr. McClellan: Who wrote your speech? You didn't write it.

Mr. Conway: I am serious. Just listen.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway: There is no question, Mr. Speaker, that, politically, Bill 168 is an overt declaration of war on the medical profession and I think we have to reflect briefly upon one very important experience where the principle of Bill 168 was entered into by a government.

I call to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and to honourable members gathered here this afternoon, that—in terms of the essence of Bill 168 and I think the facts support it—this particular principle was the basis of the first initiative of the Douglas government in the Saskatchewan jurisdiction in the early 1960s which led to the very famous medical strike we all know about.

Clearly, the principle of Bill 168 is that if it is passed opting out for purposes of extra billing will become illegal.

I, like my colleague from York Centre, found it interesting that the bill goes on to suggest—and I think, notwithstanding what was said by the member for Parkdale, whose ideological consistency on these matters was maintained today—that this particular bill in that particular section is very serious. Not only does it suggest in the first section that opting out for purposes of extra billing become illegal, but then, in a confusing, redundant fashion—and if we wished to be picayune about it we could probably have the bill ruled out of order on that account—it suggests that opting out for purposes of extra billing, if consistently entered into, is professional misconduct.

That certainly is a contradiction of what is stated early in the bill, but it's more than that, Mr. Speaker. It is a sad comment on the good and honourable member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) who, as a very distinguished member of the bar, knows just what he is talking about. I have come to have a great deal of respect for the member for Lakeshore. I have listened to him speak eloquently in many committees about the rights of citizens in this province. For any member of the bar, much less any member of this House, to suggest that something is illegal or that it is misconduct if it is consistently entered into is, I think, an extremely important point to make.

If the honourable members opposite wish to draft a bill of some consistency and some clarity on this particular issue, then certainly I might be prepared to listen to a second debate.

What then is my position on this particular bill? For the reasons I will give, it is not acceptable to me. I feel, and I feel very strongly as one member of this assembly, that, as gatekeepers of the health-care system, doctors are an exceptionally important part of our health-care system. At present, as traditionally, they are an extremely powerful political force. I agree entirely with that great right-winger from the United States, Milton Friedman, who said many years ago that organized medicine was "the most powerful union in the United States," or words to that effect.

I think, generally speaking, doctors are well paid. Many doctors are very well paid. I have said, and I repeat here now, we must make it clear that medical degrees are not automatic tickets to six-digit incomes. What then is the view with respect to present negotiations?

I reject the wage control being offered selectively by the members of the New Democratic Party. I reject it out of hand. I certainly think it important for government to negotiate a fair and reasonable fee. On the basis of my many months of experience in these matters of health care, I suggest—and I only suggest—to my colleagues on the left they might look at the debates of June 21, 1979 to see what the absent member for Oshawa (Mr. Breagh) had to say about the principle of opting out. I suggest they read the record of that debate and others to find out just how consistent their position has been with respect to that principle.

I accept now, as I have always, that doctors should have a choice as should consumers in this province. Doctors should have the right to opt out if they so choose. Consumers and patients in this province have a like and corresponding right; that is, the right to medical services at the government rate.

Quite clearly my suggestion in this connection is let the government negotiate firmly but fairly with the medical profession. Let the government for the first time stand up and argue that it is not going to have the health-care system deteriorate in this particular regard. If some doctors want to opt out and we cannot make any accommodation with them, then I must say there are alternatives to the particular bill in question. I make no apologies, speaking in terms of the collective bargaining process, for the fact that the resolution of the member for Essex North is more attractive to me than the kind of Draconian warfare proposed in Bill 168.

Let there be no mistake about it—and I say this without qualification—in my view the best possible option is, as the experts would say, to buy the system closed. That is the most positive and the most sensible way in which to approach the problem—to have government put sufficient funds into the system to bring enough doctors back into the system so we can proceed without the kind of opting-out threats that presently exist. That certainly, for me, is the optimal situation and the optimal resolution.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Conway: I want to make it very clear that I feel very strongly such an attack as is being proposed here in Bill 168 would do this province and the consuming public substantially more harm than good. If government needs management tools that need to be applied to these kinds of discussions, then I suggest June 21 as a more attractive alternative.

Mr. Makarchuk: I rise to support the bill and to make a few comments about what is really a great problem in our province at this time. When the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones) says that we are ignoring the facts, I'd like to point out to him that he obviously hasn't been talking or listening to the people either in his own riding or anywhere in the province.

One of the things the patients say they are concerned about when they go to visit a doctor now is whether there will be extra billing or double billing, or whether their visit is going to be taken care of out of OHIP. It is an area of great concern to the patients at this time and it is an area that is resulting, in many cases, in patients being reluctant to go to doctors because they fear they will have to pay extra.

The net result of that of course is that they put off a situation that perhaps could be prevented, or a situation eventually becomes serious. Then the costs go up; the whole cost of services to the province, taxpayer and everybody else increases because of those situations.

I'd like to point out that it says there's no conflict in the health-care system. I suggest, again, that what the minister should do is talk to the health-care workers. Obviously, he hasn't talked to any of them. Talk to the doctors, nurses, physiotherapists, occupational therapists and lab technicians; find out if there isn't really any conflict and isn't any care in there.

There is an element of great concern among all those people about the way the health-care system is going. In many cases, they work and operate in an element of uncertainty and fear. They can see programs being shut down and they will appear on the government's doorsteps as a lobby or as a group wondering why the government is doing this. As an example, why are they shutting down an occupational therapy department in one area? Why are they dismissing certain people?

You hear of specific situations, Mr. Speaker. The other day the paper reported corridors crowded with patients, et cetera—places where people are not receiving proper treatment. Further than that, the big tragedy in this situation is that almost every day in Ontario there are situations where people are not getting proper treatment. In some cases it results in death. I repeat, in some cases it results in death.

If an individual has an accident on University Avenue, the chances are that the individual will survive. If the accident happens in Orillia then the individual does not survive. Those are the kinds of problems that exist in the health-care system.

To say that there's no conflict in there, or that there's no concern in that system—those guys opposite don't know what they're talking about. The tragedy about it is that they're supposed to be dealing with it; they are the people who are supposed to be involved with this and administering the system.

I want to point out that there's no question the problem has to be negotiated. The doctors should negotiate—I think they have the right to negotiate—what a fair deal is, what they should be paid for their services. The ministry should be responsible for the negotiations and for the fact that perhaps certain groups of physicians are getting paid less than other groups of physicians, or some physicians are making or charging too much or are getting too great a percentage of the health dollar in relation to the services they perform. I don't think there's any argument about that point.

Because the doctors are put on a figure, or they're limited in what they can charge, the implication is that if one pays more, he'll get better medical care—or something of that nature. As the member for Mississauga North said, "We get what we pay for." That's nonsense.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, we have doctors in Ontario who are working on salary. All our medical officers of health work on salary. We have doctors in various provincial institutions working on salary and they are doing a damned good job. They are not double billing; they are not triple billing. Their pay is fixed. It's not related to the services they perform or the functions they carry out and they do both damned well.

The relationship to pay has nothing to do with the health-care system delivered. If there is a commitment to the health-care system, it will be done.

I suggest some of the members talk to people from the United States. I remember having some discussions with them about a situation, as an example, in New York. Two patients are brought in, one 39 years old and the other about 72. They had one space in the cardiac-care unit. They did a credit check, found out who had the money and that's the person who got the treatment. As it happened, in this case the elderly citizen got the treatment and the other man died.

Is that what the members want? Is that the direction in which we're going? Is that the kind of health-care system they want to bring back to Canada? If we allow this double billing to develop, that is exactly what is going to happen.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I wish to say that health care should be provided on the basis of need and not greed and I suggest that we support this bill.

Mr. Cassidy: I thought we would hear from the minister, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, I thank the members for their contribution in the debate. I am disturbed, I must say, by the contributions from the Liberal Party. I had thought at one time the Liberals were committed to saving medicare and ensuring that the principles brought in by a federal Liberal government 10 years ago that medicare be available on uniform terms and conditions to every citizen of the country of Canada would be respected here in Ontario. The Liberal Party has flipped away from that principle in this debate. Mr. Speaker. The Conservative Party was reluctant to go into medicare in the first place and the debate today indicates it has not changed that original opinion. The Conservatives are not prepared to stand up firmly and ensure that every citizen in the province has equal universal access to doctors' care, which we think should be provided at one price in every corner of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that this House will endorse this bill and will support it unanimously.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The time for debating this bill has expired. Pursuant to standing order 28 the member for Scarborough West (Mr. R. F. Johnston) has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Wiseman) concerning the development of property east of Bay Street in the city of Toronto. This matter will be debated at 10:30 p.m.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION

Mr. Hodgson moved resolution 38:

That in the opinion of this House the government of Ontario should consider the initiation of a study of intensive food production technologies with a view to introducing appropriate programs based on a goal of long-term food self-sufficiency and sustainability of the agricultural sector.

Mr. Hodgson: My intention in putting this resolution forward was to ask the honourable members of this House to give some thought to the long-term picture for our agricultural community in Ontario. I would like to set my remarks this afternoon in the year 2000. What do we see ahead for agriculture as we go down the road to the end of this century? What are our food needs?

One thing is for sure, Mr. Speaker, the world is going to need more food. We in Ontario are lucky to be a major producer and one of the few countries capable of producing a surplus of food over and above the needs of its own citizens. Only the United States and Australia can claim that distinction, along with Canada.

The global outlook in our food production is a very important perspective to consider. In spite of the best efforts of our farmers and agronomists, and those of many countries, many people in the world have diets which are nutritionally inadequate. We know the result—widespread human suffering. This serves certainly to aggravate world political instability. Thus, Canada's role is clear.

This role is to ensure, over the long haul, an adequate, balanced food supply for our people and, at the same time through our foreign aid programs of food exports, not only do we help feed the hungry but also teach them to feed themselves.

There is a growing dependence on North America to make up for the shortfalls of world food production. Indeed the needs of the future are great. Canadians must be prepared to meet them.

As most of the members know I'm a farmer. I have operated a successful dairy farm in the Kettleby area for over 30 years—I say successful because I have managed to have three of my four children go to university. For the last few years, my eldest son and I have been operating a calf-cow operation. Four weeks ago there seemed to be more money in selling the cows and calves than in keeping and feeding them, so today I'm not a farmer any more—as far as the calf and cow operation is concerned.

One development in the process impacting heavily on agriculture is that of energy price increases. The result is that everything else is going up in price. Think about it for a moment, if you will.

One thing we are facing in agriculture right now is that progress will have to be made without the reliable flow of inexpensive oil. This situation has been made dramatically more evident in recent weeks by the well-publicized events in Iran. By the way, I would like to take this opportunity to express my full support for our neighbours in the United States, as they come to grips with the situation in Iran and the tremendous affront to their national dignity presently taking place in that country.

Agriculture is an energy-intensive industry. Farmers are using larger tractors, combines, trucks, harvesters—all these items consume energy. They depend on a steady input of fertilizers, most of which is derived from petroleum feedstocks. Every phase of farming and food operations today depends on a precarious and depleting source of energy. To ensure efficient food production, our farmers will have to adopt energy-conserving techniques, the same as all society must do.

I urge this government to give as much emphasis as it can to the research and development of the full mix of alternative energy sources and energy-conservation technology. One possibility that must be surely considered as being viable is for us to produce larger quantities of so-called "synthetic" fuels from agricultural wastes. This applies also to the possibility of developing fuels from crops specifically cultivated for their value as a fuel energy source.

There was a rumour when I used to go down to Haldimand-Norfolk that that area around Nanticoke was going to grow corn to produce gasohol, a substitute energy fuel. There is quite a possibility in that statement—farmers growing energy sources.

Other possibilities are the potentially large amounts of clean energy available from urban wastes. Biomass undoubtedly will become a major energy source in Canada.

I expect a great deal of our lower quality arable land, and possibly much of our forests where, for one reason or another timber and pulp operations are not feasible, could provide an abundant harvest of low-grade cellulose for energy production. In the event of a really drastic cutback in Ontario's oil supply, our farmers would have to have priority in any gas rationing system. Experience in the United States has shown they were operating against competing interests in such a situation.

I have one further point on energy. Surely by this time it would be profitable for the natural gas distributors to install gaslines at least in our more concentrated agricultural areas. I can think of the Holland Marsh, which is a couple of miles from where I live and where there are about 10 acres under greenhouses. At the present time I doubt very much, with the price of fuel oil and energy to heat those greenhouses, whether they will even be operating next spring. It was very unprofitable for them last year. They have to have these greenhouses to produce early seedlings of lettuce, celery and so forth in the spring for early planting.

I would like to see our natural gas distributors produce a pipeline into areas where there is a concentration of farming as there is in the Holland Marsh area. It's not too far away, but residents there haven't heard of any move at the present time. I would urge the Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch) to urge these people to put them in so we can have a cheaper energy supply in areas like the Holland Marsh and elsewhere in the province.

I would like to move on to intensive food production technology. When I say intensive food production technology, please let me explain more precisely what I am referring to. Perhaps observations from my own life will serve to illustrate this.

When I came to the Holland Marsh area 25 years ago it was just being brought into production. Then 100 to 150 bags of onions per acre was considered a good yield. Through good farming practices and a lot of help from the Ontario Agricultural College with sprays and fertilizers, it's nothing today to have a yield of 1,000 bags of onions to the acre. That's what I mean by intensive food production.

Not so long ago, as I mentioned, I was a dairy farmer. We used to have yields of 25,000 pounds of milk per cow. They were world champions in those days. It's nothing for our good herds of dairy cattle today to produce that much and more at a herd level and not from one particular animal. As I mentioned before in my opening remarks, the government should set up a committee to investigate a concentrated and intensive food supply.

In talking about the fantastic improvement in yield, compared with the rest of history the past couple of decades are watersheds in agricultural productivity. New hybrids and fertilizing techniques have been developed which have changed the entire practice of farming.

I believe we have to face the challenge of upping our overall agricultural productivity far more over the next 20 years or so. I certainly promote the use in some way of all the present unproductive class 1 and 2 lands on the fringes of our cities. One doesn't have to drive too many miles out from where we're sitting here to see it.

Right now there is agricultural land not being used. It has changed a lot in the last three or four years. There is more land under production than there was three or four years ago on account of the new assessment practices of the province of Ontario, whereby if the land is not farmed it is assessed as either residential land or development land on which the developer, or whoever is holding the land, has to pay more money.

Mr. McKessock: With houses sitting on it.

Mr. Hodgson: That is what I am talking about. I would like to see all this land in production so there is no problem as far as supplying the needs for food in the province.

The main point I would like to talk about this afternoon is the possibilities in our greenhouse industry. One of the most intensive forms of agricultural practice in Ontario is our greenhouse industry. Eight months a year Ontario relies heavily on imported fresh agricultural produce in order to meet our domestic requirements.

This fact, coupled with the rising costs of transportation, has created an excellent opportunity for the expansion of the Ontario greenhouse industry.

Canada imports over $100 million worth of vegetables each year. Such a heavy reliance on imports results in a lack of security of supply of fresh fruit. It also has a negative impact on our balance of trade and reduces employment opportunities in Ontario.

The single most important restraint to the growth of the greenhouse industry in Ontario is the rising fuel cost for heating greenhouses. Ontario has developed, demonstrated and implemented the appropriate technological advancements aimed at reducing the negative effect of rising fuel costs in the greenhouse industry. Ontario presently has 570 acres under glass, plastic or fibreglass. Heating one acre with gas or oil costs the greenhouse operator between $30,000 and $40,000 a year. Agricultural research is attacking the problems in several directions. Research is currently being carried out under the auspices of this government, which is examining methods of saving energy and reducing the heating costs of our current greenhouse stock. Thermal curtains, end wall and side wall insulation, double glazing and air-mixing systems of solar heating have a potential to sufficiently reduce the operating costs of the greenhouse.

In order to increase the greenhouse share of the market, the entire greenhouse industry must be revamped in the near future. The constant increase in energy and the dwindling supplies of fossil fuel demand this.

Some of the more avant garde designs incorporate many energy-saving innovations. These include full utilization of potential southern exposure and maximum elevation of the sun. Insulating the back wall on the north side, with reflecting material on the inside of it, can reduce heating losses from the exposed greenhouse surface.

Other energy-conserving measures are night covers, additional ventilation equipment and use of heat storage below the soil. Utilization of waste industrial heat for greenhouses has been the most promising of the alternative energy systems under development at the present time. Two main areas currently being examined are the utilization of waste heat from oil refining operations, and utilizing of heat from Ontario's electrical generating facilities.

Ontario Hydro is conducting trials at the Pickering nuclear power plant and the Bruce nuclear station at Douglas Point. Some very impressive statistics have been released on the Bruce greenhouses. Figures released earlier this month point out that 20,000 cucumbers and 20,000 tomatoes have been harvested from three quarters of an acre since August 1. Cucumbers were first picked just 24 days after they were planted and tomatoes 56 days after planting.

The Bruce B site can potentially be expanded to about 600 acres of greenhouses serviced by eight units, while Pickering A and B could provide enough heat for over 300 acres. The two projects would together be capable of growing enough tomatoes to replace about 25 per cent of Ontario's present imports.

The experimental greenhouses simulate the use of moderator cooling water from the generating station being piped into the greenhouse. Hydro would build the pipeline to recover the cost through charges for the water. In turn, the greenhouse operators would have a very reasonably priced, reliable heating source.

The same principle can be adapted for use in other large industrial complexes in Ontario.

Mr. McKesock: How come they took that hot water 12 miles before they built a greenhouse?

Mr. Hodgson: Just listen to me and I might be able to tell you.

Texaco Canada, with the assistance of the University of Guelph, will be examining the possibilities over the next two years of using Texaco's Nanticoke refinery to supply heat to about 100 acres of greenhouses. Texaco has supplied funding for the experimental greenhouse which, if expanded to 100 acres, would cost Texaco $40 million to $50 million to construct. The greenhouse could grow not only tomatoes, but also cucumbers, lettuce, peppers and perhaps even strawberries.

Full development of the Ontario greenhouse industry could make Ontario self-sufficient year round in many vegetables. The impact on our economy, on our trade deficit and unemployment levels could only be favourable to the people of Ontario. Ontario and Canada need this type of innovative agriculture in order to remain one of the world's leading agricultural exporting nations.

Something like 40 per cent of the millions of dollars worth of food we import every year into Ontario could be grown in Ontario if the right technologies were applied.

Stability of markets and adequate return on labour and capital investment are essential for our farmers. We must continue to do all we can to promote the consumption of our own products.

The Foodland Ontario program of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food has had good results in obtaining co-operation from the supermarket chains. Supermarkets have supplemented this effort with advertising and point-of-purchase promotion. I believe, with a bit more educational effort of this sort, our consumers will relearn the pleasures of enjoying Ontario fruits and vegetables in season. More important is the potential effect on our farmers' income stability and motivation.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to all the research that is done and all the public information programs that are undertaken, the primary reason for increase in production lies in the market. Conversely, uncertainties of the market—instability in demand for commodities and in their prices—is probably the most important constraint on increased production.

Instability in production, prices and farm incomes have long been a familiar pattern. They have been tremendous disincentives in many cases, and I applaud the move of the federal government and the government of Ontario to alleviate the burden. Farmers benefit from being able to move to more efficient production methods. Consumers gain from more stable food prices.

In conclusion, I would like, as I am sure every member in this Legislature would, to see farmers get a reasonable reward for their labour and a reasonable return on their investment. Motivation is the key.

Mr. Riddell: I wish time would permit me to respond to the various points made by the member for York North, but I am going to confine my remarks to the intensive type operation we should see more of, such as greenhouse production. Really, we can't get much more intensive than we are now as far as crop production is concerned and as far as livestock production is concerned. We have the potential in Ontario and in Canada to produce far more food than we are producing at the present time, but the fact of the matter is we don't have the markets.

The honourable member indicated it would be nice if we could send food over to those parts of the world where people go to bed hungry every night. But if we listen to agriculturalists and economists talk, they say that is not the answer, that we shouldn't send food over and deprive the people in those countries of their jobs. We must remember that in many of those countries agriculture probably provides 80 per cent of the jobs. They say we shouldn't send food over and deprive them of these jobs, and that what we should do is send over the technology and the agricultural experts who will help them to help themselves.

This resolution, as I understand it, is encouraging the government to initiate studies which would be concerned with the long-range view of agricultural production in this province. The second part of the resolution calls on the government to introduce programs to provide for food self-sufficiency.

Food is, and will continue to be, the first priority for everyone in this province; however, I believe there has been a general lack of commitment and direction to agriculture by this government. In the next decade a strategy for agriculture will be required. If farming is to remain healthy and profitable in the future, and provide the bountiful supplies of food Canadians have become accustomed to, then agriculture will have to undergo many changes.

We are in a new ball game today. We are faced with dwindling fuel supplies at burdensome prices, higher input costs, uncertain markets and a chaotic economy. There is no doubt our farming practices today, with increasing use of pesticides and the ongoing substitution of capital for labour, have been based on relatively cheap and abundant energy. In fact, the availability of cheap energy helped to increase the average size of farms, and in the process has reduced the number of primary food producers.

There are growing concerns today that we cannot continue indefinitely our current mode of farming. Some people believe we will have to revert to small farms in order to implement ecoagricultural practices. Others say present-day farms can be properly managed with crop rotation and soil conservation practices which will make them more ecologically sound than in the past. Still others believe advanced technology will allow us to continue our energy-intensive ways.

Without proven alternative energy sources in place at the present time, due, I suggest, to government neglect, there is no doubt the scramble for a share of the world's dwindling oil supplies will overshadow all other concerns of farmers in the 1980s. On-farm petroleum use accounts for only three per cent of Canada's total energy consumption, but it's a critical three per cent. Fuel supplies for farm operations must be portable and easily stored. Petroleum is the only available energy source that fits the bill so it's imperative that food production receive top priority in the event of an oil shortage.

Availability is only one aspect. Price is equally crucial. Reports of fuel prices jumping by over 40 cents per gallon at one time makes farmers shudder. It is an additional direct increase in the cost of producing food, but it also strengthens our belief that a much greater commitment needs to be made to develop alternatives. We just can't avoid the fact that shortages are going to occur, likely within the next decade. Alternate sources of energy—solar, biomass and wind—won't be feasible in time to fill the gap.

When it comes to pioneering these new energy frontiers, farmers are in the forefront. Many farmers in the province are experimenting with solar heating, fuel from biomass and other forms of renewable energy. It is time government gave more than moral support to these initiatives. Funding and assistance should be provided for this practical on-farm research. Between them, the federal and Ontario governments have committed $58 million for development of renewable energy over the next five years, but there is little evidence of the massive support needed to get our country through the impending energy crisis. What is perfectly clear to me is that we will require increased research on energy and its position in agriculture. For this reason I am supporting this resolution.

We cannot ignore today the prospects of constant energy shortages, line-ups and higher prices. The energy problem has brought to light for us the foolishness of relying on food from other countries when we could produce the food here. As the costs of transporting imported food grows, so also will the rest of our dependency on this food grow. We are far from the point of self-sufficiency in food in Ontario and in Canada.

However, accompanying the initiation of intensive food production technology will be problems the government cannot ignore. A perfect example is the government's attempt to explore the use of nuclear-produced waste heat for heating greenhouses near reactor sites.

Those farmers already in business with large investments have received no help in their present locations down in Essex county. Escalating energy costs have exerted extreme pressures on the profitability of many greenhouse operations to the point where many have had to close down. Surely it is incumbent upon this government to research new technology for existing greenhouse operations, rather than devote all its attention to the possibility of using waste heat from nuclear power plants.

I contend that the government is not as interested in looking at more intensive food production technologies as it is in producing and selling more nuclear power. I would hope the government would listen to the member for York North and take a look at more intensive food-producing technology but not put its eggs all in one basket in hoping to find this by simply making use of nuclear waste heat. There are other methods and we hope the government gets about it, and in very short order.

Mr. Laughren: It's with a great deal of pleasure I rise to take part in this debate to talk about one of the several passions in my life, namely, food and agriculture. Just in case the member for York North didn't know it, I should tell him I was born and raised on a farm and never left one until I was 18 years old. Mind you, I have a poor memory. I don't recall everything I learned when I was on that farm. Nevertheless, I did understand what the member for York

North was attempting to say and we are going to support his resolution.

I thought he touched on a number of interesting areas. He struck a very responsive chord in me when he was talking about the whole question of the import of processed foods and the price of oil and gas and the effect on greenhouse operators. My worry is that his government will undertake to do something such as this and then think that's the answer to our problems, rather than seeing it is part of a much broader strategy that needs to be put in place.

If I was the member for York North, I would be very angry at succeeding Ministers of Agriculture and Food and Ministers of Industry and Tourism who have let what has happened in the food and agricultural business happen, because it really is unacceptable. Those are Ontario workers who are losing jobs because of the high degree of imports, in particular in processed foods. The deficits are substantial and are getting worse.

I certainly have no hesitation in saying I think what the member is saying is fine and I have no hesitation in supporting it. It's not just me who thinks this. There are people on this side of the House who are concerned about what's happening in the whole area of food processing. The farmers' union, the Canadian Food and Allied Workers and the Ontario Federation of Agriculture have been saying for some time now all is not well.

They have been warning the government that it has to do something about the amount of domestic demand being met by imports, a lot of them from the United States. The problem is that we are still continuing to export, but our exports are incredibly specialized, in areas like the grains, the obvious example, and oil seeds. That is the old problem in this country: producing the raw material and exporting it and then importing the finished product. We are exporting less of the substances like meat, fruit, vegetables and dairy products.

I was reading an article in a publication put out by the Canadian Churches for Global Economic Justice—it is called GATT-Fly—and they say if things continue the way they are Canadians will be able to order the dairy products required for breakfast here at home but they will have to send to another country for their lunch and their supper. That is a sad commentary on a country with the agricultural potential we have in Canada; and in Ontario, which has traditionally been known as an agricultural as well as an industrial province.

Ontario itself, by the last figure I could find, has a 42 per cent deficiency in fresh fruit, including pears, peaches, grapes and apples, all of which we obviously can produce here in greater numbers than we are.

When you look at the overall consumption habits of Canadians, you see that their imports have risen in the last 10 or 11 years, from 11 per cent of food consumption being met by imports in 1965 to over 13 per cent in 1976. I don't have figures since then. That is a 2.4 per cent increase of jobs of people like farmers, as well as people who work on farms, meat packers, fishermen and cannery workers, just to name a few.

Just as important, and this is what really bothers me about it, and I think the member for York North touched on this, it means a growing dependency on others for our food supplies. It is outrageous that this country would become dependent on others.

Projections are that if things just keep going the way they are now we will have an overall deficit in food by the end of the century. If that is allowed to happen it would be testimony to the stupidity of the various governments in the country.

The member for York North and I part company over how you go about turning it around. I think the member is doing one thing. That's fine, we are agreeing with that; but I suspect he stops short of the next step.

In specific processed foods we have substantial deficits: canned meat, canned shellfish, fruit juices, canned fruit, canned vegetables, nuts and candy. The total trade deficit in processed foods and vegetables is about $300 million.

I think the member for York North used the figure of $100 million, but he may have been talking about different kinds. I am talking about processed fruits and vegetables, where we have a $300 million deficit and imports account for 25 per cent of the market. More important, 12 per cent of those imports are food we can grow here. It really is a bad sign when we are importing that much of the food we can produce here.

The vegetable oil imports have 30 per cent of the market; we could be meeting that. The deficit for miscellaneous processed food is $178 million according to the last figure I could come up with.

In terms of jobs, our estimation, and the estimation of the people who have done research on it, is that in Ontario alone the import of processed fruits and vegetables which we can grow here—I am not talking about the exotic fruits and vegetables that we import—cost Ontario 2,200 direct jobs and 4,400 indirect jobs—a two to one ratio—for a total of 6,600 jobs that could employ Ontario workers. That's very serious, because food processing is a labour-intensive industry and one we should be encouraging.

We have to get in there and become more involved. The Ontario government can't shift the blame to the federal government. The whole food processing industry, which contributes to the majority of the deficits, is heavily concentrated in Ontario. So it's an Ontario problem and the Ontario government simply hasn't done anything about it.

It's a big business. The food and beverage sector employs about 10 per cent of Ontario's manufacturing work force—if we classify it as manufacturing, which we do. That's 90,000 people, and 19,000 of those are in the fruit and vegetable market. There's a great deal at stake here for Ontario.

I was breaking it down into categories. The member for York North mentioned tomatoes. Since 1967 there's been no significant increase in the growth of exports, but imports have multiplied by a factor of four. Thus we quadrupled exports on tomatoes alone since 1967. In 1977 we imported $12 million worth of tomatoes and $19 million worth of tomato paste.

In 1976, 54 per cent of the tomato market was met by imports, according to the Canadian Food Processing Association; and that's a product we can grow here. We should be doing something about that. Further, we can't ignore the degree of foreign ownership in the industry. The highest degree of concentration is in the foreign-owned part of it; that's also where the highest deficit proportion is. The minister can't pretend that's not a problem, although I know the government would like to pretend that.

It's not doing its share of research and development in the whole food processing area. One tenth of one per cent of the value of food shipments in 1974 was spent on research and development. That's unacceptable; it's not the standard being met by other countries.

This government's role has been one of indifference. We've talked to them about it before; other organizations have talked about it and they simply ignore us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Laughren: So, Mr. Speaker, I commend the member for North York for bringing forth this resolution. We will support it but I hope he leans more heavily on the Minister of Agriculture and Food to do something more serious as well.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to rise in support of this resolution. The resolution does not define what long-term self-sufficiency should be, but I'd like to say that actions which might come out of this resolution will certainly have an influence on future generations.

The province of Ontario grows and processes more food than any other province. Food is important to everyone. Our population's attention, as reflected by the press, has been on self-sufficiency for energy. Arguments are raised, "Why weren't we doing something more about self-sufficiency for energy a few years ago?"

We're at that particular point in time right now with regard to food. We should be looking into intensive food production technologies so at some point in the future we can be self-sufficient in food. I'd suggest that the food production technology we're talking about is more than the actual growing of plants and animals.

For example, the impact of imports and exports on Ontario agriculture is of concern; some of the other speakers discussed this. Since 1971, food imports into Canada have increased by 90 per cent. This is magnified by the fact that during the same period of time exports decreased considerably in almost all commodities, especially in horticultural products.

In 1977, the task force on the orientation of Canadian agriculture estimated a $344 million increase in the deficit between 1970 and 1975. We've had different figures thrown out today depending on the source, but they're all showing the same trend and they mean one thing, people from Ontario and across Canada are depending more and more on the amounts and the prices of products produced outside their own country.

We're not arguing that restrictions should be imposed on all imported goods that we do not or cannot produce here in Ontario. The point of the matter is much of what we do import could be produced, and if it is already being produced, could be cultivated more intensively.

Many of the fruits and vegetables Canada imports from the United States are produced here in southern Ontario already. A substantial portion of the fresh fruits and vegetables could, if necessary, be replaced by off-season supplies of Canadian origin, although perhaps they would be in a chilled, frozen or canned form.

In this Legislature I represent an area of Ontario that used to grow sugar beets. Please note "used to grow," because since 1976 sugar beets have not been grown in southwestern Ontario. I don't wish to get into the argument of the pros and cons of why the sugar beet industry disappeared. I would like to point out one of the examples used by the farm community when it was lobbying the federal government to have the industry re-established. At that time, we had a policy in this country that said 55 per cent of the TV we watched must be produced in this country. What our farmers were asking for was a national policy which said 20 per cent of the sugar we eat should be produced in this country. They didn't get it; we don't have a sugar industry in this province.

I would suggest the technology of developing programs which would be of benefit to our farmers must go hand in hand with the technology of production proposed in this resolution. There are, sure enough, hopeful signs in our balance of payments for agricultural trade. With the increase in the price of feed grains in the early 1970s, governments in Ottawa, and especially in Ontario, felt they had to protect the livestock and dairy industries and did so by encouraging the establishment of national marketing boards to ensure a stable income for some of these sectors of our economy.

The lengthy negotiations of the tariff board under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade which began back in 1973 have resulted in some equitable situations now which didn't exist. Nearly all the tariffs have been changed from a specific cents per pound to an ad valorem, which is a per cent of value, in order to keep the tariffs in line with inflation. Tariff reductions are generally on those products not produced in Canada or those that are out of season.

The tomato growers in my area were very pleased with the increase in tomato paste and canned tomato tariffs, since Canada imports nearly all of its paste and about half of its canned tomatoes. I would suggest the growing of tomatoes is an intensive food production technique which now averages 20 tons per acre of delivered tomatoes in my area. We need continued research to develop tomatoes that will be capable of being harvested by means of mechanical harvesters and still maintain their excellent quality.

Some of the technology for more intensive food production is already available, but it cannot be put into practice because it is not economically attractive to the primary producer to produce to a maximum yield. Many farmers have not been educated in economics and don't really know about the law of diminishing returns, but they do know from practical experience when it costs more to produce the product than they get for it when they sell they just don't produce it.

I would suggest if we had price incentives built into producing food products, such as have been received by those who are producing oil, we would have a tremendous amount of food production here in this province. I am not one to think it would be good for the price of food to increase by 500 per cent or something in that area, as oil has increased in the past few years. What I am saying in support of this resolution is the government should be promoting new and different technologies for both growing and marketing so that if the crunch on food ever does come, and we are sure it will, we will be in the front ranks of producing.

I spoke a few minutes ago about tomatoes. In Kent county we grow about 8,000 acres of tomatoes. Estimates are that if we produced our own tomato paste in this country it would take another 8,000 acres. In other words it would double our tomato production. I would also suggest, in fact I would be very sure, that immense adjustment would take place in one year in our particular area given the economic incentive to do so.

We talked about tomatoes, but the same is true for other food crops, such as grapes and peaches. I would suggest there is a tremendous argument on the side of providing protection for these industries in our agricultural sector because if we lose them, as we have already lost some, it will be extremely difficult to regain them. We will go farther down the road in dependency on imports, with all of its disadvantages.

I know, for example, that on an experimental basis it is possible to grow apples on a one-year-old shoot rather than on a tree. Perhaps one would only get one apple per shoot, but the number of shoots one could have per acre would mean the yield would be many times that which can be achieved now. Of course, the product could be mechanized much easier.

We've moved in this direction through the planting of dwarf trees. These are the kinds of things that need to be worked on now. They need to be studied and researched because those kinds of changes don't come about overnight. This is the kind of thing that needs plenty of research.

I suggest another specific area for progress we have in southwestern Ontario are thousands of acres that could be irrigated because they are at or below lake level. We have the source of water and that's something a lot of areas don't have. It could be economical at some stage, depending on the crop, to use a lot of that irrigation. Intensive agriculture will warrant it. We could certainly do with the information required on irrigation.

Mr. McClellan: You'd make a good ag rep.

Mr. Watson: Maybe I would.

I'm sorry my time is just about up because this subject lends itself to a tremendous variation of discussion. I would like to have spent some time talking about the protection of our farm land, the techniques now available to us in intensive food and livestock production and some of the dreams our researchers have and some of the things they could pursue.

I would hate to let this moment go by without mentioning that in this very building tonight the Ontario Institute of Professional Agrologists are holding a meeting. I think they are touring the building at the present time. That particular organization, of which I am a member and for which I have a lot of respect, will have a lot of ideas and input about what we should do on this particular topic.

To be one step ahead of the matter of food production will indeed be to Ontario's and to Canada's credit when the food crisis does come. It will arise, just as surely as we're going through an energy crisis today.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise and speak on ballot item 10, proposed by the member for York North (Mr. Hodgson).

I'm interested in the comment he made in regard to the bill and the initiation of a study of intensive food production technologies with a view to introducing appropriate programs based on a goal of long-term food self-sufficiency. I think I can agree.

I was also interested in the member for York North's opening comment that he has been a farmer all his life and he was able to raise his family and educate them well. I do support his views on that. It is a great place to raise a family. Hopefully, we can maintain our agricultural industry and expand on it. If there is anything we can do in this Legislature by proposals such as this they certainly have the support of our party, as has been indicated by our critic in his opening address.

The thing that really concerns me in intensifying our utilization of resources is that somebody can get hurt. I think the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) has spoken on that many times. In the greenhouse business we have to be careful that the existing producers are given the same opportunities as we are intensifying the utilization of nuclear hydro generating stations and the other stations that are being proposed.

At the present time our young people are saddled with a tremendous debt. An editorial in this month's Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association magazine indicates our young farmers in Ontario have a $3.2 billion debt. At the high rate of interest they are paying at the present time, as high as 17 per cent, it is certainly putting a lot of pressure on the expansion that has already taken place over the past 10 years.

In our area they are intensifying the growing of hogs, the operation of breeder barns and feeder barns, and in providing facilities for the storage of manure. There has been a tremendous expansion. Now they are under very heavy financial responsibility to pay the high interest rates. We have to be aware of that and come up with some solutions or some protection for them. If they increase the price of the end product to pay the high interest it just adds to inflation, and the consumer—and everyone in Ontario and Canada for that matter—is going to be in a more difficult position. It just adds to the inflation factor. I think we have to give that a close look also.

Another area we could be looking at, and the Minister of Agriculture and Food in particular, is providing a report on what the markets are, what the futures are, what the world markets are and where we can sell these products so we can grow to our needs.

As my friend the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) indicated—his ideas aren't the same as ours, but I agree—we have to encourage our young people to own their own farms and give them that opportunity. We can't have it state-controlled. We have to be very careful there because if they don't have goals to work towards, as well as the incentive, they're not going to take the same interest.

I was also interested in the statement of the member for York North in regard to Texaco which announced its plans at a press conference in Guelph on November 5. Professor Herman Tiessen of the department of horticulture announced that the first crop of tomatoes from the research project would be harvested in approximately one year, so that's in 1980. That happens to be in my riding. We have had a tremendous amount of development there. It just shows that agriculture and industry can work together, and I hope that can be maintained. While we do need the jobs and we do need the homes, I certainly think it would be much more viable and would make for a much healthier atmosphere if we could keep the two working together.

I see, too, they have the potential to put in 100 acres of greenhouses. As the member pointed out, we now have only 540 acres, I believe, under glass, so we can see that would be a tremendous step forward in itself. I hope the private sector can come up with an agreement with Texaco in order to work out that project so they can have a share in the development of the potential there. I am pleased to see that taking place, and I would like to say thanks to Texaco for showing leadership in that particular role.

When they announced the Townsend town-site, they indicated the reason for locating there was to utilize the heat energy from the Ontario Hydro generating station at Nanticoke. I don't know whether that will ever take place. It's not in the plans now. The research we have done has indicated it may not be feasible, but perhaps it is. Maybe in the days ahead that can be engineered or looked into to see if it is possible.

As far as the need for production in Ontario is concerned, we are importing much more than we are exporting. We have pointed that out since we came into the House in 1975. I think the strawberry crop is a good example. We are only producing 25 per cent of our strawberry needs and importing the remainder. We can grow some of the finest strawberries of any place in the world, but in the last couple of years there have been improvements in that so we need to move forward.

On the energy side, because my family happens to be farmers in the corn business, I know that corn drying does take a tremendous amount of energy and that acreage is increasing. I wonder too, with the Texaco plan and the excess heat there, if those dryers could be attached to utilize that heat? That's an area that could be explored, with industry and agriculture working together.

The job opportunities in those fields are tremendous. Industry would gain because it would have to produce the equipment needed, the tractors and everything connected with agriculture. The spinoff effect would be tremendous. I think there is a great future there.

[5:30]

Another area in the energy field is the fact this government hasn't allowed the use of gasohol. In northern Ontario there is great interest, in that there are small units. There is a lot of agricultural land where they could grow potatoes and other vegetables that would be good for making gasohol. There are people there who would like to do that on an experimental basis, but they are not able to get the permit to do so. I think the government should show some leadership. The Americans are doing it and Brazil is doing it. There is no reason why Ontario can't also do it and provide job opportunities in the north.

Mr. Speaker, there are many areas we could get into. It has been pointed out by the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson), that the future is there. I certainly agree, and I certainly support any movement that can extend our industry. I would like to wish the member's bill well in the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the goal of this resolution is to establish greater food self-sufficiency. That is a very worthy goal. There was a Minister of Agriculture and Food four or five years ago, Bill Stewart had been in that portfolio for some 10 or 12 years or more—who once informed this House that the trend away from self-sufficiency in Ontario—from the middle 1960s—projected to the end of the century, would result in the province of Ontario importing 60 per cent of its food. Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is no more ludicrous warning than that, that a province in which agriculture is one of the prized basic industries should be drifting further and further away from food self-sufficiency.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture came in a year or two ago and pointed out that by 1985 there will be only about two products in which we will be self-sufficient and have a measure of surplus. In all of the rest, there will be a lack of self-sufficiency. What is the government doing about it?

This is an interesting minor revolt in government back benches, led by a parliamentary assistant, about the inadequacies of government policy. What is the government doing about it?

Foodland Ontario is about the only thing the government has come up with in trying to develop greater purchase of Ontario-produced foods. Even there, it is hopelessly inadequate.

Without taking too much time, I remind members of the debate and the questions we had in this House a couple of weeks ago about imported chickens. My colleague the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs) put a question on the order paper asking whether there couldn't be markings so that the Ontario consumers, when they went to buy chickens, could buy an Ontario chicken if it were so identified.

The answer was that identification at the packer/processor or retail level would mean increased cost in labour and packaging, which would be passed on to the consumer. In other words a cop-out. In some instances it is a total cop-out, because the major use of imported chickens in this province is by Maple Lodge Farms, a processing plant west of Guelph. It deals wholly in imported products, so there would be no problem other than the minor identification of it as an imported product.

If the government's Foodland Ontario program means anything then it is a minor cost. It is a cost that should be sustained in order to let our people know they are buying an imported product rather than a locally-produced one.

The main way of achieving this goal of food self-sufficiency, according to the thrust of the resolution introduced by the member for York North, is that we should have intensive food production technology, a study of new methods, with a view to developing greater food self-sufficiency.

Again, Mr. Speaker, good, but what is the only one he has cited? The only one he has cited is the technology of using waste heat from nuclear plants for purposes of building more greenhouses.

Of course that is absolutely commendable. What we have been doing is pouring the equivalent of millions of barrels of oil in the form of waste heat from our nuclear plants back into the Great Lakes. It is the most striking example of the wasteful use of energy in this province.

The government has had a study, as a result of which it is proceeding now to build greenhouses, or at least to work out the industrial strategy for building greenhouses, up in Bruce county and in the area down in Ontario and Northumberland counties in conjunction with Pickering and the other nuclear plants there.

It is idle for this government to have a thrust in terms of the application of that new technology if it is not able to get its kissing cousins in Ottawa to do something about the imports. The net effect of this government's program, the only program it has in terms of applying new technologies, is for every new greenhouse it builds it is going to turn belly up another one down in Essex county or in the Niagara Peninsula because they can't sustain all of the costs now in face of imports. There is need for some co-ordination with the federal government in order to make it possible that any new production we have from greenhouses that use the energy from nuclear plants should replace imports, but it can replace imports only if this government gets co-operation from the people in Ottawa.

The honourable member cited two other instances of things that should be done in order to build the sustainability of agriculture as we move towards the end of the century. The two areas were energy and interest rates. On energy, once again, this government through its new Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch) on October 1 unveiled a $30 billion program for energy development over the next 15 years. Included in that program was a very hopeful new redirection, namely that $14 billion of that $30 billion should be spent on non-conventional renewable energy sources, such as solar, wind, waste materials, biomass, et cetera.

That was again magnificent, but it was immediately proceeded by a cop-out. The Minister of Energy said he hoped the private sector will do all this. I wish he would point to a shred of evidence that the private sector in the past has indicated any intention to move in doing the research and finding the technology to develop nonconventional, renewable energy sources.

If this government really means it, there is an area for new technology, but the government has at least got to get in and play a partnership role with some of the funds that are now being directed to building an already oversized electric generation system in this province. Without going into the detail of it, I know of no area where that new technology would have a greater impact than in the agricultural community.

I attended an Ontario Federation of Agriculture convention in Ottawa four or five years ago. I was startled by a man who told that convention enough methane gas could be produced from the manure on the farms in the province to equal one half of the current consumption or usage of gas in Ontario at the present time. There are fantastic amounts of energy in the waste material on farms. Here is an opportunity for the government's technology. But this government has copped out. It has handed it all over to the private sector. As there is no immediate profit in it, the private sector isn't going to do anything.

Finally, on interest rates, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) a couple of days ago queried the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) with regard to the fact that back in 1973 the banks in the province, and indeed across this whole country, had brought in a dual system of interest rates in which there was a lower interest rate for small business and farms. It was a short-term program, I think for the better part of one year but no more. It has gone. What has been done about it? Has this government been pressing?

Some of my colleagues, including the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), queried the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) earlier in this session as to what was going to be done on interest rates. He said he was approaching the banks and asking the banks to be very responsive to the requests from farmers and small businessmen. We are still awaiting his reply as to what the banks are going to do about it.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, all of the things the honourable member has raised are very worthy, but what they do is underline the fact that this government's policies are either absent or inadequate in terms of fulfilling the goal of his resolution. What the resolution provoking or focusing this debate does is to underline the absence and the inadequacies on the government side.

Food self-sufficiency should be part of an overall industrial strategy in this province, since agriculture is one of our basic industries. My colleague from Nickel Belt spelled that out in terms of what could be done.

The honourable member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson) says they could have another 8,000 acres of tomatoes planted in one year, to be manufactured into paste. Why isn't the government doing something about it? Instead of throwing out all these bright ideas from the back-benchers, why don't government members talk to their Minister of Agriculture and Food? Why don't members of that caucus get their cabinet to do something on all the things the honourable member for York North really didn't include in his resolution?

His resolution mentions only one study. He calls for a lot of studies but the only point on which he focuses attention is greenhouses. The study has been done. He doesn't suggest other studies that should be done. He has a few proposals from this side of the House. He even got some from the back-benchers on his side of the House. What we want now is some action instead of all the rhetoric we have had up until this point.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add a few comments to those of my colleagues in support of this resolution.

There have been tremendous developments in agriculture in our lifetimes. Some experts claim the population growth, and in consequence the demand for food, is out-pacing the technological advances in farming and food processing. Yet others remain confident that with a sustained effort we are quite capable of continuing to feed ourselves. In Ontario we are very fortunate; we are also capable of helping to feed others outside this province.

A number of agronomists and other scientists in fields related to agriculture and food are looking at their work from what they call a whole systems point of view. As a matter of fact, biologists first alerted us to the possible undesirable long-term consequences of some of our farm practices. An example that comes to mind is the discovery of problems associated with the pesticide DDT, which was banned by this government a number of years ago. This happened because scientists began to realize the substance accumulated in potentially harmful amounts as it moved up the food chain.

This is, in a sense, what food scientists mean by the systems approach. It is an attitude which will prevail increasingly in our policy-making with regard to agriculture and food.

The issue of self-sufficiency in food will be a key one in coming decades. We cannot produce all the varieties of food stuffs in Canada which our consumers demand. We cannot produce such commodities as coffee, tea or citrus products. Self-sufficiency must mean that at least we pay for the import of such products through the export of our own food products.

We have seen a dramatic rise in imports of fresh and processed products. I am concerned that unless we act to balance this situation, we will experience a condition in which imports will exceed exports. The government of Ontario has committed itself to reverse this trend. We have in place the Foodland Ontario program, the aim of which is to increase consumption of Ontario-produced agricultural products among the citizens of Ontario. It is part of a new dimension of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food which was further defined and consolidated one year ago when a major marketing division was launched within the ministry.

Ontario is the nation's largest producer of agricultural products. The farm-gained value of agricultural commodities grown or produced in Ontario is well over $3 billion each year. We supply approximately 30 per cent of all Canadian agricultural output.

This government has stated its commitment to maintaining a healthy and productive agricultural sector. Simply stated, there are two alternative routes which this province could follow to ensure a viable agricultural economy. The first is to guarantee the income of our agricultural producers through massive transfer payments via taxation of the non-agricultural sector to support the agricultural producers in this province. This alternative has been rejected as a suitable long-term route for this province to take. Rather, the second alternative, the development of markets, both domestically and internationally, which are capable of maintaining a healthy and relatively prosperous agricultural industry, has been accepted as a preferable route to take.

Having adopted this policy, the government of Ontario, through the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, has assumed the responsibility of giving leadership to both the agricultural and processing sectors of the industry in developing those critical markets for our products. The production of our agricultural commodities has been growing over the past 10 years at an average rate of 1.7 per cent annually. This compares with the provincial population growth of 1.6 per cent, and a national population growth of 1.4 per cent.

Let's look at the market potentials. There are two places where we can seek that increased demand for agricultural outputs. First there is our own domestic market; and then there is the export potential.

Let's talk for a minute about the domestic market. The Foodland Ontario program, as noted, has already clearly demonstrated that Ontario shoppers will buy domestic agricultural products in preference to imported products when buyers can identify products, and have the opportunity to purchase them.

I mentioned before that the value of imported food products in the province is currently about $1.5 billion annually. About 40 per cent, or roughly $600 million of these imports, could be replaced by our own farmers and processors. The farm-gate value of those replaceable imports is calculated to amount to $500 million annually. We believe it is possible to expect that over a four or five year period we might be able to replace about 40 per cent of that $500 million, or add another $200 million to our farm income.

Let me give members a few examples of some of the food which we import, and their value. These foods are either produced now, or could be produced here in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time is about to expire.

Mr. Belanger: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. In order that these programs may be successful, it is vital that all levels of governments, and all facets of the food and agricultural industry work together towards achievement of this goal.

Mr. Speaker: The first item before us is Mr. Cassidy's motion, in the absence of Mr. Lawlor, for second reading of Bill 168.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the answers to questions 349, 356 and 359 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 4980.)

The House recessed at 6:01 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 4979.)

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM

349. Mr. Grande: Would the Ministry of Culture and Recreation table the salaries of every individual who worked for the Royal Ontario Museum, on a full-time or part-time contract, for the years 1975 through 1979? (Tabled November 13, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Since the Royal Ontario Museum is not a crown agency the ministry does not have a list of the individual salaries paid to all persons who worked at the ROM on a full-time or part-time contract for the years 1975 through 1979. However, the ministry does have the total salary budget for the museum for those years. This information is provided to the ministry by the museum annually as part of its total budget submission in support of its annual appropriation from the ministry. In this regard, the total annual salary costs of the museum for the years in question are as follows:

July 1-June 30 fiscal year (according to audited financial statements):

1974-75, $4,539,936; 1975-76, $5,314,883; 1976-77, $5,889,643; 1977-78, $6,473,714; 1978-79, $7,203,513; 1979 to end of October, $2,540,552.

BRITISH SUBJECTS

356. Mr. Breithaupt: What is the definition in Ontario of the term "British subject"? What present statutes in Ontario give any preference to, or refer to either voting or membership or qualification rights available to those referred to as "British subjects"? What agencies, boards and commissions of the government of Ontario through their statute of incorporation or regulations made thereto give any preference to, or refer to either voting or membership or qualification rights available to those referred to as "British subjects"? What professional organizations or other groups incorporated by any act of the Ontario Legislature give any preference to, or refer to either voting or membership or qualification rights available to those referred to as "British subjects"? (Tabled November 15, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Attached hereto are details of the ministry's response to question 356.

What is the definition in Ontario of the term "British subject"?

There is no statutory definition of British subject in Ontario.

Until recently, the Canadian Citizenship Act, RSC 1970, c. C-19 defined the term as a status held by the citizens of certain Commonwealth countries. The act also provided that every Canadian citizen was a British subject. The new Citizenship Act, SC 1974-5-6, c. 108 does not define British subject. It now recognizes the expression "citizen of the Commonwealth." Section 31 of this act provides as follows:

S. 31(1). Every person who, under an enactment of a Commonwealth country other than Canada, is a citizen or national of that country, has in Canada the status of a citizen of the Commonwealth.

(2). For the purposes of any law in force in Canada on and after the commencement of this act that refers to the status of British subject, the status so described shall after the commencement of this act refer to the status of Canadian citizen or citizen of the Commonwealth or both as the intent of such law may require.

What professional organizations or other groups incorporated by any act of the Ontario Legislature give any preference to or refer to either voting or membership or qualification rights available to those referred to as "British subjects"?

1. Ontario Association of Architects: See Architects Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 27, s. 5(1)(e), s. 6.

2. Law Society of Upper Canada: See Law Society Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 238, s. 28, s. 32.

3. Council of the Association of Ontario Land Surveyors: See the Surveyors Act, RSO 1970, c. 452, s. 6(5), s. 6(7).

HEALTH SERVICE CHARGES

359. Mr. Wildman: Would the ministry table any and all analyses and studies it has done on the estimated cost to the provincial Treasury and the Ontario Health Insurance Plan of legislative changes that would require OHIP to cover the travel and associated expenses of non-emergency referrals of patients from the north to southern Ontario for specialized treatments and care not available in their own communities and return fares of emergency patients who have recovered sufficiently to return home after treatment in southern hospitals? (Tabled November 22, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This ministry has not conducted any study or analysis on the estimated cost to cover the travel and associated expenses of non-emergency referrals of patients from northern Ontario, or the return fare of emergency patients.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee.

COMPULSORY AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 160, The Compulsory Automobile Insurance Act, 1979.

On section 8:

Mr. M. N. Davison: I was just handed a list from the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I assume this is the list of the board of directors of the Facility Association?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Which Facility Association?

Mr. M. N. Davison: The same Facility Association, Mr. Chairman, that was presenting briefs to the select committee on company law back in 1977. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. M. N. Davison: And these are the proposed board of directors for the new Facility Association, is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Drea: And the servicing carriers on the front.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Thank you.

Section 8 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any questions prior to section 11?

Mr. Breithaupt: I was concerned, Mr. Chairman, with a comment in section 10, but I believe the matter concerning the superintendent's power to allow or disallow rates has been dealt with already.

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. M. N. Davison: In section 10(1) and (2): "The articles of the association and bylaws of the association shall be filed by the association with the superintendent on or before December 1, 1979." Also, the superintendent has certain powers in regard to those bylaws, et cetera, of the association up until December 31.

Has it occurred to the ministry that members of the assembly might want to make comment or examine the so-called plan of operation and the bylaws of the association? Has any consideration been given within the ministry, or by the minister, to some proposal whereby either members of the assembly, or a committee such as the standing committee on the administration of justice, would have a chance to go over these documents before we got into a fully authorized flight by the new association?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, the reason for filing with the superintendent is because the association is nonprofit and the rates are controlled. It has to be operated to the satisfaction of the superintendent. It is virtually the same as any filing with the superintendent. The superintendent either approves or disapproves, in which case it can come back with the annual report of the superintendent, which is filed with the Legislature. That is the disposition of the matter.

As I said the other night, the superintendent does file an annual report through the minister, and there will be a special section of the annual report dealing with the Facility Association. I think in that way, the Legislature has every opportunity for an overview. Bear in mind that the bylaws, until they are approved by the superintendent, are only proposed bylaws that are being put forward by the Facility Association.

I read a communication to the Facility Association the other night outlining a number of matters the superintendent wanted clarified to his satisfaction.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Let me put my concern in this way: Normally with a piece of legislation like this, from my experience dealing with the ministry, the process has been given the kind of time frame where the bill might well have been introduced towards the end of last session and there would have been adequate time for public analysis and input.

The bill may have received second reading in the spring and it might have gone through an outside committee during the summer, or indeed it might have been introduced early in the fall session and then sent to a committee outside of the assembly, which I think would have been the best way to deal with it. However, the bill wasn't introduced until November 2, so we didn't start into second reading until a very short time ago. The ministry does, and I can understand the rationale behind it, want to get this legislation in place by the beginning of next month so we are forced to deal with it in committee of the whole House.

Frankly, there are some things that are worrisome about what the Facility Association may be doing. One is the point raised by my colleague from Sudbury on Tuesday night in regard to the undemocratic way in which the association will function, with the bigger, wealthier companies getting more votes than the smaller companies in the association. Another real concern is the amount of profit that will be made by the people who sell plans under the association.

There are other legitimate concerns members of the assembly aren't having a chance to look at because, as the minister points out, and rightly so, the document entitled Facility Association Plan or Operation, which was submitted to the select committee, may not be the plan of operation the Facility Association will have next month. Consequently, we have a situation where a fairly important agency or association which is going to be affecting consumers in the province will be operating on a plan members of the assembly will never even have a chance to look at before it goes into force. What I can't understand is why the minister, given the fact there are some time problems, wouldn't have arranged or thought of arranging some process by which members or the assembly could have examined the plan of operation and perhaps have questioned people from the Facility Association before the plan was given final stamp of approval.

I don't mean those comments in any way to run down the superintendent of insurance or any of the people within the ministry, they are fine and conscientious people; but it seems to me in such a controversial matter the minister might well, or should have, considered providing some mechanism by which members of the assembly could have examined the plan before it went into effect.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, first of all, this insurance arrangement doesn't go into effect, no matter how many proposals are before the Legislature or are being studied by members of the Legislature, until this bill is passed. Second, as I said before, the superintendent has to report in detail on it. Third, I don't think the Facility Association is controversial.

The controversy arises and I will try to put this as objectively as possible, from philosophical differences by a party and certain members in this Legislature as to how insurance will be provided in Ontario. Bear in mind, too, that when you talk about putting things forward, and so on and so forth, the select committee on company law has rather exhaustively looked at this entire subject. There is a great deal of background.

The select committee on company law is probably the oldest specialized committee of the Legislature and it did indeed set out guidelines for the ministry. It may not have set out guidelines for a Facility Association, it left room for discretion there. It recommended one way of dealing with this matter, but I haven't heard any comments from members of that committee saying we went against the thrust of their approach towards the introduction of compulsory insurance.

I would have loved to have been in a position to put forward this bill during the spring session. That we did not was no fault on the part of the insurance industry or my staff. Because of the nature of this ministry, there were certain impediments to my being able to put it forward, or even to having the time to give it adequate debate, or put it into committee.

Secondly, as the honourable member knows, because of certain impediments even my estimates were blocked for many weeks and had to be put through relatively quickly this fall. I am sure the insurance industry—not only the carriers but the agents; everybody involved, my colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) on behalf of his licence issuers—all would have been absolutely delighted had this bill received royal assent during the last session, but given the circumstances it was presented to the Legislature at the earliest possible time.

What it really comes down to is that the superintendent of insurance has been given a mandate, not only by the minister but by the select committee of company law, which because of the scope of that committee I would take as a mandate from the entire Legislature to do certain things. He is doing them.

It really comes down to the question of whether you trust the ability of the superintendent of insurance to consummate certain agreements that will be reflected in the operations of the Facility Association. I am not talking about the abilities of Mr. Thompson, I am talking about this in the abstract.

There will be monitoring. There will be a special section of his annual report, the first one obviously, that deals solely with the formation and the initial operation of the Facility Association. Latterly, there will be quite an extensive monitoring function, that in fairness I think the Legislature granted within a relatively brief period of time, and has had a very adequate opportunity to do so.

I would take you to page 34 of the report of the committee: "Accordingly the committee has concluded that the industry should be free to determine the structure of the pooling mechanism required to implement the take-all-comers approach." The industry has been doing that for quite a period of time.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Just a final word, Mr. Chairman. I don't mean to belabour some of the inadequacies of the Facility Association for too long.

On the question of timing the issue still remains, Mr. Minister, that you have had almost two years—not you personally but your ministry and your government—from the promise to bring in compulsory auto insurance back in February 1978, to the realization of the fact in the dying days of November 1979. It seems to me that in two years, with some sort of proper planning the government and the ministry could have found the time to bring this to the House so that members would have had a chance to examine this thoroughly in a committee outside of the committee of the whole House.

Mr. Foulds: Where was the two-for-one tree promise for one? Now we are fighting that.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That's right, here we get another example.

On another issue, the issue of the select committee, I have a great deal of respect for the select committee on company law, but that doesn't make them perfect. If the minister will remember the detail of the report from which he just read, he will recall there was a dissent to that report on the issue of public auto insurance. Need I say more about that? If you had moved with such a plan we wouldn't be having the kind of debate we are having now.

[8:15]

The matter of trust of the superintendent of insurance is not the issue. As a member of the assembly I think there are certain things which the members of the assembly have the right to examine; and of course I have my preferences. I don't think the minister will disagree with me when I say I think it would have been better if members of the assembly had a chance to go through a proposed plan of operation from the facility and make their comments and suggestions or philosophical differences by a party and cert of the timing.

Finally, I don't find any difficulty in criticizing the proposed plan of operation for this Facility Association. I may have an anticorporate bias, but let me say in the area I come from and from the background I have, I know maybe a bit more about democracy in the parliamentary sense, or democracy in the street sense, the city sense or the trade union sense, than I do about democracy in the corporate sense.

From what I can tell about corporate democracy, it doesn't exist. I have a great deal of difficulty justifying what passes for democratic rights within the Facility Association, when engrained in article four of the Facility Association plan of operation is a procedure that allows voting by the amount of money one has. If one has around half a million dollars that allows one vote; if one has approximately 10 times that amount it means five votes; that is not democracy in the way I know it in Hamilton Centre. Maybe that's the way democracy operates on Bay Street, and maybe that's the kind of thing some people in the government opposite would hold up as fine examples of corporate democracy, but that is not democracy as I know it.

I have serious concerns about any organization that operates in the kind of way that the bigger one is and the more money one has the more votes one has. That provides cause for me to question the Facility Association, regardless of who supports it as a concept. I think there are real problems resulting from the fact the assembly hasn't had enough time to look at the Facility Association. I think there are problems that result from the fact the plan of operation has never been before the assembly and will not be before the assembly this year. I think it is unfortunate, since I think we had the time to find a better way to handle this bill.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I can understand the differences in the member's view as long as it was insurance under conventional methods.

I would like to say just one thing on this democracy and the more money one has. I think the member, if he would look at it objectively, would realize this is corporate responsibility. The multiple vote is based on the fact the more risk one is carrying on one's shoulders the more one is going to have to pay out. If the member wants a pooling arrangement where those who are taking the biggest risks are going to be in a minority position, and there is no method to attempt to equalize that situation of the enormous financial responsibility they are carrying, then indeed I suggest to him he is verging on corporate anarchy.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I would prefer to call it democracy: one corporation, one vote.

Mr. Breithaupt: I have a comment with respect to subsection 15 of section 10. It is interesting to see the Regulations Act does not apply in this instance to an order of the superintendent made under the section. Why is that?

Hon. Mr. Drea: There is nothing sinister about it. On the recommendation of the legislative counsel when the superintendent makes an order it is his order, not an order as of the whole of the government or of the executive council as you would have in a regulation.

Mr. Breithaupt: So presumably this allows him a quicker way of getting an order in place, rather than going through the regulations approach with publication and approval by cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It could; but you could, of course, have a convenient day for putting out an order, if you were under the regulation method. Thursday is a very good day in the off season. It is possible you could get through all the intricacies on a Thursday, including having it filed. But if it happened to be a Monday, a Tuesday, or late Friday, it would be extremely difficult. It would be virtually in the form of an order which the courts hopefully would interpret as having been finally legitimized by the regulation when it came out.

I have been informed by other legislative counsel that without this subsection 15 there was doubt as to whether these were administrative orders or legislative matters. This provision dispels that doubt, it is an administrative order.

Mr. Sweeney: I would ask the minister's indulgence in raising this particular point, because I am not sure whether it belongs under section 10 or whether it may come under the making of regulations in section 15 or section 16.

I am thinking of a situation where a company makes a decision to pay out a claim and on the basis of that the insured has his premiums increased the next time around. If the one being insured wishes to challenge the company on whether they should have paid the claim and asks for the right to see the company's file, does that right reside as an article or a bylaw of the Facility Association or does that right reside as a regulation of the ministry? Where does such a right reside, if in fact it resides anywhere?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is not under the Facility Association. As I explained the other night, your policy doesn't have on it Facility Association. Your policy is a conventional one, from either the agency or the particular company it went to before you were referred to the Facility Association.

While the right to see your file isn't stated specifically in the Insurance Act, nonetheless it is established by administrative order for as long as there has been a superintendent of insurance. If the company refuses you your file, then obviously the superintendent of insurance will obtain that file and will take care of the matter. That has worked extremely well over the years.

I think in fairness to the companies, there hasn't been that reluctance, over the past few years, if indeed there ever was any, because the number of inquiries about it are diminishing quite rapidly in the superintendent's office. I say that on the basis of particular referrals from members of the Legislature. Quite obviously, with the increased scope of individual members of the Legislature, if there were ever any real difficulty out there I am sure it would be reflected in the inquiries being referred to the superintendent of insurance.

Mr. Sweeney: If I may react just very briefly to that. The question was raised at this time because a constituent of mine had that very problem. It was brought to the attention of at least the superintendent's office, if not the superintendent himself. My recollection is that the company more or less told us to go jump in the lake. We didn't in fact get the information we wanted. When we challenged the company, they said there was nothing that forced them to do so, it was entirely at their discretion whether they should do so.

The reason I am raising it at this particular point, Mr. Minister, is that I'm wondering whether or not the sort of general bylaws of this Facility Association might say they are or are not going to let our insured people see the files. I am raising the point in that context. I wonder whether or not we shouldn't have something more concrete if the experiences I and my constituents have had are in any way a general experience?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I say to the honourable member, I don't know who told him that showing the file was a discretionary matter. That may have been an initial reaction to the letter, but I would be somewhat irate if a carrier were to tell the superintendent of insurance this was a discretionary matter. After he came down from the ceiling, there would be a sudden summons for a chat.

I understand the member's point, but the Facility Association wouldn't have his record. The record he wants to check is how the Facility Association rated him which would be with the carrier or the agent on the face of his policy. There is no need to query the Facility Association. By the same token, the policy must show the classification into which he is placed and he has every right to challenge that.

I am informed by the superintendent of insurance that we rarely have cases where the customer is in doubt. In this case, the member says the customer apparently is still in doubt. I would like to see that case, because as I said to the member the administrative practice has been there a long time and collectively, is working extremely well. I really would like to see the specifics on this matter, and I am sure the superintendent would like to take a look. It may be one thing to write a letter and say to somebody it is discretionary; it is not very discretionary if the superintendent of insurance orders it done.

It is very interesting. A member of this Legislature very seriously questioned his rating because he was being charged very high rates, although he was conviction free. He discovered these high rates were the result of a few things his son and wife hadn't got around to telling him. The son had a little bit more than one conviction; the wife had a little bit less than a perfect driving record. He apologized to the insurance company, but the point is, he had quite free access without us. So I would like to go into that particular case.

I give you section 12 of the Insurance Act: "The superintendent may direct to an insurer any inquiry touching the contracts or financial affairs of the insurer, and the insurer shall make prompt and explicit answer to any such inquiry, and in the case of refusal or neglect to answer is guilty of an offence."

So that I would like to see that.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Chairman, one last point: Do I also understand that an insured person has the right to challenge the company on the basis upon which his rate is set?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes; and the most effective way is through the superintendent of insurance, because the superintendent of insurance gets the documents and checks off that the rate actually has been applied correctly.

In most cases where a rate is challenged there has been a typographical error or some error in transmission, and it is settled very easily. In some cases more than one person has been driving the vehicle and they sometimes haven't exactly confided with the insured. These things are done very amicably.

The difficulty is that the accident reports or the driver's record of the accidents does not show who was at fault. Obviously, if a person has been with a company for years and the company paid out a claim, they know that person was at fault. But when people changing insurance companies for any number of reasons—they like somebody better or rates or convenience or they have moved to another area—they are a fresh case. The convictions are listed on an MTC abstract, but one of the difficulties is it may say Mr. Drea has had two accidents, but it doesn't say whether Mr. Drea was at fault or innocent. It just says there has been an accident involving me reported. Then, of course, you get into additional information.

When you've been with one company and it has paid out or collected for you and handled the matter, obviously from its own records it knows. Sometimes you get into an area of difficulty when they want to know some details about the accident and so on. Sometimes it's also true that a motorist who was in an accident is really convinced he is innocent and he's really upset when the insurance company pays out. It's all right for you to feel you're innocent and that person up there really did it to you, but when you get down to the objectivity of it there has to be responsibility assigned and the one group which does this is the company. People say, "The insurance company paid out because it was cheaper to settle than to fight it in a court." That's a very difficult thing to sustain, because obviously then everybody would be paying out great amounts of money to stay out of court and the whole system wouldn't be there.

In addition to that section I read we have the catch-all, which is probably the greatest catch-all of all, the "unfair discrimination" clause, which is section 388 of the Insurance Act. We can call them in on anything we regard as potentially discriminatory and the obligation is on the carrier to show it is not discriminatory, in other words that the rate or class or what have you in the policy is verified and is on the basis of objectivity rather than a particular whim.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Only one last question, Mr. Chairman, before we leave the Facility Association part. It arises out of the Facility Association board of directors list the minister gave me. I have two questions: Does the minister feel it's inappropriate for those insurance companies that were nabbed by the Anti-Inflation Board for overcharging their consumers to be represented on the Facility Association board of directors; secondly, does he not think it's improper for a member of the board of directors of the Facility Association to be either resident outside Ontario or representative of a firm from outside Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Drea: On the second one, very simply the answer is no, because of course people don't necessarily just drive or have accidents in the province of Ontario.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What's that got to do with it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: You may be driving your vehicle in another province where you're hit by an uninsured driver and the same Facility Association may become involved in the other province. I doubt if there would be anybody from Saskatchewan, British Columbia or Manitoba. Their systems are a little different; their insurance is really only valid as long as you are in the province.

Going back to the first one about the AIB—

Mr. Foulds: What was that?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The AIB.

Mr. Foulds: The way you muttered—

Hon. Mr. Drea: I would say to the member for Port Arthur that I've been accused of a lot of things in this Legislature but never of speaking in less than very pungent tones.

Mr. Foulds: Pungent is sometimes not clear.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I'm no defender of profiteering, nor a great admirer of the AIB, but it is far too simplistic a statement to say "we're nabbed by the AIB."

Mr. M. N. Davison: It's true though.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, it is true, but it is true on the statistical and guideline basis devised by the AIB.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Well?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will tell the member. The AIB rated insurance companies on the basis that the best insurance company was the one that paid out lots of claims, had constant losses and didn't try to get good drivers, and so on and so forth.

Mr. M. N. Davison: You can't cover up the Allstate $15 million ripoff.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I'm not covering up for anybody. I would say to the honourable member—and I'm going to make it short and sweet—the answer to the first part of his question is no; the answer to the second part is no.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I can understand the AIB ripoff part because I've raised this issue numerous times with the ministry—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not with me.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Oh yes, I have raised it with you. I'll be happy to get the Hansard out for the minister. I raised it with you on second reading debate of this bill and I raised it during your first set of estimates in the House. If the minister can't recall, I'll be happy to get copies of both of those Hansards so he can read them.

I can understand the way the government has reacted to the AIB ripoff and I can understand their kidglove approach with Allstate which is guilty of nothing short of profiteering, but the out-of-province one I'm not quite sure I understand.

Under the current Facility Association there are only two out-of-province companies or individuals named on the board of directors. If the minister says there is no reason for a BC, Saskatchewan or Manitoba representative, I'm not at all sure of the reason for representatives from Quebec and Alberta, without representatives from the other provinces in the country. I'm not quite sure I understand his argument.

Is his argument that we have to have out-of-province representation in case an Ontario driver is driving in one of those provinces? If that's his argument, then he should have somebody on here from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, what have you—or the United States, because we have drivers who zip across the border on occasion.

If that's his argument, I'm not quite sure—What is his argument on the out-of-province one?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Very simply, these are where their head offices are. I'm sorry I misunderstood the member's question.

All these companies are licensed in Ontario. They do business here. They have many operations here. It's a simple fact of having on the association board a director from that company and where that particular person resides doesn't matter. All these companies have capital in this province. They have offices. They have agents or they are direct sellers. They have been in business here for a very long time.

I don't know what the member's suspicions are about the province of Quebec. There's a company there that sells insurance in this province. It's going to carry a portion of the risk. Why shouldn't somebody from that company be on the association's board of directors?

You know for a man who believes in international trade unions that is a question that should be asked.

Mr. M. N. Davison: All the servicing carriers are Ontario companies; every one of them. But on the board of directors of the Facility Association it appears to me there is somebody who is the general manager of Western Union Insurance Company and the address given for this person is a Calgary address.

Is the minister suggesting that that person, Mr. Kenny, is resident in Ontario personally but the head office of the company he represents is in Alberta?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes. Because the company is licensed to sell in Ontario. There are companies whose head offices are in the UK; they're licensed to sell in Ontario. There may be a company that has its head office in Ontario and is not licensed to sell here. I don't understand the member's concern about the geography.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Let me put it very simply. We have a Facility Association to deal with problems in Ontario that is selling to a captive market of Ontario citizens. What I don't understand is why 20 per cent—unless my mathematics are wrong—of the board of directors is from out of the province or representative of companies from out of Ontario. I don't see why it isn't an all-Ontario board of directors.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Because the insurance companies that are licensed to sell in this province have their head offices and their operations in other areas. If a company licensed to sell in Ontario happens to have a head office in Alberta, none the less it is a Canadian company. The person who is sitting on the board is a Canadian.

The simple fact of the matter is that company is bearing a proportion of the risk in Ontario. If you're talking about the gentleman from Alberta, he is not sitting there because of what happens in Alberta. He's representing his firm, which is assuming this risk.

Remember, the Facility Association isn't for you, as I presume you're not a high-risk driver. The Facility Association isn't an insurance company, it is a pooling arrangement. The directorship and so forth are based upon the servicing carriers. Secondly, the votes in there are based upon the degree of responsibility for those high-risk drivers.

If you want to turn it around and have compulsory insurance without the Facility Association and just say, "Mr. Motorist, go on out and try to buy it," then say so. It's a pooling arrangement that allows prompt and proper issuance of insurance. Secondly, it doesn't disturb someone like me who happens to insure with a relatively small company, because if that company were compelled to take a large number of high risks, and those high risks proved accurate, then my premium would have to go up because that company would have to recover its money to stay in business. It's a pooling arrangement. I don't understand the concern.

Section 10 agreed to.

On section 11:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Davison moves that section 11 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the words, "and the minister shall then lay the report before the assembly if it is in session or, if not, at the next ensuing session."

Hon. Mr. Drea: We will accept the motion.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I understand the minister is going to accept the amendment as offered.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Are you going to talk or not? If you're going to talk, I'll listen and then I'll have to make up my mind.

Mr. Foulds: You already said you'd accept it.

Mr. McClellan: I heard you.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What? I thought I heard you say you were going to accept it.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, he did.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Then I will sit down.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Let's hear what the member for Kitchener has to say about the proposed amendment.

Mr. Breithaupt: No, I'm quite prepared to listen to the proposer, Mr. Chairman. I would have presumed this information would be included in the annual report anyway. Why it would have to be precisely, or separately, brought before the assembly is beyond me. I am interested to hear what the proposer has to say.

Mr. M. N. Davison: There are reports and unless a report specifically has to be tabled before the assembly, it's up to the minister to decide.

I might remind the Liberal critic that until a very short time ago, this was one of the few ministries, if not the only ministry in the entire government, that wasn't compelled by legislation to provide an annual report to members of the assembly; hence, there were no annual reports from the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to the assembly. The ministry now, however, provides them.

I'd like very much to nail this down and make sure it's a legislative requirement to provide those reports because, who knows, at some date there may be a minister more secretive than the current minister and we wouldn't necessarily be getting those reports tabled before the assembly. With them tabled before the assembly, we are then able to put them out to committee to examine anything that may be contained in that report.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's one of my responsibilities to table the annual report of the superintendent of insurance. We've said there will be a special section in there dealing with the Facility Association in addition to all else that is there. That is tabled before the assembly.

Yes, I'll accept this amendment but as I said the other night, I consider it redundant.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Why accept it then? Why put the taxpayers to the extra cost?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Because I have to do it anyway.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Why do it twice?
[8:45]

Hon. Mr. Drea: We don't have to do it twice, it will only be done once.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You don't need the amendment at all.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will say to the member for Rainy River, I regard it as redundant. I am sure he regards it as redundant. I am sure the member of Kitchener regards it as redundant. But there seems to be a paranoia around here that unless you get things like this spelled out, they don't occur.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You have given a commitment that you are going to do it, so why put the taxpayer—

Hon. Mr. Drea: In all fairness, if the member was here the other night, the suggestion was that things might change, and that somebody would come along who would ignore the particular commitment.

It isn't going to cost the taxpayer any more, I will still table the same blue-covered report with the Clerk. Obviously it is perfectly available to committee or to anything else.

Mr. M. N. Davison: With the greatest respect, whatever the personal guarantees of the minister, they are not worth anything after he has left that ministry. I am sure I can argue with the current minister to live up to his guarantees. But it is clear that when ministers change portfolios in that government, the guarantees of the former minister go with that person to his new hunting ground.

I suggest the member for Rainy River read section 11 and he will find the following phrase, regardless of what it is the minister says, "The superintendent shall make an annual report to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations on the affairs of the association." There is nothing in that section which guarantees that this report will find its way before the assembly, unless we adopt something like the amendment I propose, and I would like to make sure.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further discussion?

All those in favour of Mr. Davison's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Foulds: You should have said "aye," Frank.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I did, but I can realize some of the sentiments in here.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: There was no question that the "nays" were much louder than the "ayes."

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, you heard mine. I tried to be as loud as possible.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: No, I didn't.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, this puts me in a very difficult position, because you made your ruling and it is extremely difficult for a minister of the government to challenge a ruling. There are some implications in that.

I think in fairness, Mr. Chairman, the member was assured, and I think other members may have been lulled into a certain sense of complacency, by the fact that the amendment appeared to be rather routine in its passage. It puts me in an extremely difficult position, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: By unanimous consent I am prepared to reopen the matter.

Mr. Breithaupt: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if the minister had given an undertaking that this should be included, then the House should honour that, and perhaps we could take the vote again.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: With unanimous consent then, I will place the vote again. You have heard the amendment.

All those in favour of Mr. Davison's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion this time the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Section 11, as amended, agreed to.

On section 12:

Mr. M. N. Davison: Knowing the minister's dislike for legalese as it appears in legislation, I have a question on 12(2)(a). I think we have come across a new language called corporatese. I am not sure, in the context of that subsection, what the phrase, "an insurer running off its business" means. I wonder if the minister would enlighten me as to that. Could the minister tell me exactly what is meant by that phrase?

Hon. Mr. Drea: That is where the company has the consent of the superintendent to cancel its business. It has become insolvent or is winding up its business for any number of reasons. Bear in mind, the company cannot cancel policies. If the company is going out of business and there is still a remnant of policy left, it obviously has to have some vehicle where, with consent, it can dispose of that contract. It may be a company which has become insolvent.

I know an automobile insurance company that is on the ropes now because of certain other circumstances in the province. They have some general lines not involving automobile or casualty insurance. They are in a rather delicate position at the moment.

There is always a provision in an insurance act that if a company gets into a technical insolvency, which means it has enough money to pay claims now but it has no reserves to anticipate future business, no reserves on the honour and premium of additional policies, the superintendent of insurance has the authority to begin a winddown procedure to make sure the honour and premium insurance is reinsured elsewhere so the particular person who is insured is protected.

The superintendent has to approve the company going out of this business and it must do so under conditions ordered by the superintendent. This is of great benefit to the customer. If a company were going out of business because of insolvency or because it didn't like eastern Canada any more, or any number of reasons and decided to cancel its automobile line, there are people out there with seven, eight, nine, 10 months of insurance left and here is a company saying, "No, you can't cancel or transfer to somebody else," that person will have proper insurance, proper service and so on. The reason for this is because the bulk of the section deals with the fact a company cannot cancel.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I didn't raise this because I disagreed, I raised it because I don't understand. I take it what the minister is saying is the phrase in this context, "an insurer running off its business" means not that it is getting rid of one or more contracts, not that it is getting out of the automobile insurance business, but that as a corporate entity, it is disappearing. Do I understand him rightly?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I don't know whether it is going to disappear or not. It is not getting rid of one or two high-risk policies, it is not getting rid of part of its portfolio; it is getting rid of all its portfolios.

All we are concerned with in this act is the automobile insurance. It may very well be they decided there is not enough volume for them. Perhaps it is a small company which at one time or another had volume in a specific area of Ontario. I can see something like this occurring with the extension of the Farm Mutual, the Ontario companies, into this field. They may decide the volume isn't sufficient. They want to run off the business.

The difficulty is without this the customer would be left protected, but not quite as well and as conveniently protected, because of the overall thing that you cannot cancel. It's not one or two or a portion, it is all.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The company then has to get rid of all of its automobile business. It can keep any other business that it has—

Mr. Breithaupt: All of the one kind.

Hon. Mr. Drea: All of the one kind, all of the auto.

Mr. M. N. Davison: All of the auto, right. It can keep any other insurance business or—

Hon. Mr. Drea: It can't keep you as an excellent driver and cancel everyone else.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Yes.

Mr. Breithaupt: Or vice versa.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I have only one other question about that. Is there some procedure by which that company can at another time, more than a week later I suppose, get back into the auto insurance business?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Only with the approval of the superintendent.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I take it that approval would be withheld if the superintendent had some suspicions about the reason for which the company was running off its business?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Once we have a wind-down or the running off of a business, the person historically hasn't come back. It's a big decision, because first of all, they're letting go their whole portfolio; they are not going to have any renewals; they are virtually having to start all over again. We will want to know, since they left at this particular time and they are out, what terribly unusual circumstance has brought them back in to make them think they will do well this time. We would really like to have it documented.

There are some examples. A number of American carriers vacated the province some years ago because of the refusal of the superintendent of insurance to allow them to pass on rates that reflected losses in the United States. They felt because they had substantial losses in the United States and had raised their rates there, they should be entitled to that identical raise in Ontario, notwithstanding their claim experience in this province was much lower and didn't justify that. On the basis of not being able to treat Ontario as part of a continental market, they left.

All right. If one of those were to attempt to come back, I will say before the superintendent of insurance even discussed the matter seriously with them, both the minister and the superintendent would want to know what extraordinary thing had taken place that, having disposed of their business, their law firms, their offices, their whole portfolio, they suddenly found this possible. It just doesn't happen.

On the insolvency, of course, if there was an insolvency obviously they wouldn't be in a financial position to meet the tests to be able to come back anyway.

Mr. M. N. Davison: One very quick final aspect of that: Is it normal in the case of insolvency or maybe in some case that was suspicious, that the superintendent would be watching for the names of directors of that company reappearing under a different corporate name?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I can assure the honourable member, in that particular branch and in other branches of the ministry, we have pioneered the approaches that are going to be taken under the new Bankruptcy Act. I have assurances from the federal government in front of their poor draftsman who has been languishing for years trying to get one, that those tests will be there. Very, very simply, insurance is just too delicate, intricate and intimate and a dependency relationship where people have to rely on the integrity of the company to have standards that might be acceptable in some areas of the marketplace where the relationship is very impersonal.

Section 12 agreed to.

Section 13 agreed to.

On section 14:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Davison moves that section 14(2) of the bill be amended by adding the words, "the minimum penalty that may be imposed upon the insurer is $5,000" following the words, "subsection 1." [9:00]

He further moves that section 14(2) of the bill be amended by striking out "$25,000" in the third line and inserting in lieu thereof $50,000."

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Chairman, I have two reasons why I am concerned about this, the first dealing with the minimum. Since I have entered the assembly I have seen cases where, not only in this kind of legislation but in all sorts of legislation, we have what I would regard as substantial fine clauses of $25,000, $50,000 for a corporation, and a pattern of decisions handed down—fines of $300, fines of $27, fines of $600—time after time in other broad areas of legislation.

That worries me because that's no kind of fine for these sorts of corporations. It seems I bring this up every time I speak on one of these amendments, but Allstate, a $15 million ripoff type of corporation, you threaten them with a fine of $25,000 if they're caught breaking the law and they get a fine of $400. That's not a fine, that's a licence to operate. If we put in some kind of bare minimum—I'm suggesting $5,000 and we're willing to listen to a compromise, but I think $5,000 would be reasonable—I think that would be a good idea.

If the members think it's unfair to treat a corporation in that way, I would refer them to the way we are treating citizens of Ontario under this same legislation. I refer them to section 2 where we talk about fines for individuals contravening that section.

If you get caught driving without your insurance card, the appropriate section says a person "guilty of an offence and on summary conviction is liable to a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $2,500." If we're going to say that we're going to dump on an individual to the tune of $500 I think we have to have a parallel sort of situation for the corporation that breaches these laws.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Five thousand dollars and $50,000?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Five thousand and $50,000.

Hon. Mr. Drea: All right.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Drea: One of the reasons why the minimum wasn't put in there—and with all due respect I think I've got the largest fines under my prosecutions that have ever been imposed against corporations, especially in the business practices area—the reason we didn't put in a minimum is that the penalty that is not here in dollar terms is far more substantial, because it can be loss of licence.

However, I agree, for the sake of consistency. The member is quite right. The penalties for those individuals who are convicted are laid out very, very graphically for the rather obvious reason that they are the key to enforcement, they are the key to adherence to this legislation. Five thousand dollars and $50,000 is fine with me. There was a reason for the figures in the bill. It wasn't an ignorance of the implications, but it was because the penalty, the loss of the right to do business, which is enormously substantial, wasn't in that particular section. So the amendment the member proposed is all right.

It is $5,000 and $50,000 on your amendment?

Mr. M. N. Davison: It is.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Davison moves that section 14(4) be amended by adding the words "not less than $5,000 and" following the word "of" in the fourth line.

He further moves that section 14(4) of the bill be amended by striking out "$25,000" in the fifth line and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000."

Mr. M. N. Davison: For the record, I might say this simply applies to the association as opposed to the corporate offenders that might have been cited under section 14(2).

Motion agreed to.

Section 14, as amended, agreed to.

On section 15:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Davison moves that section 15(a) of the bill be deleted and that subsequent subsections be renumbered accordingly.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Chairman, this is one of the subsections that always bother me, the regulatory powers as opposed to the power of the assembly, and it is one that has appeared in a number of proposed bills from the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. On at least one previous occasion that I can recall—the old Income Tax Discounters Act—I moved the same amendment and the then minister accepted it.

I don't know what the current minister's position is on this kind of regulatory power, but it seems to me it would be a fairly modest sort of amendment to the bill if the minister wanted to exempt any person or group of persons. If it isn't modest, then one assumes it is highly controversial; if it is highly controversial, it is the kind of thing which should come back to the assembly rather than the exemption taking place by regulatory powers.

I think it is important that as frequently as possible we strike blows in this assembly for government by legislation rather than government by regulation. If there is good reason for the minister to want to exempt any individual person or corporation, or any group of persons or corporations, or what have you, from conditions set out in the regulations, then he should come back to the assembly and provide those good and sufficient reasons.

I would urge members to support this amendment so that we in this assembly can be making the decisions rather than having the decisions made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, with respect to this amendment, I wish to advise you that we are completely opposed to the making of this amendment.

If the member had looked at the first volume of our report, in chapter 24, he would have seen that particular representations were made to the select committee by the Conservative Mennonite Churches of Ontario; this report, of course, was agreed to by the four members of his party at the time.

The way this exemption is being handled is by having the section—section 2, as I recall—requiring that insurance be compulsory, and this section 15(a) is what is available to us to accommodate this particular exemption. There are some other possible exemptions which may occur with respect to some of the self-insuring operations of government, and that is something the cabinet may decide on.

In any event, the exemption is there following the request of this special and small group which, because of religious conviction, has asked not to have to purchase insurance but will be covering their obligation by the placing of a bond, or some indenture of that nature, in accordance with the instructions and directions of the superintendent.

The bond approach is the way in which this problem has been resolved satisfactorily in several of the northern United States, and it is one which I believe can be readily accommodated following the comments in the report and following the traditions of this group, which is not a new group suddenly on the horizon but one that has followed this substantial matter of principle as long as there have been automobiles in Ontario.

As a result, Mr. Chairman, the continuation of this exemption, knowing its purpose, is something that we favour and we will oppose the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the minister wish to reply?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Very briefly, Mr. Chairman. The member for Kitchener, who is also the chairman of the select committee, has put forward his case. We do intend to exempt that religious community, no question about it. I don't know under which particular standard I will exempt but if I do not have the flexibility to exempt, there's no question at all that the Mennonite community will provide an acceptable device that will ensure prompt payment whenever any of its congregation are at fault.

If I have legislation, I don't want to be in a position of being so much affected by the details of the legislation that I can't, from time to time—through the superintendent of insurance—be flexible. The only other one we foresee is the federal government. I suppose I could start a war with the federal government by saying, "As of December 1, your vehicles had better have insurance with an insurer within the meaning of this act." The federal government will tell me to go whistle and I'm rather afraid if we go to the courts that the courts will tell me that the federal government can tell me to do the same.

I do want some flexibility in here. There may be another religious community, there may be other places. I happen to think that government is big enough so that from time to time it can be flexible enough to meet very substantial and sincere matters, particularly of conscience or a religious or a moral sanction that people have imposed upon themselves as part of their beliefs. I don't think it weakens the act at all but I do want the flexibility and will not accept that particular regulation.

I don't understand the suspicion about this bill. I am also directed by this report—it tells me what to do. The member shakes his head. If there's anything in here that's clear, it's where it says, "Given exemption to a religious community that is established . . ." et cetera.

If you want to start putting this in legislation I'm going to be faced with all kinds of definitions of religious communities, et cetera, one of which I have now on another matter. If I can deal with it in regulations, the intent of the select committee will be met in a flexible manner. I really don't see the need to put it into legislation, which only ties my hands and then I have to start getting all kinds of sections in there to make sure we can deal with every eventuality that comes along.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'm not going to argue to convince members of the other two parties to support my position. I would like to explain the situation in regard to the recommendations of the select committee and the way in which the minister has chosen to act on them.

The minister had two choices before him when he saw he wanted to accept those recommendations. The first choice was to put them into legislation and say the select committee has proposed a valid exemption that this church should not be subject to all of these various changes, that the situation for this church should be as follows, that the situation for the federal government should be as follows.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I can't do that with the feds, you know that.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The minister just argued that if he had to, he may have to make some adjustments because of that.

[9:15]

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I'm sorry if I misled the member. I want to tell him there is no way, constitutionally, this province can say to the federal government it is going to do this on its own property and with its own property. That's the point I was trying to make. The federal government does not have to buy compulsory insurance. They can tell me they are self-insured, and we have to issue them a licence.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I make the point only with the church that is cited in the select committee report. The minister had the capacity to put that in the legislation so that church and its members would be exempt from those provisions and could continue to take care of their problems as they have always done. Every member of this House would have respected that decision.

The second choice the minister had was to give himself a broad power by way of regulation to exempt persons and corporations and anything else from those parts of the act. And the minister didn't do that. He took a third alternative, which I think is not an appropriate one. I would ask that people understand what that exemption power is.

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations, the cabinet may make regulations, exempting any person or group of persons from the provisions of this act, subject to such conditions as may be set out in the regulations. The "subject to" is not relevant because those regulations will be set by the same process.

This means the minister can exempt any person or group of persons from the provisions of this act. This means the minister can decide that Bell Telephone can be self-insured. It means the minister can do a lot of things and those exemptions will in no way be ultra vires because he will have such a broad power to make regulations, to make exemptions by way of regulation.

It seems to me the minister had two choices. One was to put it in the legislation so we could deal with that problem. The second was to give the minister a very narrow and well-defined regulatory power. The third choice, which the minister has made, is to provide himself with a power to exempt anybody, for any reason, from any provision of the legislation. That's not flexibility; that's pretty far from flexibility. We run into that so frequently in this House. The government can change a piece of legislation by regulation, over a fairly short period of time, so that it's almost unrecognizable from the original legislation passed in the assembly.

I really believe that kind of broad power to exempt is inappropriate in this case and in almost every other case I've seen since I've been a member here. I suggest we remove that power and put into place this exemption for this church or give the minister a better-defined power to exempt.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In brief reply, the minister considers the flexibility that he wants only fitting and proper.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Davison's amendment will please say "aye." All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 15 agreed to.

On section 16:

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the first thing to do is to deal with subsection 1, which refers to the carrying of an insurance card. The repeal of that subsection causes no problem at all.

Section 214 of the Insurance Act deals with certain exceptions from liability. They are set out under three circumstances: subsection (a) refers to liability which is imposed by any workmen's compensation law upon any person insured by the contract; subsection (b) refers to liability resulting from bodily injury to or death of any person insured by the contract; subsection (c) refers to liability resulting from bodily injury to or the death of any employee of any person insured by the contract while engaged in the operation or repair of the automobile.

It could be said then that section 214 deals with three particular themes: first, the workmen's compensation situation; second, a husband and wife situation; and, third, the garage employee who may take the car out for a test drive and be involved in an accident, resulting in some question as to which insurance applies. It seems to me it may be reasonable, perhaps, to remove the second matter of the husband and wife circumstance; indeed, it may even be reasonable to consider removing the garage circumstance; but I cannot understand why we are removing the compensation board situation.

I asked for comments from various parts of the industry with respect to the sections of the bill and the ones dealing particularly with section 16 have been referred to me by the legal division of the Insurance Bureau of Canada, through the actions of Mr. Kennedy, who is the assistant general counsel. Mr. Kennedy reviews these various parts repealed by section 16(2) and he refers to this particular area I referred to dealing with the Workmen's Compensation Board circumstance. His letter, in part, goes as follows:

"It seems to us that if an employee of a schedule two employer is injured or killed while driving a vehicle in the course of his employment, even if it is entirely due to his own fault, his employer is liable up to the Workmen's Compensation Board scale and would then, with the repeal of this particular provision, be able to make a claim against the automobile liability insurer. Quite frankly, this is an additional exposure for insurers and has nothing whatsoever to do with the introduction of compulsory automobile insurance. We would much prefer to see this provision retained, for it may have implications for insurance companies beyond what is expressed above.

"Paragraph (b) of section 214 has been repealed, presumably because of the introduction of the uninsured motorist cover. We are not very concerned about this, although it may have some odd results; for example, if I'm a passenger in my own vehicle and the driver is negligent, I'll be able to sue him and, if successful, recover from my own insurer.

"As in the case of paragraph (a), we feel that the repeal of paragraph (c) of section 214 has little, if anything, to do with the introduction of compulsory automobile insurance. While we're not terribly concerned about this, we would prefer to see it left as it is."

I pointed out the three component parts and the circumstances whereby perhaps the latter two may well be repealed and not considered important. The matter of the compensation board situation, though, is of some concern, and I'd appreciate hearing from the minister as to why he thinks the whole section should be repealed.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Quite frankly, the reason is that it is of such limited application we don't think it is significant. Secondly, we want the person to be able to have the claim settled as rapidly as possible. We feel by deletion of that section we just make it a little clearer. It's a compulsory program.

It's our concern that when we didn't have compulsory insurance a number of these things were introduced over a period of time, and now we are in the process of bringing in compulsory insurance we are trying to get rid of a number of things that may not be important any more. That was our particular choice on this. Were it to be left in I don't think it would be extremely significant, but in terms of faster and more efficient claims settlement, we think it might have a small benefit.

It is one of those sections that has been around for a while and I suppose that, as in any other field but particularly insurance, somebody has had a particular case involving its application and that is probably why it was in there in the first place. It is therefore carried on and when one has once relied upon it, perhaps in a different situation, then obviously one is somewhat reluctant to see it go. But quite frankly, its significance staying or its significance going is very, very minor, because of its extremely limited application.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I have managed to become totally lost. The member for Kitchener had a set of amendments that I received the other day, a replacement set of amendments, and I thought I just heard him discussing the section that one of the amendments applied to. Does that mean that—

Mr. Breithaupt: If I may, Mr. Chairman, my amendments refer to subsection 3 of this section. In this instance we are dealing with subsection 2, which is the repeal of another section of the Insurance Act, section 214. The three areas I referred to are the background of section 214, which I will bring over to the member so that he knows what I am talking about.

Mr. M. N. Davison: My understanding is that what we have just been discussing is section 16(2).

Mr. Chairman: Correct.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Okay, now I understand the whole process.

Mr. Chairman: Any further questions on section 16(2)?

Shall section 16(2) stand as part of the bill?

Agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Section 16(3), the member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, this is where things are going to get a little involved and I hope you will be able to bear with me because I will be, at some length, discussing a variety of amendments with the hopes that they can all be turned into a final master amendment that will be put at the end of my comments.

Section 16(3) deals with a rewording of section 230 of the act. This rewording is somewhat intricate and, as you will see from the bill, goes on for some two and a half pages. A number of matters were raised with me by Mr. Kennedy concerning some possible changes that might clarify section 230, as I will refer to it from now on.

These matters dealt primarily with certain changes which might somewhat clarify the details of those persons who would be insured under the contract of insurance. The various changes that were suggested were set out at length in the letter I had received dealing with various minor sub-parts of this section 230.

There were four of these areas and I believe that the legislative counsel and I have been able to agree on a reworking of the entire section so it will include the variety of amendments that had been suggested and make it somewhat more clear just as to how the section is to proceed.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I should advise you that the amendments I had proposed with respect to parts of section 230(2)(b)(iii) have all been accommodated and therefore, I will withdraw those three amendments you have.

In addition, there was an amendment by the minister with respect to a correction of wording to include the phrase "employee or partner," which I believe you will have before you. I understand that too will be withdrawn.

I will now proceed to give you the new amendments which will be proposed and which include all the changes that have been referred to, as best we have been able to do, together with somewhat clearer language with respect to the use of the term "uninsured automobile." This is the result of a complete reworking of the portion following the section 230(2)(b)(iii).

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Breithaupt moves that section 230(2)(b)(iii) of the Insurance Act, as set out in section 16(3) of the bill, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

“(iii) in respect of a claim for bodily injuries or death;

“a. any person while an occupant of the insured automobile;

“b. the insured and, if residing in the same dwelling premises as the insured, his or her spouse and any dependent relative of either; 1. while an occupant of an uninsured automobile, or 2. while not the occupant of an automobile or of railway rolling stock that runs on rails who is struck by an uninsured or unidentified automobile;

“c. if the insured is a corporation, unincorporated association or partnership, any director, officer, employee or partner of the insured for whose regular use the insured automobile is furnished and, if residing in the same dwelling premises as such person, his or her spouse and any dependent relative of the person or the spouse, 1. while an occupant of an uninsured automobile, or 2. while not the occupant of an automobile or of railway rolling stock that runs on rails who is struck by an uninsured or unidentified automobile, where such director, officer, employee or partner or his or her spouse is not the owner of an automobile insured under a contract.”

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I seem to have been able to clear out most of the members of the House with the placing of that amendment.

This matter is a particularly intricate one, and there have been some attempts to shorten the proposed amendment as set out in the draft bill by using to some extent the term “uninsured automobile,” which is later defined as subsection d of the subsection to which I am now referring. While it may surprise a number of members in the House, the amendment I am proposing clarifies somewhat the situation that now exists, believe it or not.

There is a further amendment later on, but I think at this point with respect to section 230(1) and (2) as set out in section 16(3) of the act, that would complete my remarks in that area.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments or questions on the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I find it very helpful in clarifying the act and we will accept it.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I will offer no comments because I wouldn't want to destroy the accord and the rapport the member for Kitchener and the minister have developed over the past 20 minutes.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, let it be shown for the record tonight, I was very magnanimous when the member for Hamilton Centre, by misadventure, lost his amendment. It was this minister who prevailed upon the chairman at the time to get unanimous consent. I want to get some recognition for this. My usual approach is unlike Harold Ballard.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Are there any further comments on the amendment before the committee?

Mr. M. N. Davison: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: What is your point of privilege?

Mr. M. N. Davison: The minister has raised the incident which occurred earlier in the evening and said it was part of his magnanimous gesture towards me, so my amendment could be incorporated in the act. Mr. Chairman, while I agree his gesture was magnanimous I can't agree it was directed towards being of assistance to me but rather to the Liberal Party so they could correct a voting error that would have blotted their record for decades to come.

Mr. Chairman: That wasn't a point of privilege. Are there any further comments or questions on Mr. Breithaupt's amendment to section 16(3)?

Mr. Foulds: I would just like to say, Mr. Chairman, the minister dealt with that amendment with the same foresight and talent and dexterity he dealt with the amendment by my colleague from Hamilton Centre.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, moving right along, we have an amendment which will become section 230(2a).

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Breithaupt moves that section 230 of the Insurance Act as set out in section 16(3) of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection (2a):

“Where a dependent relative referred to in section 230(2)(b)(iii)

(a) is the owner of an automobile insured under a contract or,

(b) sustains bodily injuries or dies as the result of accident while the occupant of his own uninsured automobile, such relative shall be deemed not to be a dependent relative for the purposes of this section.”

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, as a result of the earlier group of amendments that have now been replaced by this composite amendment, it was necessary to add a subsection which would protect a claim in a circumstance where a person may be considered to be a dependent relative. The example that may be used, as I understand it, is if the parents know a son's car is not insured and they get into it and drive along with him, they cannot claim against their own insurance coverage. This problem may be resolved because in the ordinary circumstance the young person might be considered a dependent of the parents, but in a circumstance where the situation is reversed, there may be problems on coverage.

The details of this will probably have to be dealt with in a regulation to ensure that there is no gap in the coverage that is presumed, but in the meantime it is my understanding that subsection 2a which is now proposed will bolster subsection 2 as it has now been accepted by the committee to complete the intent of the legislation.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is the view of the legislative counsel that this further clarifies the act by reinforcing the previous amendment which has been agreed upon.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Breithaupt moves that section 230(5) of the act as set out in section 16(3) of the bill be amended by adding in the first line thereof the words "or available" after the third word "made."

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments on section 16?

Mr. Breithaupt: No, Mr. Chairman, not directly on the section, other than to comment on an additional area that had been raised with respect to how section 230 would fit into the act in accordance with section 234(a) thereof.

Section 234(a) of the act refers to the rights of unnamed insureds and it deals with particulars of liability. It was suggested that reference should be made to section 230 as well as sections 231 and 232 in this section 234(a).

I understand from the legislative counsel that a review of the particulars in the act shows there are presently just three circumstances when uninsured motor coverage ordinarily applies. It applies, of course, when a person is driving his own automobile and where the occupants of that automobile are in collision with a vehicle that is uninsured. It also covers the occupant of an uninsured motor vehicle. Thirdly, of course, it deals with the abilities to protect a pedestrian.

In discussing the matter with legislative counsel there was, of course, an understanding of the concerns that might occur with respect to the liability chain that would exist as sections 231 and 232 would be referred to. There may be some requirement to consider, at some point in the future, whether section 230 should also be referred to in section 234(a).

It is my understanding at the moment that the minister and his staff feel that it is not at present necessary to include section 230 in this listing. As a result I have made the point with respect to its history and background and I acknowledge that this is a matter which is going to be reviewed if necessary. With the knowledge that that review is going to occur, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: In other words, there is no amendment. Are there any further comments on section 16?

Mr. M. N. Davison: I want to be clear. The member for Kitchener is not going to place the amendment he had thought of placing?

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member has not placed an amendment.

Section 16, as amended, agreed to.

On section 17:

Mr. M. N. Davison: I have a question on a matter that is not clear from my reading of section 17. When the time comes in the very near future, that a motorist in the province has to buy compulsory auto insurance and that motorist had earlier paid the $150 fee to the motor vehicle accident claims fund, will he get a portion of that rebated to him?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No. It is no different. You have to take a look at the licensing period. You could have bought a new plate and paid $150 on January 1 of last year—although we don't get many takers for the $150 before February 27 or February 28—but you could have purchased it. You could decide to buy your licence sticker on December 1. But even without this you would still have to pay another $150.

The $150, or the penalty fee, was not insurance. That is the difference. It was not insurance. It was a penalty for saying you would not buy insurance—it is for the licence year. Your licence year can go 15 months. It could have gone from December 1, 1978, when the sticker or the plate was first issued, right through this year, so you get 15 months and one day, because there is February 29. So anybody showing up on that Saturday who wants a plate will have to sign the back of that form which states the insurance company and the number; it is no different.

Theoretically some years you could have paid the $150 and only carried the sticker for 10 months; you may have carried it for only one month. It is the same with the fee you pay for your licence plate. In some years, if you want to carry it to 15 months, okay, you divide the $80 by 15. Other years it might be 10.

There couldn't possibly be a rebate because you purchased nothing. You paid a penalty fee which didn't absolve you from paying dollar for dollar the claim that was against you. When you said, "No, I do not have insurance," that penalty fee was there and that went into the fund, but it gave you nothing.

I am the last to say there will not be some people complaining, because they really thought they bought insurance. I will tell you what we have done, because I don't want those licence plate lines to be inconvenienced. I don't want the responsible people of this province to have to wait a moment longer. There is a special telephone number and the licence issuers have been told, "Don't argue with these cats. Just put them on to this telephone number. The department of insurance in our ministry will deal with them." We want the lines to move nicely.

Mr. M. N. Davison: So the situation would be that if somebody bought a used car last week and paid the $150, then as of the time this comes into force they will immediately have to purchase compulsory automobile insurance?

Hon. Mr. Drea: You have to remember the licence issuing time is three months. You could have bought a used car last week and paid the $150. You don't have to buy another sticker until February 29. But after that Saturday, starting at 12:01 on Saturday morning, you cannot get a sticker or a plate of any description in this province—a new plate, a renewal, an interim, an anything—without having insurance.

Mr. M. N. Davison: It may be I totally misunderstood the way that fund was operated because I always had insurance and didn't personally go through it.

Does the minister mean that in a year, if a driver owned 12 different cars, he would on 12 separate occasions have paid the $150 fee?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, why do you think they cheated us in ever-increasing numbers?

Mr. Breithaupt: It is a fee, that's all.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You got nothing for it, it was a penalty fee. You were a bad actor; you had to pay into a fund so we could pay out from it.

Section 17 agreed to.

Sections 18 and 19 agreed to.

Bill 160, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Wells, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendments.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 160, The Compulsory Automobile Insurance Act.

CERTIFICATION OF TITLES ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 148, An Act to revise the Certification of Titles Act.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, you'll recall that perhaps when we last met on this bill I was leaving the chamber and trying to find the file because the bill was called somewhat—

Mr. Cunningham: Hastily?

Mr. Breithaupt:—hastily, that's exactly the word. In any event, this changes the Certification of Titles Act and the changes which are in the bill are certainly worthy of support.

The points set out do eliminate some of the steps that have occurred in the past with respect to certification of titles and a number of administrative procedures have been improved upon by the legislation.

The act is quite clear and I don't think there will be a need to go to committee if we can just have a couple of questions answered by the minister in response. The basic questions in which I'm interested deal with the assurance fund.

Can the minister advise us of the size of the fund at the present time, what claims have been paid out or may be pending, if any, and the reasons behind changing the maximum to $500 from the present $300? I recognize, of course, a minimum fee of $25 instead of the earlier $1 is quite understandable as these larger and more expensive properties move under the certification of titles.

There has been the tradition, even in the registry office areas, that under some circumstances there was the opportunity for lands in a certification area to go under the land titles system, whereby all the earlier possible easements, rights of way, old fence corners, or whatever it might be, would be cleared up and the title would be free and clear of any of those ancient wagon paths, driveways, or whatever might have been in the downtown part of the city, as a new, large project is being assembled.

I recognize the need for this assurance fund but, as these funds are built up over the years, one does wonder just how much is enough. Perhaps the minister can comment as to how he sees the present funds and their use. Are they simply sitting there waiting to be used and not being used for some provincial purpose that might be a better use?

Eventually, if we all go into the certification of titles, presumably that fund will become very wealthy. There may be some claims from time to time. That is only understandable. But if we can just get an idea of where the fund is at present, and what the expectations are, there would probably be no requirement, at least from my point of view, to go into committee.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, I have no great objection to anything in the bill to revise the Certification of Titles Act. I would make one request of the minister; perhaps he could respond by nodding his head. If the minister could address himself to a brief answer to the question, after I ask it, when he concludes debate, I don't see any need to send the bill to committee either. He could then save incredible amounts of time by that process.

Will the minister assure us that if this bill and the two other bills that are before us this evening, the Land Titles Act and the Registry Act, that when the ministry gets its Polaris project in full working order, which will totally revolutionize, speed up and make so simple the entire process, that will result in an adjustment of the ridiculously high fees that are charged by lawyers for assisting the home buyers of the province in making sure they have met all of the legal requirements that might be necessary? It seems to me that's a problem we have in this province. It's bad enough that we're not doing anything about mortgage rates; these lawyers are getting away with very high charges for what seems like not a great deal of work. I hope somehow this process of his will bring them into line.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, in addressing the member for Kitchener, the amount of the fund is $250,000. No claims are pending. The maximum is increased from $300 to $500. The Ontario rate remains at $1 per $1,000 of the combined value of land and buildings to reflect the increase in land values. The fund is not used for government purposes. It is held by an accountant of the Supreme Court.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Does that mean the answer is no?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The answer is no to what? That was in response to the member for Kitchener.

Regarding the second question that was raised, about lawyers' fees, quite obviously the member knows it is beyond my capability to use other than moral suasion concerning fees of the legal profession.

It may dazzle this Legislature, but I'm not one of those who thinks that solicitors in this province are overpaid.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

LAND TITLES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 149, An Act to amend the Land Titles Act.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have an opening comment?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I do not.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of comments I would like to make with respect to Bill 149.

In one way I think it's rather sad that the term "master of titles" is being removed from the traditions within Ontario. The registry office system has seemingly gobbled up the other program and this term is now going to be replaced by the term "land registrar." I rather thought the master of titles had a certain pleasingly archaic ring to it, but it's something which apparently is going to pass by in the name of progress.

There are only a couple of other items I would like to refer to. Again, other than for this brief amendment which the minister has to correct a typographical error, I would think there need be no lengthy term for this bill in committee.

In his reply perhaps the minister could refer particularly to section 20 of the bill and advise me if there have been any claims recently, or are any outstanding at the present time on this account. The account here is to be built up to the amount of $1 million if necessary and I would like to know what the size of the account is at the present time.

Most of the other sections in the bill deal with particular items, all of which are quite mechanical. But there are two that I think are worth referring to.

In section 35, matters are clearly set out that it will be "unnecessary to register consents under the Succession Duty Act in respect to death before 1970." In addition, in section 36 variance of the subsections therein also allows for automatic expiry of cautions that have been registered on titles to real property. There are two circumstances, of course, which I think are to be encouraged because they again work towards the removal of various encumbrances and additional paper work on the titles to a variety of properties. They will make the task of those buying and selling properties somewhat less burdensome and, perhaps, may even lower the costs as far as solicitors may be concerned.

The other item I would like to reflect upon for a moment is set out in section 49 where the maximum penalty for altering records is increased from $1,000 to $5,000. Can the minister advise me in his comments as to whether there have ever been any prosecutions under this section? Have there been any convictions and, if so, what sort of fines were levied?

I presume the occasional circumstance of the ruling-out of an undischarged mortgage or something like that may have occurred when, unfortunately, some fraudulent practices may have been entered into by the occasional solicitor or staff person. No doubt these matters reflected themselves eventually in various disciplinary or other actions by the law society, but if the minister could advise me of the circumstances of ever using this provision, I would appreciate hearing it.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I have difficulty with a part of this bill other than the two parts referenced by my colleague from Kitchener. It is another one of these bills, Mr. Speaker, which will tend to solve some of the problems in the process about which the minister and I were having a dialogue on the previous bill.

Just for the record, I think lawyers are overpaid on these kinds of transactions as it is now and I think they are going to be even more overpaid when the minister's speeded up, streamlined registry process goes into effect. I think it is about time we looked at the amount of money those people are making when they handle the sale of a home for an individual.

My major concern with the Land Titles Act doesn't have to do with the fact lawyers are overpaid on these transactions, but rather with the implications of section 40 and the other sections of this bill and the other legislation that affects condominiums.

At the moment I am prepared to accept and support the housekeeping portions of the Land Titles Act and its sister act, the Registry Act, with the exception of those sections that deal with the condominiums. I have a real problem with those parts of these two pieces of legislation.

Over the last decade one of the central problems we had with condominiums dealt with the registration process. When the government of Ontario could no longer ignore the demands of condominium unit owners in the province to step in and do a rewrite of the legislation, they finally appointed, as I am sure you will recall, a defeated Conservative candidate to head up the commission, which later became known as the Kealey commission. There was nothing unusual about the process. The Kealey commission produced a rather interesting report and on balance, a fairly good report. They concentrated, at that time, on the problems faced at the registration end of the condominium world.

The government finally brought in the new Condominium Act to address a number of problems pointed out by the Kealey commission work and to respond to other difficulties. At that time, for reasons which to this day I don't understand, the government virtually ignored the area of registration and the difficulties that were caused to condominium unit owners because of the registration rules.

In spite of amendments my party and I put forward at the time, the government refused to deal with that matter. We finally ended up with the Condominium Act, as we know it now, chapter 84 of the Statutes of Ontario, 1978, which doesn't deal with the problem.

Since that time, the government has had a considerable chance to pick up on its promises to eventually come to grips with the registration aspect, and they didn't do it. There were no changes forthcoming to the Condominium Act. Surely, in the past decade, the government could have done something. They didn't; they brought in the Condominium Act, which was the perfect time to deal with the registration problems. They didn't do it, and they have had considerable time since the Condominium Act was introduced and passed to do something about the registration problems. Now what happens is the government brings in changes to the Land Titles Act and to the Registry Act which simply remove some of the contentious questions of registration in the acts.

Under the companion bill the government is going to delete from the Condominium Act section 2(4) and (5) as its answer to dealing with the registration problem. That doesn't make any sense at all. I think the government has an obligation that rather than making this kind of technical adjustment at this point it should finally realize the time has come to do something about the registration problems involved with condominiums.

Instead of proposing the phoney or non-resolution of Bills 149 and 150, I think it would be much better if the government was to go back to the Condominium Act and deal with those.

I am going to propose that this bill be sent to committee of the whole House so we can deal in an across-the-floor manner with this aspect, particularly with section 40 of this bill and with sections of the Registry Act, which I will delineate later on, unless the minister thinks in his windup on second reading he can somehow address the failure of the government to deal with the real problems of registration of condominiums.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to draw to the attention of the House the term "master of titles" was removed in 1972 when "land registrar" was substituted. Obviously it took six years to catch up in this particular act.

The assurance fund is about $25,000 above the $1 million. Several claims are made and many paid each year.

On the other concern of the member for Kitchener, there have been no recent prosecutions. We regard the penalties really as a deterrent, rather than something after the fact. We had a near case when a woman removed part of a page from a Registry Act record, but the sheriff—one of the few apprehensions or recoveries by a sheriff lately, I suppose—went out and got the page back.

Actually I suppose that is not terribly unusual. The land registry in this province dates back to John Graves Simcoe. It has been very successful since 1795. The Americans certainly wish they had had it, so I suppose in 1979 it is not terribly unusual that the sheriff is able to function within the Registry Act system.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Did you say 1795?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Are you suggesting that was one of the causes of the War of 1812?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, though I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that one of the things John Graves Simcoe has never received credit for is the land transfer system and the land registry system in this province. The Americans today dearly wish that they had our system because, state-by-state, they are in dreadful difficulties.

When, at the beginning of this province, albeit under another name, a very distinguished administrative officer could produce a system which has withstood the test of almost two centuries with the only change being from the quill to the nib pen, to the fountain pen, to the ballpoint and when today we are going to launch the most extensive computerization system in land registry on the continent and still base it upon Simcoe, I really think that as an administrative officer he was without parallel.

Mr. Speaker, the maximum fine is being increased because, as I said, we would like to keep it as a deterrent rather than as a punishment after the fact. A considerable amount of difficulty, of personal hardship and of rather permanent loss can be occasioned by someone who wants to do an act of theft or an act of vandalism in a registry office.

With respect to the registration of condominium problem, it's the requirement interpreted to mean that the building must be substantially completed before the declaration can be registered. That is viewed as essential to protect purchasers who might otherwise buy a unit in a building that may never be completed.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What does "substantially" mean?

Hon. Mr. Drea: If the honourable member is going to committee would he stop interrupting me on second reading? Has he forgotten where he is? I am attempting to answer his question.

I have no objection to going to committee, Mr. Speaker. I want a typographical error corrected. I think we could have got unanimous consent to change an "a" to "the," but if the member wants to have a dialogue—and the results will not change—far be it from me to object to committee of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the question it is my understanding the House would be asked to give unanimous consent to change a word on second reading and it's my understanding that that might be forthcoming from the House. However, if the member insists on the bill going to committee, I'll now put the question.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, in no way was the member suggesting it go to committee for that. He wanted some other dialogue.

Mr. Speaker: I am well aware of that.

The motion is for second reading of Bill 149.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

REGISTRY AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 150, An Act to amend the Registry Act.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity of reviewing the contents of this bill and it deals particularly with a great variety of minor sections which clarify and reorganize various component parts of the Registry Act. I don't think there is anything particular that could be said to be a principle in this bill since it is based on a variety of these clarifications.

It is interesting to see that the requirement for mortmain affidavits to be registered is being repealed. This is something that comes out of the most ancient traditions of the British common law and it is worth while to see that again will be a saving of work and involvement as we continue to develop the registry system within Ontario.

The matters dealing later on, including the one which does away with the requirement of certain entries in red ink, is something that I am sure would be of interest to a great number of members of the House. One would have thought that with the development of deficits in Ontario, over these past 10 years the one thing we would have lots of is red ink. But in any event, wherever we are going to use it, it certainly is no longer going to be necessary as far as the entry of certain notices and cautions is concerned—and, as I recall, discharged mortgages had to be lined out in red ink over recent history.

I don't know whether this also dates back to the earliest days of the province. Perhaps it even goes back to John Graves Simcoe's involvement in the thin red line or something of that ilk. But in any event, whatever use we have for red ink, we won't be using it in our registry system any longer.

Again, the matter of increase in maximum penalty from $1,000 to $5,000 will apply in the registry system; the minister has already explained the circumstances under land title. As he has said, this has the prospect of being a deterrent and I suppose in inflationary times it becomes somewhat more meaningful than the earlier $1,000 maximum penalty.

The other provisions, as I mentioned, all deal with particular minor points none of which I think need detain us any further. The minister has a variety of amendments; so the bill will have to go to committee of the whole, wherein we will be able to talk about some of these other points if it is worthwhile to do so.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Hamilton Centre.

Applause.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I thank the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini).

Mr. Kerrio: It wasn't for you.

Mr. M. N. Davison: It's just as well. I would worry if you applauded me.

Mr. Speaker, I trust the minister will take the suggestion of my colleague from Kitchener and explain the relation of the Registry Act to one Sir John Graves Simcoe if, indeed, its origins can be traced back to that fine fellow. I am always interested in hearing about Ontario's Tory folklore.

I also have the same concern about the Registry Act and its amendments as I have about the Land Titles Act; it deals with the way we are removing sections from the Condominium Act. It seems to me one of the best things about the Condominium Act is it provides, as it were, one-stop shopping for the individual interested in condominiums. Once again I want to say I have a lot of difficulty understanding the government's desire to start now a process to cut up and subdivide the Condominium Act and to put sections of it into other pieces of legislation, to provide powers of regulation under acts other than the Condominium Act, to make changes by regulation to things affecting condominiums.

Mr. Philip: Condo Ontario can explain it to them. That gives it something to do other than sending out propaganda.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That's right. That's a very good suggestion.

Perhaps it will be possible for the minister, when we send this bill to committee, also to engage in a little dialogue about his amendment to section 27 and the rationale behind sections 34, 41 and 47 so we can try to understand why the government wants to remove this area from the Condominium Act and put it into pieces of legislation that condominium consumers are less likely to have recourse to and therefore they will be able to understand less well the matters they involve themselves in when they decide to purchase a condominium.

While I support the bill on second reading, largely because most of the sections are housekeeping or updating sections, I do have those concerns about the sections that deal with condominiums. Aside from the necessity to go to committee to deal with the minister's amendments, I think it should go to committee to discuss those points.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I have a number of amendments to the bill; therefore, obviously it will go to committee. The matters that have been raised are relatively minor and the proper place to discuss them is in a dialogue. Once again, I say the result will not be altered; but I am magnanimous tonight, and I want to have the privilege of going into committee. I will not be magnanimous this time—I don't want it to become a trend—so I will reserve comment until the bill goes to committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 146, An Act to amend the Municipal Franchises Act;

Bill 147, An Act to amend the Local Improvement Act;

Bill 156, An Act to amend the Securities Act, 1978;

Bill 165, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972;

Bill 172, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Speaker: It being 10:30 of the clock a motion to adjourn is deemed to have been made. I will recognize the member for Scarborough West for up to five minutes.

EAST OF BAY PROJECT

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In regard to a question on the east of Bay property which I raised with the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Wiseman) today, the block in question is a superblock bounded by Bay, Wellesley, Gloucester and Yonge. My request was that the government deal in good faith with the city of Toronto in the planning process. The minister did not respond when I asked him if he would agree to the request from the executive of the city of Toronto to involve himself in a reasonable planning process with them.

The minister also did not indicate what his long-term plans for this area were, although he indicated a couple of proclivities in terms of a bus station, which would be totally inappropriate and which the city already believes to be totally inappropriate. He would not indicate why he thinks this land is not appropriate to housing uses. Instead he indicated the city could do just as the province has done, and I quote, "If the mayor wants some additional housing property he can go out and assemble a piece of land in the way we did"; a totally ridiculous suggestion. The opportunity is there right now for the province of Ontario to provide serviced land at a cheap cost so affordable housing can be made available to people in the city of Toronto.

I just want to outline very briefly what has gone on with this property, Mr. Speaker. Initially, there was a grandiose and expensive plan to erect all sorts of government office space in that area. That was withdrawn, partially because the government realized it would be in trouble with the electorate if it tried that because of its overspending and partially because it decided to move, wisely, into decentralization of its services.

In March 1973 the Premier (Mr. Davis)—and I quoted this in my question—said he wanted to turn this property over to uses that would be compatible with the desires of the city of Toronto, thereby opening dialogue with the city of Toronto. Toronto then established a working and planning group which established a number of uses for this land, mixed-use planning of housing, as I mentioned in my question, as well as commercial uses, office and park land.

It seemed there was general agreement in principle by the provincial government during the years 1975 on. John Rhodes, in a letter to the commissioner of planning, said, "With respect to the provision of housing, I readily agree to the proposal for senior citizens and assisted family housing accommodation." The plan for the city seemed to have acceptance at that time.

Rhodes writing to Crombie in 1976, about consultation—something I was asking the minister to look into—said, "I would also like to request that you"—that is Mayor Crombie—"would consent to be consulted from time to time by the Minister of Government Services and myself regarding policies at all levels of government as they may effect the development of the site." A very rational suggestion, something I would commend to the minister again; I suggest that he establish those lines of communication instead of waiting for a month to meet with the mayor as he did when the mayor wrote to him in October.

Mayor Beavis wrote to the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) suggesting that the city and the province jointly retain consultants for production of a more detailed site plan; an excellent idea.

On January 29, all of a sudden we understand from the new minister that other parties have approached the provincial government, but that even so it was suggested these potential users would be advised to move to the city first; again the idea there should be consultation. Yet this minister has decided not to do so. My question is why? Why won't he involve himself in the planning process? I suggest to him that if he doesn't it's a very dangerous thing because the housing proposal the city of Toronto is making is extremely serious for three reasons.

First, there's a shortage of affordable housing in Metro Toronto today with only a one per cent vacancy rate. Second, to preserve the integrity of the core area idea for the city of Toronto, affordable housing at that location is crucial. Third, there's a real need to develop more co-operative and non-profit housing in Metropolitan Toronto, in the city of Toronto in particular.

If the minister decides now, on his own, to go ahead and build more government buildings and put in a bus service which is totally inappropriate when the city is looking for a location which is much better—it would be closer to Union Station, much more integrated with the transit system in this city—all I can say is, he is crazy, he has to talk to these people. They are the most rational planners we have in terms of cities in Ontario at this point; they know what they're doing; they've shown their capacity to organize major planning ideas in the city. That the minister should somehow supersede them because of interests that he's aware of, is totally incorrect.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I would just like to conclude by saying that by not responding to my question the minister is treating this Legislature in the same way the government has been treating the mayor of Toronto. There's an easy way to correct that which is to say he will establish a planning process with the mayor at this time.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned this afternoon, we have had discussions with the YMCA and preliminary discussions with the bus people; no decision has been made as yet. If a decision were to be made to sell any of our property east of Bay, it would be at market value and would have to meet any restrictions that the city of Toronto would have on that property. It would not be the responsibility of my ministry to negotiate on behalf of those companies; they'd have to do that themselves.

I'd just like to say to the members here we assembled this land for the use of the province and I feel we have to look out for the long-term future needs of the province. As I said this afternoon, we have put this land assembly together and we would not get another opportunity to put together a parcel of land like that for some time in the future to meet the needs of the province.

Again, if the mayor wishes to, he could go out and put together a land assembly for himself.

The House adjourned at 10:35 p.m.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES DISPUTE

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday I proposed to Mr. Sean O'Flynn, president of the Ontario Public Service Employees Union, that we use binding arbitration to resolve the category question for correctional officers and certain pay-related classes. I suggested that an independent third party, acceptable to the government and the union, decide the matter. This proposal demonstrates my interest in seeking a peaceful resolution. The union declined to proceed as proposed.

Frankly, I was disappointed in the union's response. A serious attempt has been made by the government to seek a solution. On behalf of my cabinet colleagues, I want to reiterate our willingness to seek a satisfactory solution to this problem. Accordingly, I sent a letter Thursday to Mr. O'Flynn, reconfirming our willingness to submit the question to binding arbitration, and attached a memorandum of agreement to this effect, which I signed on behalf of the government.

In my letter to Mr. O'Flynn, I strongly urged him, the union and the employees to explore with me a peaceful, legal settlement of this difference. Mr. O'Flynn was advised, "The government cannot and will not tolerate breaches of the law and will take appropriate steps to ensure compliance with it."

In the event the union fails to respond to our initiative, the government must prepare for the possibility of an illegal strike.

The government intends to institute action in the Supreme Court of Ontario for an injunction to prohibit any strike activity. We have initiated action to secure from the Ontario Public Service Labour Relations Tribunal a declaration of unlawful strike and consent to prosecute the union, various officials of the union and employees, for violations of the act.

E. B. EDDY EXPANSION

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify the details of the major capital expenditure program announced by E. B. Eddy Forest Products Limited in Espanola, and the major role played by the Ontario government in securing this investment.

In Espanola, on Wednesday of this week, I officially presented the E. B. Eddy company with a cheque for $16,667,000, drawn from the Employment Development Fund allocation as an incentive towards the company's expenditure of $225 million on its facilities at Espanola and Ottawa over the next five years.

Mr. S. Smith: As an award for their excellent performance.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Maybe the Leader of the Opposition wouldn't have helped the company. We thought Espanola was good enough to save; he did not. I'm glad the Leader of the Opposition got it on the record that he wouldn't have helped the company.

Mr. S. Smith: Absolutely right. Their record doesn't deserve it, and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Those remarks are appropriate for what we used to call the garbage track.

Mr. Ruston: You're the only garbage around here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They'll love you guys at Espanola.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Some press reports to the contrary, this incentive from the government of Ontario represents two thirds of the total incentive available to the company under the joint Ontario-Canada pulp and paper facilities improvement program. The federal Department of Regional Economic Expansion will contribute the other third, or $8,333,000 in incentives over the next three years.

As many members of this House are aware, the livelihood of the community of Espanola has been in jeopardy on more than one occasion owing to the questionable viability of its ageing pulp and paper mill. The ability of E. B. Eddy management and the local labour force to maintain this operation, even in the face of the most adverse of market circumstances must be commended.

With the company's announcement and specific expenditure of some $210 million on the Espanola facility, the mill's long-term commercial viability is assured and the community will have a stable economic base for the foreseeable future. In addition to expenditures at Espanola, the company will be spending some $15 million at its Ottawa facility, primarily to upgrade production equipment.

E. B. Eddy's program accomplishes many of the goals sought by the pulp and paper facilities improvement program. For example, the pollution abatement standards set by my colleague the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) will be met at both facilities. Productivity will be significantly improved. Energy self-generation will be increased and conservation furthered. Also, the company has undertaken to source more than 85 per cent of its expenditures on Canadian goods and services. With today's dollars this translates to $195 million, the greater part of which will be spent right here in Ontario.

ORAL QUESTIONS

INTEREST RATES

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Treasurer of Ontario why it was that on Tuesday of this week, after repeated questioning from me regarding his position on the interest rates, which had been increased by the federal government, after similar questions were asked during the week or two before that, and after telling us that his opinion was somehow a secret, he could walk right out of this House and tell the reporters for the Toronto Sun and other reporters from the press gallery?

What kind of contempt is this he has for the question period, where after we have asked repeated questions on a matter of such importance, he can walk right out the door after telling us he has no position to express, and state that we could have an interest rate two points lower or so, because it wouldn't hurt the Canadian dollar the way Mr. Crosbie seems to think it would?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I've always made a point of never saying I was improperly quoted in the press, because it's very difficult ever to substantiate whether one is or isn't. I was asked a whole series of questions. If the reporter drew the conclusions from those questions that he showed in the column—which distressed me just a bit, because he talked in general terms about what I thought would happen to interest rates, what I personally felt were some of the trends and so on—I'm quite sure I've said some of the those things earlier in the House.

If one goes back through Hansard and looks at some of the things I have said earlier on this matter, one will see—

Mr. S. Smith: Don't play games with me. I've gone back through the record.

Hon. F. S. Miller: All right. Then the member will see I have expressed concerns about the interest rate. I have said I did not expect any dramatic downturn, that I did leave the basic policy with the federal government, that I had found six out of nine of my own people who had favoured the federal scene whereas three gave me good reasons to say they had some concern about the present policy, and, therefore, I wasn't taking a firm Ontario position.

I have also said to this House—and I think it is on the record; I certainly said this to the press months ago—that I have great difficulty in rationalizing some of the arguments in favour of importing foreign capital to maintain a high Canadian dollar by maintaining a high interest rate, which in the long run can only mean we have debt payments to make in future days. Those things worry me. A lot of economists argue they are an absolutely necessary price to pay to prevent a sudden bout of inflation. Those are exactly the thoughts I expressed outside, without saying this was Ontario's position.

Mr. S. Smith: Will the Treasurer stop weaseling around and say definitely whether he wishes to deny the statement attributed to him in the Sun, a statement saying: "Interest rates could drop as much as two points without harming the stability of the Canadian dollar. Ontario Treasurer Frank Miller told the Sun yesterday. Miller said he disagrees with the Bank of Canada czar Gerald Bouev's reasoning that interest rates here must closely follow those in the US in order to attract loans and maintain the dollar's relative value?"

Since that is precisely what I was saying in this House when the Premier (Mr. Davis) disagreed with me—and that may be on the record—and since he has failed to stand up to make Ontario's position clear in this regard, even though there is plenty of effort to make Ontario's position clear with regard to oil prices, will the Treasurer categorically deny this statement or, if he agrees with this statement, will he make perfectly certain that the public knows what our position is and that John Crosbie knows what our position is, and will he explain why he couldn't have put that very position, and those very statements, in front of the parliamentary committee looking into this matter?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Unlike the member opposite, I've never tried to lie my way out of things I've said to the press, as he did at Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: The Treasurer, in his attempt now in a most despicable fashion to get out of the fact that he has shown contempt for the House, has attempted to set up and claim that I have lied on some particular matter. I ask him to withdraw that, and to answer the question I asked on behalf of the people of Ontario.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I understand the rules of the House, that I may not use the word lie. I would leave the Sault Ste. Marie issue where it was with the press.

I have never ever, in my dealings with the press, tried to be evasive. I think the press will tell the members that. Generally, in this House, I try to be as direct as I can be. I think the members will agree with that. There are some issues upon which this province feels it does not have authority to be offering contrary advice in the national interest. I can offer private advice, and the member would do the same if he were in my shoes.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Doesn't the Treasurer realize the people of Ontario have no interest at all in the results of the academic seminar he's been running in the finance department, where six say this, three say that and somebody else offers a compromise position? Doesn't the Treasurer understand that what the people of this province want to hear is that the Treasurer of Ontario understands the needs of this province in terms of interest rate as part of the overall economic policy for Ontario? Will the Treasurer not undertake it now, so we can have clear statements about such important issues, rather than shilly-shallying and leaving that vital element up to somebody else?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, what I did say, and I think it was quite accurately reported, was that I was quite interested in the last few weeks to note that the Canadian interest rates hadn't been always going up as some of the American rates were. I made the observation that that intrigued me, because in that same period of time the Canadian dollar had not weakened and, in fact, had strengthened. I think that is historical. I was commenting upon this, because the whole argument of high interest rates has hung on one basic fact: If we dropped our interest rates slightly, equal to the American rate or below it, there would be an outflow of Canadian dollars, a drop in the value of the Canadian dollar, a loss in its purchasing power, and therefore more inflation.

I commented that historically over this period of time, whilst the argument was going on, I had been intrigued to notice that we had seen a strengthening of the Canadian dollar, and that certain agencies in certain areas observing this, such as banks, financial houses and foreign governments, were starting to say that one of the reasons for that strength in the Canadian dollar, flying in the face of a current wisdom, was that it was being considered as an energy currency. That means foreign observers and speculators are starting to say there are certain strengths within the Canadian economy which perhaps have not been acknowledged by traditional economists. I, for one, as an interested observer, made that comment. That is quite accurately reported.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: The Treasurer is clearly now agreeing that what we said would happen was accurate. The difference in the inflation rate between Canada and the United States meant we didn't have to follow them in lockstep, even though his Premier disagreed with me. Why, in heaven's name, didn't the Treasurer make that statement to the Minister of Finance in this country and protect the small businessmen, the farmers, the home owners and the consumers of Ontario from a totally unnecessary federal policy? Why didn't Ontario go on the record on this matter? Why couldn't the Treasurer at least have stated that opinion in this House rather than to the press outside this House?

Mr. Mancini: He's trying to protect his Tory friends.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am not protecting any Tory friends. It is interesting how quickly the positions of the governments have assumed the same role, because the fact is—

Mr. T. P. Reid: You want to blame Trudeau.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I never blamed him, never. Luckily, there won't be Liberals in Ottawa and, luckily, there won't be Liberals in Ontario as long as the honourable member is the leader.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, since the federal Minister of Finance, Mr. Crosbie, has indicated that he is not going to offer any protection to Canadian consumers in his budget, which will be coming down shortly, will the Treasurer make a commitment to implement some policies to ease the burden of interest rates on home owners, the agricultural community and the small business community in Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, obviously I am going to be awaiting, as I am sure the member for Nickel Belt will be, the federal budget with very real concern.

The very essence of the Ontario energy policy, as he will recall, was aimed at softening the effect upon the consumer in whatever interim period is required to allow the increased cash flows that are generated by increased oil prices to be properly reinvested in security of supply. We argue, and have argued—I hope with the member's concurrence, and I hope with the Liberals' concurrence—that the first purpose of extra cash flow for roughly the next two years should be the protection of the consumer. That is still Ontario's position, and on that one issue I think all three parties are united.

We are going to have to wait to watch that budget to see whether any of the actions that are being rumoured take place. One of the great risks we have in a country like ours is that one government can have economic or fiscal policy aimed at tackling inflation, only to see it totally counteracted by a series of independent provincial moves.

Even with the Liberal government in Ottawa, I think my friend will recognize that for the last few years this province and a number of other provinces have tried to synchronize policies, because synchronized policy has a much greater chance of accomplishing the objective of, say, cutting down inflation, than everyone flying off in their own direction, saying, "To heck with you." We still have to maintain the lowest possible inflation rate, and we have to protect the consumer. If the consumer isn't protected, he quite properly is going to demand more salary, which in a period where energy is the basic spark, cannot be recovered within the system without causing inflation. I think the honourable member would agree with that.

EAST OF BAY PROJECT

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Government Services: On the matter of the properties known as the east of Bay properties, would the Minister of Government Services not agree with me that a bus terminal in a large metropolitan area like Toronto would be most intelligently located close to the train terminal so we could have a transportation centre for those who might want to transfer from one to the other or make various kinds of travelling arrangements? Surely the minister would agree with me that the middle of the most congested area in town is no place to be building a bus terminal and to have buses coming in and out in the middle of rush hour and so on. Why, therefore, is he prepared to consider a bus terminal as a major use for those very important properties when those properties more properly should be used for a combination of office space and particularly for low-cost housing? That would be a sensible way for the utilization of the available space. Isn't it a dumb place for a bus terminal?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Mr. Speaker, we have had preliminary discussions with the bus company. As I said last night in the late show, as well as yesterday afternoon, if they are interested in the land and in giving us office space above that particular bus terminal—if it goes there—we will negotiate for that. But anything to do with building, if the city will allow it to go there, will have to be discussed with the city and a suitable arrangement worked out.

I don't think it is up to me as Minister of Government Services to say this is the place it should go. They are businessmen. If they want to go there, they have to work out those arrangements with the city. That is, if we are prepared to sell it to them—and at this point we haven't made that decision.

Mr. S. Smith: Since the province owns the land, why would the province contemplate selling it for the purpose of setting up a bus terminal if it is a dumb place to set up a bus terminal? Why would Ontario not use the land for intelligent uses that would be in keeping with the proper planning of the city of Toronto? Why would it not use it to meet the obvious need for low-cost housing as well as for mixed uses, which are appropriate for a downtown location of that kind, including some office space and possibly a YMCA if that happens to be thought an appropriate matter as well?

If a bus terminal should not be put there, why in heaven's name is the government going ahead with plans that will end up with a bus terminal there?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: I don't think the honourable member heard me. We are not going ahead with the plans. We have just had preliminary discussions with these people. Preliminary discussions do not mean we plan to go ahead with it.

As I said before, the city would have its input and they would have to clear all the hurdles with the city. Any sale of the land, if we ever decided to sell it to them, would have a rider on it that they had to do this, and it wouldn't be the responsibility of my ministry.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I find it hard to understand why the minister continues to raise the red herrings of the bus terminal and the YMCA. The minister raised it; not myself. The minister's reason for not answering why he will not enter into planning discussions with the city of Toronto leads me to presume the government has already decided what it wants to do with that land: It wants to go back to the pre-1973 plan to build a major government complex in that area. If it is the case, why are the two towers that are already in the city's plan for Wellesley Street not sufficient for government expansion on that site?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: As I mentioned last night and yesterday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, we have put together this parcel of land for government use. The government has its priorities at this time as to what buildings it should put up. As Minister of Government Services, I feel we have to look at the long-term needs of that property for the province; that is why housing at this time doesn't fit into our plans.

Mr. S. Smith: Can the minister explain why his predecessor said to this House on November 16, 1978, "When this work has been completed I will be responding to the mayor of Toronto"—completion of the work was only a matter of a few weeks away at that time; that was a year ago—and yet the mayor never heard from him nor from his successor in this role?

Why has the minister shown such disdain for dealing with municipal officials if he hasn't even contacted him since then? He finally had to get hold of the minister on the matter. Why does the minister feel, in these days of so-called shrinking government, that he is going to need more and more office space to have to use that entire site for the growth of the government when there is such a crying need for low-cost housing in that part of Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: At the present time we own about two million square feet of office space in the downtown core. We rent approximately the same. At this time we can talk about the need for senior citizen apartments, and there is a need for that as well.

We are in almost a nil position as far as office space in the downtown core is concerned. I think we will be needing this space for ourselves in the near future, whether we do it in conjunction with something else that goes on to that site, like a bus terminal or something else, to give us the space we feel we need. We will have to look at that, but we need it for our own use at this time.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister undertake to open up the planning process for the block east of Bay Street so the public, the city and each of the people in the whole area can be involved in the process, rather than continuing the Byzantine secretiveness which has marked this project up until now and which is comparable to the way the ministry is planning the Cartier Square block in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: As I mentioned before, Mr. Speaker, we have this block of land, and we'd never again assemble, a piece of land like this for the province's needs for some time in the future. I am convinced, if the mayor were to look around, he could find property for his housing somewhere else.

The honourable member compared it to Cartier Square in Ottawa. I would just let him know that the mayor, in an article on August 8, said she was in agreement with the site, and she hoped the construction would start immediately. The honourable member says we didn't let them know; they knew, and the Ottawa commission knew as well.

GAS AND OIL SUPPLIES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy. With respect to the plight of the independent oil contractors who provide heating oil for 40 per cent of the homes in Ontario, can the minister say what action the government intends to take to protect these independent oil dealers, who now are finding their margins are being squeezed by the multinational oil companies and in certain cases having their supplies cut off completely? Does the government intend to intervene in any way to prevent these independents from being squeezed out of the market entirely over the course of this coming winter?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I have no concrete evidence that would support the allegation of the honourable member that the independents are being squeezed out of the marketplace. The honourable member will know, if he has had a chance in the last little while to review the Isbister report, in so far as this whole area is concerned, that particular part of the report recognized the importance of the independents to the province and to the whole marketing of those particular products.

I am in the process of meeting with presidents of the various oil companies. Indeed, during those discussions not yet completed, I am raising this very question of the position of independents in so far as their own relationships are concerned. I have been assured by those with whom I have met until now that they certainly plan to honour all contracts which they currently have with such individuals.

Mr. Cassidy: Was the minister not aware that the big multinational companies, not content with the extra amounts of money they are going to earn because of the increase in heating oil prices from 70 cents to about $1.30 a gallon over the next three years, have already begun to pressure the independent suppliers in the eastern Ontario area and squeeze their margins for this winter by four cents to five cents a gallon so that some of them expect to make no profit at all?

Is he also aware that some of these independents are not having their contracts renewed, although existing contracts are being honoured? Will he investigate the case of one particular independent, whose 300,000-gallon-a-month supply is being cut to zero at the beginning of 1980 by one of the multinationals? Will he take that information in confidence?

Hon. Mr. Welch: If I could speak to the third part of the question, there is no question I certainly would be very pleased to do so if I had that information. In fact, it would be helpful if I had some specific information such as that to follow up.

I can only repeat that, in my discussions with presidents and chief executive officers of oil companies with whom I have met up until now, I have been assured they are honouring their contracts. The difficulty may be with respect to the definition of the arrangements some of these independents have had with their suppliers.

To speak to another point raised by the honourable member, I have made it quite clear we agree with that recommendation in the Isbister report, which sees and attaches some importance to the involvement of the independents in the marketplace of this province.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister be prepared, on completion of his consultation with the oil companies, to make a public statement about the government's position on this matter, which may be of great concern to those independents?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be prepared to report more fully on that after I have completed those meetings, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the minister says he's talking to the large multinational oil companies and on the assurances he has had from those companies, will he say what contact he's had with the independents, some of whom fear to raise the issue publicly in case of having further restrictions put on their supplies?

Would the minister not agree that when those independents have month-to-month or year-to-year contracts, it's very easy for the multinationals to cut them off unless there is protection and intervention from the government to keep those independents in business?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be very pleased to meet with anyone who wishes to meet with me. I am just a little concerned about the qualification with which the honourable member wraps this question up; in other words, that there might be some fear they would want to meet with me. I would hope that's not the case. In fact, I would be very pleased to include representatives from the independent sector as part of those meetings.

I do repeat, for the benefit of the House, the question with respect to the relationship between companies and the independents has been raised at all of these meetings. I have had that assurance and on the basis of the questions that have now been directed to me by the honourable member, I will perhaps have some specific examples to follow up on.

I might say I am not aware, on the basis of any mail I have read within the last while, that anyone has had any hesitation in wanting to speak to me about this particular matter.

AIRCRAFT CONTRACT

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Can the minister say how it is that he could tell this House a couple of days ago that the job opportunities for Ontario, offered in connection with the new federal contract, are "serious offsets, firm offsets and firm commitments," when there are so many unanswered questions surrounding this particular contract to the point that nobody else in government, in the Department of National Defence, or in the industry, is in a position to make the same kind of assurances?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must say, Mr. Speaker, I was providing that information on the basis of all our conversations with the federal government. I must tell the honourable member that, in view of the developments of the last few days, we will be back on the phone today to try to clarify the information they have been providing. Of course, I can only report to this House with regard to the information with which we have been supplied by the federal government from time to time.

Mr. Cassidy: When the minister spoke in the House a couple of days ago and was so sure about the commitments which he is not so sure about right now, was he aware that at the beginning of November the United States government was telling McDonnell Douglas it should not give credit in terms of job spinoffs in Canada for contracts related to the cruise missile? Was he also aware that in early November Northrop was launching legal action against McDonnell Douglas because it was offering Northrop subcontracts in Canada without authorization? Has the minister reviewed or looked at the confidential report on offsets, or has he reviewed information from the Air Industries Association of Canada, which also long ago was casting the same doubt on what he thought two days ago were firm commitments?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We were aware of the Northrop potential lawsuit. My industry specialists—and I do have some of the very best people who worked in the industry and who now work in my ministry—were monitoring the situation, and I believe they had fairly full and complete access to all the federal information from time to time.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister could tell us, since he made those very firm statements on Tuesday, if, when he made those statements, or even now, he had read the confidential document which everyone seems to have read at this point. Has he read the letter from the aerospace industry which expressed the very grave concerns referred to by my leader? Would he tell us if, when he was talking with the federal government, there was any discussion of not only the number of jobs that would be gained in Ontario, but also the kinds of jobs and the kind of technological knowhow, that would be gained by Ontario in this aerospace industry if and when the new fighter aircraft contract was awarded?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I myself have not read the confidential document the member is referring to. I believe that among the various documents and materials I have read on the subject the letter he referred to from the air industry has crossed my desk, and I have seen that. There have been a great number of documents flowing across my desk on the subject, and I have read a great number of them. I can't be sure specifically with regard to a lot of documents.

I don't believe I have read in depth the confidential document he is referring to, although I believe my staff has. I would have to check that, in fairness, to make sure that is an accurate answer.

The last question is fairly straightforward. As I indicated the other day, my people have been working closely with the federal government—on the basis of the information they have been provided and on the basis of the information we have obtained—to ensure that we do get an adequate share of the offsets for Ontario industry. The offsets, as they appeared right up until this moment, seemed to be such that we would get a very good share of the offset business and that we were going to do well.

I acknowledge that it appears from what I read in the press the last few days that some of those things may now be questioned. But I must emphasize to the member that we went through this, we have monitored it, we have asked difficult questions. I believe we have received fairly direct answers, and we are proceeding on the good faith of the federal government providing us with that information.

I also want to clarify that I have no reason, other than press reports and some things that have been raised here, to begin to question that. In other words, I am responding to what I see and read outside of the correspondence between my ministry and the federal government. Nothing has occurred in our relationship with them that would lead me to believe that is coming apart.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the firm commitments the minister thought Ontario had from the federal government are clearly—and he acknowledges it—no longer as firm as all that, what actions will the minister take now? In particular, what consultation and action will the ministry have with the air industries people themselves? They have been sceptical about the industrial spinoff in terms of jobs and technology for Ontario all along.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In our dealings with the industry in Ontario—and I have some of the very best people in that branch of my ministry—we did not get the impression from them that they were dissatisfied with the offset provisions. If that has changed, I am confident my staff would have been informed by the industry about that by now.

The second point I would like to make is that I am not indicating I have any information that would lead me to believe that the commitments given to me, and which I reported faithfully to this House a couple of days ago, have fallen apart. But rather than blindly and blithely sitting back in the face of some questions being raised legitimately through the media and by the opposition here, I can assure the leader of the third party that I am not going to ignore them. I have already asked my staff to begin to get back on the phone and have some direct and hard discussions to try to clarify the situation for me.

ST. ANDREW'S DAY

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, just before I resume my seat, I might acknowledge that today is St. Andrew's Day. As the representative for a riding designated St. Andrew-St. Patrick, I wanted to acknowledge it. I also want to thank one of my colleagues, unidentified in the front row, who has dressed in accordance with St. Andrew's Day. Members may be able to spot the colleague I am referring to. I asked him to do it for me.

[Later (10:43):]

Mr. Peterson: The Treasurer looks silly when he wears that jacket. He should go out and change it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm wearing the jacket, my honourable friend, because it's St. Andrew's Day. Somewhere in the process someone stole it from my office this morning—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Probably his wife.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —therefore, I had to put on my other one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That's a very good answer to the question.

Hon. F. S. Miller: As a Scot, I wear it on St. Andrew's Day. We who are Scots are proud of this day, and we should show our interest in our ethnic and cultural background.

[Reverting (10:39):]

MINING COMMUNITIES

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis), the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) and the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), I would like to address a question to the Treasurer in regard to one-industry communities, and Atikokan in particular.

Is the Treasurer aware of whether the Minister of Natural Resources has had meetings with either Caland, Inland Steel or Steep Rock Iron Mines with a view to ensuring that the mine at Steep Rock Lake is completely mined out?

Second, has the so-called cabinet committee on mining communities met on this particular issue?

Third, what does the Treasurer intend to do in view of the lost revenue, not only to the provincial coffers, but also to the taxpayers of Atikokan?

Hon. F. S. Miller: First, Mr. Speaker, I haven't had any knowledge of the discussions between the Minister of Natural Resources and the companies. Perhaps the provincial secretary of that policy field may have—he's nodding his head, saying he has no knowledge.

Second, I can assure the member that when, as Minister of Natural Resources, I was chairman of that committee, there were discussions about those specific communities. Obviously, at that time their mines had announced the phasing out. I think the member will recall, I visited Atikokan once or twice, met with the union on one occasion and the town council on another occasion. At that point we provided some moneys for their industrial park, commission study, et cetera, to try to help them diversify a bit.

I'm aware of those things from my own experience. As to more recent ones, in terms of whether the committee has discussed it recently, I could not answer personally, since I have not seen a minute on it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: In 36 years, one of the government's failures over there is its dealings with northern Ontario and protecting those communities up there. What is the Treasurer going to do to ensure the tax base of that town so that the people who can and want to remain there, to work and live there, are not going to be burdened with a tax rate that is so crushing it will force them out because they won't be able to pay for the services that are going to be provided? What policy does the Treasurer have to help these one-industry communities where the industry is being lost?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm sure the honourable member, when he was sitting with us the other day listening to the discussions of the Northwestern Ontario Chamber of Commerce, recognized that while there were many problems in the north, that group—which represents the business interests of the area—came as close to being congratulatory and generally supportive as any group we see.

Mr. T. P. Reid: They're more supportive of northern Ontario than is the Progressive Conservative Party.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The problems are extremely complex and difficult to resolve. I'm sure the honourable member knows that. The fact that one finds, through the grace of God, a good mineral deposit in a community like Atikokan, and therefore a community is caused to be formed basically because of that deposit, at the same time almost assures its eventual demise as a mine.

If the member will recall the history, that's one of those few cases—unlike the ones in the riding of Sudbury East anyway—where there has been a discontinuation of mining operations for economic reasons. One can safely say that 35 years was the predicted span of the operations in Atikokan, if I recall the figures; the day the community started, that was understood.

I'm sure we have now totally and properly changed our attitudes towards the north. Once communities are formed with the kind of heart and spirit that Atikokan has—and it has more spirit than many places I have visited; I am sure the member would recognize that—one must find ways to support them.

For example, we looked at the Bending Lake proposals. Does the member recall that? This province, at that time, was willing to support the Bending Lake proposal, with a slurry pipeline costing a fair amount of money, should that be an economically feasible alternative; that is, instead of moving a new community to Bending Lake, one brought the ore to Atikokan. Currently the economics of iron ore are such that it is not feasible; but it is still a possibility. I believe at the same time the Ministry of Transportation and Communications even started building the road that would generally serve that area.

So, should the economics change, we could see that happen. I guess the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) would be in a better position to talk about this, but we have been carrying on discussions with a number of companies that might come there. For example, we have looked at Pluswood—which I guess is the remaining major industry in the community, apart from the Ministry of Natural Resources itself—and the operations of some of the Domtar facilities in the Sapaw area. We are trying to make sure those remain viable. It is extremely difficult to find an alternative to the basic reason for the creation of some of the northern communities.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since it is not through the grace of God that Ontario now imports 58 per cent of its iron ore from outside the province, can the Treasurer tell us what steps he is taking to ensure that the three big steel producers in Ontario adapt their processes to use the kind of iron ore we have in northwestern Ontario? Can he tell us if he has access to the study those three producers did about the iron ore deposits in northwestern Ontario? Why hasn't the Treasurer insisted they develop the deposits at Bending Lake and Lake St. Joseph while Atikokan was running down?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The fact remains that Canada is a net exporter of iron ore; I think the member would agree with that. The member knows that a fairly comprehensive study of potential iron ore sites in northwestern Ontario was carried out. I believe it showed the Lake St. Joseph area was potentially the richest area—also some of the ones in the Nipigon area, if I recall correctly. It showed certain economic priorities in terms of which would be the most likely to succeed.

Those deposits, as I recall, are relatively small in most cases—relatively low-grade and fairly costly to transport. So it is not as simple as one might want to make it look.

The member knows that various mills have capabilities to handle various types of ore and are predicated upon them. In fact, we underwrote experiments on the very ore in this gentleman's riding to see if it couldn't be used elsewhere. It fell apart.

POLICE ACTIVITY IN LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I have a question from the Attorney General. How can he, as Solicitor General, have the gall to make the statement he did yesterday that police have not been used as strikebreakers? How can he say the police do not treat alleged offences on picket lines differently from those in other circumstances, when sworn testimony by Constable Woodland of the Fort Frances police at a show-cause hearing for Norman Lyle Meyers on January 19, 1979, indicated the crown attorney specifically instructed the police attending the Boise Cascade picket line to treat the strikers differently from other alleged offenders?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: If it's a matter that was drawn to my attention some time ago, I can't be certain it's the same reference. I looked into the matter and satisfied myself that the police officer had received no such instructions. I think the police officer later confirmed that. I think there was some confusion over what was said in the transcript.

I'm sorry I've forgotten some of the names, but I believe it's a matter we've already looked into. I stand by what I said yesterday, as being absolutely factual.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Is the Solicitor General saying to me that Constable Woodland contradicted to him his sworn testimony given before the show-cause hearing on January 19? May I remind the Attorney General/Solicitor General of the following exchange?

Mr. Wolder, who was the lawyer acting on behalf of Mr. Meyers: "We have a man here of favourable reputation. It's a property offence. Why wasn't he released on his own recognizance in the first place?"

Answer: "Because it's our instructions from the crown attorney, Mr. Saranchuk."

Question: "And you have those instructions for all charges arising out of strike-related incidents?"

Answer: "Yes."

Question: "So you are saying police constables now are instructed not to use their discretion?"

Answer: "That's right."

Question: "So the usual practice, constable, on charges other than strike charges, is the accused is released on his own recognizance?"

Answer: "Prior to the problems we have, strike-related problems, yes."

Is the Solicitor General saying the constable contradicted that testimony he gave under oath?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I want to check the matter, the transcripts I had, to confirm we're talking about the same matter. I'll do that and I'll report back the results of our investigation.

I believe it's the same matter, but I would like to confirm that. I will be happy to deal with that in the House, or I'll be happy to deal with it in the Solicitor General's estimates that are currently in progress.

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, just briefly, a few days ago the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) asked me questions regarding certain actions on construction projects during the Mississauga evacuation. I would like to say the answer I gave the other day was absolutely correct. I would like to expand on it.

The contract on highways 5 and 403 was closed down during the evacuation. There was no construction work going on at that location, although the paved detour was in effect prior to the closedown.

On the highway 5 contract, west of highway 25, there was certainly no holdup in traffic there. This job was practically completed prior to the closedown and only minor trimming on the road sides and what not were in progress.

On the Trafalgar Road-Queen Elizabeth Way contract, there was absolutely no hold-up of traffic there. The contractor was working on some off-road work, but materials were not available for the contract because of the evacuation.

On the Queen Elizabeth Way-Cawthra Road interchange contract, this job was closed down from November 11 to November 13 because of the evacuation. The contractor worked from November 14 to November 16, but this did not affect traffic as the Queen Elizabeth Way itself was closed down from Trafalgar Road to highway 27.

On the highway 401 contract, from Mississauga Road west to Trafalgar Road, the contractor did do some work during the Mississauga evacuation. The contractor's operations were restricted to working ramps free of traffic. Consequently, the contractor's paving operation was shut down as the delivery of asphalt would have impeded traffic on highway 401.

One thing I will say is that at the request of the police, the new north to eastbound ramp at Trafalgar Road, which is not paved, was open to traffic on the granular base and was maintained in an excellent condition by the contractor during the problem. There was no delay of traffic and no cutting down of the number of lanes available on that section of highway.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: In relation to highway 401, there was an additional lane that might have been used at the time, when all the traffic was being channelled north of Mississauga and highway 401. One of my questions to the minister is would it not have been possible to utilize one of the lanes that had not been paved at that time? I'm talking of the one immediately after Trafalgar Road.

The other thrust of the question, the initial part of the question which the minister has not answered, revolves around how the Burlington Skyway could be tied up, once again, in the middle of the Mississauga crisis when the traffic was held up all around Mississauga—and, we recognize, justifiably so. How could his crew still tie up the Burlington Skyway with routine maintenance?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding absolutely no routine maintenance that did not have to be done was being done on any of those highways during the period of the crisis. When the member says the Burlington Skyway was blocked off, I don't think that is correct.

Mr. Bradley: I drive over the Burlington Skyway and it was.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the honourable minister, when he started, said he was verifying the answer to a question. I'm going to add two minutes to the question period.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism, if I may. Would the minister consider the request of the Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce for accommodation in the new information centre at Niagara Falls for the various tourist agencies to give Niagara information to 16 million visitors who come to that part of the peninsula?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Kerrio: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister. I wanted to raise a supplementary and I certainly should stop while I'm ahead but I would like to pose this particular question to the minister.

In putting up his information centres across Ontario, is the minister giving consideration to local interest groups, such as chambers of commerce and information centres, for accommodation in the various places? The problem is that if the information centre is removed from the centre of town, or the centre of interest, the people might be directed out of a given area. I wonder if that kind of consideration is given most information centres?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes. Let me clarify that most of our 37 information centres are being rebuilt on exactly the same sites as the previous ones.

Secondly, in the case of Niagara Falls, we have to find a new site. That has been done and essentially agreed to by the municipality.

Thirdly, in each case we're going to have self-service kiosks. In the kiosks there will be space for rent, as it were, on the boards listing all sorts of things. The local chamber of commerce can make an arrangement with us, of course, for themselves, for other industries and for other tourist attractions to try and focus people back into or towards those particular attractions, those in the local area they think are worth promoting through our self-service kiosk.

If I might just clarify something: In each case where we're building a tourist information centre, there will be adjacent to the tourist information centre a self-service kiosk as well.

Mr. di Santo: In the same vein, has the minister given any consideration to building the convention centre on the Downsview site?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think that's out of order.

REFUGEE ASSISTANCE

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. Does he recall that two weeks ago I urged him to give fast and favourable consideration to the $1 million request from the Red Cross for aid to Cambodia?

Subsequently, I wrote a letter to the Premier (Mr. Davis) urging speed on that decision. In view of the fact the minister has as yet made no commitment to the Red Cross as to what aid he is willing to give, even though the plight of the Cambodians is screaming at us through all the news media, can't he now come to a decision on this urgent issue and tell the House today what he is going to do?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, we are still reviewing it. I think it needs to be said, first of all, that the people of Ontario are contributing about $7 million to the plight of the people in Cambodia. How are they doing that? They are doing it through the $15 million the government of Canada has pledged to Cambodian relief, which is raised, by taxes, all across Canada. I think first and foremost in these international matters, that is from where people would expect the support should come.

The Red Cross has asked us, in round terms, for $1 million. We are looking at assisting certain medical teams and that discussion is still going on. I don't have an answer yet, but I just think it should be emphasized that the people of Ontario are contributing $7 million in round figures to the relief in Cambodia.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary: May I ask the minister, does he not realize that although the International Red Cross has asked for something like $251 million they have as yet received only about $10 million of that and they only have enough money on hand to carry on the aid for another 10 days or two weeks? They have not yet got the necessary medical supplies or personnel to even touch the problem in the refugee camps, let alone Cambodia itself.

Doesn't the minister feel there is some real urgency for this and he should take some initiative in his government to do something in this matter?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think I have indicated we are reviewing this with some urgency. If the honourable member would talk to the Red Cross, they wouldn't put the matter quite the way he is putting it and the record of this government is it has never shirked its responsibilities, even though, first and foremost, we felt basically a lot of these are federal responsibilities in this country. The federal government, on behalf of all Canadians, acts in international matters. In other areas we have certainly helped, as we did just recently with the help in the refugee camps, where the boat people are located. We presented a cheque to Red Cross for $315,000 just a couple of weeks ago.

The matter is under consideration; we are looking at supporting medical teams and we will have an answer shortly.

TEACHER-BOARD NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the policy secretary in the social field, often referred to as the super-minister for social policy.

Since the strike in the Brant-Brantford school system is now in its 18th day, is there any policy, or preparation, for action to be taken by this House so the matter can be brought to a conclusion before the Legislature adjourns for Christmas?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I am given to understand a mediator from the Education Relations Commission met with both sides yesterday and negotiations took place. The mediator is meeting again today with the negotiating team. Both sides are aware of the interest of the public and the honourable member in this matter and hopefully it will soon be resolved.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: I certainly thank the minister for that report, and it is well known in the area that negotiations are continuing. It is certainly regretted, and I am sure the minister would agree, that a conclusion of the strike and settlement has not been possible. Is she not aware, however, that one of the problems is that the salary matters could very well be sent to arbitration, with agreement by both sides, but other matters dealing with the organization and operation of the system cannot be sent to arbitration because the school board objects?

If that is so, would the minister not, in her policy position, consult with the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) and the Premier, so those matters might be sent to a special committee established by the government, so arbitration on the salary matters could go forward and the strike could come to an end with a clear understanding on both sides that the matters in contention, dealing with the operation of the system, would be dealt with in a fair, equitable and, I hope, expeditious manner?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I am sure the mediator is well aware of all of those particular concerns and, hopefully, that is exactly what he will be dealing with when he meets with the negotiating teams today.

LABOUR RELATIONS

Ms. Bryden: I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact the strike at Blue Cross is now in its tenth week and the company has refused to bargain since the strike began, will the minister tell us what efforts his officials are making to bring the parties together in order to enforce the law about bargaining in good faith and to end this distressing strike by employees trying to obtain a first contract?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I am sure the member is aware the mediation staff in our division remains willing and eager to participate in any mediation endeavours at any time. If the member has reason to believe intervention by that staff at this time to facilitate further meetings would be helpful, there is no problem at all in asking them to do so. As of the present moment, we have had no immediate indications from either party that there are any prospects for such a meeting, but if the member has reason to suspect now is a good time for further negotiations to commence, we will be glad to arrange it.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: I visited the picket line at Blue Cross this week. They indicated they were willing to have a mediator come; so it seems to me it is up to the ministry to go to the company. They told me the main issue in this strike was the question of union security for a newly certified union. I would like to ask the minister will he not change his views and commit himself to bring in legislation as early as possible next session on union security to avoid the necessity for—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The member asked that before and my answer remains unchanged. It is a matter which is under consideration and no commitment can be given at this time.

ENERGY RATES

Mr. Mancini: I have a question for the Deputy Premier and Minister of Energy. It has been nearly four years now since I first brought to the House the plight of the Ontario greenhouse farmers, which has given the government ample time to take a direct course of action to assist the greenhouse growers of Ontario.

In view of the fact this has not happened, could the Minister of Energy inform the House if he will make representation to the Ontario Energy Board on behalf of the Ontario greenhouse farmers that they should not be charged the new 1980 prices for natural gas and that their fuel bills should be frozen at 1979 levels, the difference being subsidized by the government of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The honourable member certainly knows it would not be proper for the minister to intervene with respect to any particular group of users. The industry to which he makes reference has an association. If they feel they want to make some representations, particularly as they relate to rates, they are at liberty to do so, I suppose, when any rate applications are brought before the board.

The honourable member has perhaps overlooked the fact the Ontario Energy Corporation is involved now through the agripark development to see what the possibilities are of recovery of some of the heat from some of our plants and there is experimentation in this line. This doesn't speak to the particular problems greenhouse people will have at their locations now. The member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) made that point at the standing committee on general government when we were going through the estimates of the Ministry of Energy last Wednesday.

I can say I would be very happy to continue discussions with the honourable member to see in what ways the Ministry of Energy can be of more particular assistance with respect to the concerns he has expressed. No doubt, the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Henderson) would want to be involved as well.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 164, An Act to amend the Assessment Act.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY

Resolution for supply for the following ministry was concurred in by the House:

Ministry of Housing.

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF TREASURY AND ECONOMICS

Resumption of consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Treasury and Economics.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The honourable member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) had been speaking at the last session. I believe he was waiting for a reply from the minister.

Hon. F. S. Miller: First, I assume he has completed his introductory comment. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, if I understand my two critics correctly, that looking at my estimates in general they prefer not to stick to item and vote numbers? In other words they want to have a free-ranging discussion in the time period so they do not have to be pulled up by the chair in the event they stray from a particular vote and item? Is that what I understand they would like to do? It certainly is acceptable to me, because in this particular ministry, unlike some others where programs are clearly defined, one may wish to talk about one topic that appears in two or three votes or may appear to be applicable to two or three votes.

[11:15]

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Treasurer, I want to be reasonable with the other members of the House who may not be here. As you know, we have allowed pretty wide-ranging comments on vote number one, but after vote number one it generally happens that we move along more quickly. I shouldn't say we like to move, but I am glad to hear your suggestion.

Mr. Peterson: We have had brief discussions among ourselves. I think my colleagues agree, and I think my friend from Nickel Belt agrees, we are just going to have a wide-ranging discussion; we could stack all votes and do them all at the end; we won't address our minds to specific votes until the very last moment.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, if you wish to put the general discussion under vote number one for the convenience of the chair, that's fine by me.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All I am saying is we have spent a great deal of time on vote number one; I presume that's what you want to do, but at the same time I have got to be reasonable with the other members who are not here now and who may want some time to discuss some other particular items.

Mr. Peterson: We are certainly happy. I know I am and I think my colleague from Nickel Belt is, as is the Treasurer. Any other members of the House who want to participate can do so at any time. I frankly don't detect all that much interest in it. It's a tragedy that we are the only ones interested in the fiscal integrity of this province. We have certainly never seen that kind of concern demonstrated by the government at least; however, we will do our best to bring responsibility back to this faltering government.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I think we have the tone the committee wants to follow.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, in trying to answer the opening comments of my two critics I may wander a bit or I may be a bit repetitious, but I will try to cover the points they brought up. First, I was quite happy with their respective comments. I recognize the basic function of critics is to criticize and to point out things that can be done better. I would say that having done that, I sensed both of them were quite fair in their approaches. I take their criticisms as being sincere ones rather than the kind one senses are sometimes offered the House, that is more for the record than for substance.

Mr. Laughren: We didn't even comment on your sartorial habits.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It only happens once a year.

Mr. Laughren: That may be why they don't take you too seriously in Ottawa.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's true; it's an indication of my thrift. May I then look at the comments of the member for London Centre?

Mr. Peterson: The radical middle in London.

Mr. Laughren: The soft under-belly of London.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. The first thing of interest he touched upon, apart from his comments about the general accuracy of the figures being given out by the province, and the election giveaways of 1975 and 1977, and ambiguity on interest rate policy, all of which have been touched upon at other times, is the discussion about the Lambert report and the approach in Ottawa to the control of spending. The question implied, I assume, that that kind of an approach was the best to use in the province of Ontario. We have followed the Lambert report and have reviewed it, obviously with great interest. I think that interest to some degree is substantiated by the fact a senior deputy minister is going to Ottawa, is being seconded to the very group implementing the Lambert report, and is bringing with him the expertise he had in Ontario as chairman of management board and in other positions, General Anderson.

Mr. Peterson: Who is that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: He is being seconded to Ottawa. I think the press release stating that just came out within the last day.

Mr. Laughren: Is he a general?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, he is a general. In any case, I suppose he is being paid for by Ottawa—I don't go into those details—but he is representing, in effect, the interests of Ontario and the expertise that Ontario has gained in the fiscal process.

I would think perhaps that is a compliment to the government of Ontario and its fiscal management, because one of the comments I recall from the Lambert committee, or the Auditor General of Canada, was that the federal government was totally out of control from a spending point of view.

Mr. Peterson: It was Macdonell who prompted the Lambert commission.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, and through that the commission which looked at the mechanisms of controlling expenditures. It may be the feeling of my opposition critics that is applicable in Ontario, but the fact is that Ontario was perhaps well ahead of the federal government in its recognition of the need to bring the spending of government under the control of the Legislature and of the politicians, rather than letting the process itself continue to proliferate.

If I recall the gist of Mr. Macdonell's comments that was really it, that the cancerous growth of the bureaucracy in Ottawa appeared to be going unchecked by any form of control. Any of us who have had any contact with it I think sense that. Certainly the budgetary deficits of the last few years, during which there have been horrendous changes, would indicate that.

He implied that the federal government should go to a five-year plan, and you talked about that. I would say this: while we deal with budgets one year at a time, the assumption that Ontario doesn't plan past that, of course, is wrong. You could look back to the budget papers that are attached each year, perhaps to the 1977 budget paper that talked about moving "towards a balanced budget," where we spelt out the prerequisites. I talked about it in my first budget this year, where I said it required something like a 2.5 per cent spread between revenues and expenditures to achieve a balanced budget and we had the potential to do it.

Ministries have always worked a number of years ahead. Certainly in the Ministry of Health, the minister there couldn't help but be planning the hospital requirements of the province or the programmatic requirements. We talk about regional priority budgets; we very often phase them over years. The Ministry of Transportation and Communications could easily show you its future planning. But one reason we have avoided going on a five-year record in public is that one of the great advantages of our system of government is we are flexible enough to adjust, either by speeding up or slowing down some of those forward planning projects to meet a given year's economic state.

A number of the techniques suggested by the Lambert report were talked about the other day when the debate in this House was carried on. I think my friend the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams), spent some time discussing it, and some of his comments are still apropos about management by objective and the policy-program budgeting systems under new names that perhaps were suggested by Lambert.

The fact is that some of those have been used; some of them still are used; and some of them, sadly enough, in our experience often add to the very problem they are trying to solve. They so bottle up the civil service in the planning process that they are planning but not doing. Those of us who have had some experience in private enterprise usually underplan and overdo; if there is a fault of government it is that it overplans and underdoes.

The bureaucratic process can become so complex through some of these techniques, that may work reasonably well in certain circumstances, that we felt, first of all Ontario isn't out of control; and secondly, some of these techniques would simply add to the burden of the present bureaucracy. Interestingly enough, the bureaucracy agrees with that. Look back across the record of the years since Mr. McKeough, in the fall of 1975, said, "The growth of government has been so rapid that something must be done. We physically won't be able to borrow the money to finance this province if we keep on at the present rate. We've simply got to bring things to a grinding halt." We then embarked upon pretty Draconian measures. If the members recall that was the mid-winter I embarked upon the hospital constraint exercise, which was not a very pleasant task. However, it was perhaps the most symbolic of all of them because it was the one the public—

Mr. Peterson: Symbolic but not successful.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would argue that. Hindsight is a great thing. I don't pretend to have planned what happened as a result of the measures I chose to undertake to meet the Treasurer's requirements.

I say I chose, because a lot of people went around assuming I was told this was the route I had to take to save the money the Treasury asked me to save. That wasn't so. As the then Minister of Health, I have to say I take the responsibility for the choices made, because they were mine. Let me say the purpose was to stop a system that was growing at the rate of 25 per cent a year from continuing to grow at that rate. That has something to do with this Lambert report.

At that point the political will was imposed upon the system. Routes were chosen that weren't necessarily totally accurate or successful, but which in the final analysis had exactly the result the Treasurer wanted: which was that we brought a realization, not just to the health system but to a good number of other agencies and government-dependent organizations, that the days of unlimited growth were over and the days of budgetary control had to start.

In fact I found the hospital system itself reacted with a great deal more responsibility in looking at its spending and brought it under control very quickly; albeit with some disagreements, but interestingly enough not half as many as the press of the day made us think. The support through the system was great. I'd say the message there was that the essential part of a government control exercise isn't a system one designs or a bureaucracy one sets up, but a determination by the politicians it must happen and the will to see it happens.

Ontario will be criticized to some degree, I'm sure, by the two members, but Ontario has been looked upon by many other jurisdictions as having done a job in advance of the public perception of the need to do it, and in time to avoid some of the catastrophes we've been seeing on the federal scene in Canada and are seeing in other countries.

Interestingly enough, about two or three weeks ago I had a visit from the West Germans. I guess all of us have the perception they are in great control of their economy. Mind you, I was talking to their opposition people so I wasn't hearing the best side of things.

Mr. Laughren: Unlike Ontario where you hear the best side from the opposition.

Mr. Peterson: The truth comes from the opposition here.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. They were quite impressed with the fact that Ontario alone had done some of the things they were unable to do even in a country as used to authoritarian decision-making process as they have been.

The member got on to the balanced budget. At one point in the course of his comments, he asked what my predictions were for cash requirements. I think he saw in the papers yesterday that the third quarter of the year was surprisingly buoyant. I think they mentioned a 1.3 per cent growth or some such figure. We keep on being pleasantly surprised by the buoyancy of the Ontario economy this year.

We predicted somewhere around 133,000 jobs for the year. We're currently at a 170,000 level, and it looks as if we'll manage to hold that through to the end of the calendar year. We kept saying, when the results were good—we were at the 145,000 level back around June or July—that it was better than we predicted but we really were expecting some softening; so far it hasn't happened.

What does that do to my cash requirements? My inflow of cash in some areas lags behind the events of the economy. On sales tax the lag is not much, but it could be 50 days; sales tax being collected on the 23rd of the month reflects something that occurred at least 23 days before, and perhaps as much as 53 days before.

Corporate tax payments reflect a much longer lag. They may reflect a quarter of a year lag or more, depending on the size of the corporation. I suppose the smaller the corporation the greater the lag, because their accounting practices don't necessarily adjust their corporate payments to reflect that immediate quarter. They look at the whole year for their picture, rather than quarter by quarter.

I can safely say that because we have had a good first three quarters of the calendar year, which means two quarters of a fiscal year, we're mildly optimistic about the cash requirements for this year. We add the caveat that I still have January, February and March to go through. Those months could see the predicted downturn, they could see the cash requirements change somewhat.

We have had a few disasters hit the budget, literal disasters, apart from the kind the member would imagine with me in control. I refer to things such as the Woodstock incident; the blight on the tobacco crop; the Mississauga disaster—which is as yet unassessed in terms of any provincial cost, outside of those immediate policing costs and so on. We have also made some discretionary decisions to increase health-care spending. But even so, the spending side is doing very well in terms of being close to projected figures, as the quarterly report shows.

The revenue side is buoyant. Therefore I can say, with some measure of security, that by the end of this fiscal year we will probably better the projected cash requirements. If I recall them, they are $1.158 billion in the budget. Who knows? It may be under $1 billion at the end of the year if we don't have a very soft January-February-March. So in the short-term view, things are looking pretty good.

If one goes to the next year, we have many unknowns. The Iranian situation, I'm sure, is of great concern to any person anywhere in the world who is making a budgetary forecast. The federal budget, coming down as it will in 12 to 13 days, can have a direct impact on growth in Canada. There are bound to be increases in taxes which will have some negative influence upon spending power.

Therefore, almost as I answered the question of my critic this morning about what I was going to do to soften the blows, I really have to await the budget forecast of Mr. Crosbie to know what actions may be necessary in Ontario to do whatever we can to alleviate the results.

The Canadian price of oil, one can be reasonably sure, is not going to affect us too much until mid-year. I think the member would accept that, wouldn't he? I don't expect we're going to see anything other than the agreed-upon $1 increase on January 1.

Mr. Laughren: Psychologically it will affect us before then.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The psychology of it is affecting us right now. Let's be honest. The psychology of the American scene is affecting us more than the psychology of the Canadian scene.

Recently, one of these consumer confidence polls that some group was running showed that our people still had very high confidence. This is obviously because people are at work. The human being who feels his job is reasonably secure, or who is employed to begin with, is generally a person who looks around and says, "I think I can make this purchase or that purchase." The problem in the United States is that degree of confidence hasn't been manifest.

Mr. Laughren: The auto workers in Ontario aren't feeling too secure.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Auto workers in Ontario, with good cause, have not been secure. When we get to the member's point I'll try to discuss that.

Mr. Peterson: The NDP caucus isn't feeling too secure.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Become Treasurer and you could almost become paranoid.

In any event, I'd say I'm satisfied that progress towards balancing a budget is as good as we anticipated and perhaps a little better. I am aware the economy could make this government, possibly with your concurrence, take steps this coming year or the following year to stimulate the economy.

Mr. Peterson: Particularly if there is an election.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There won't be an election this coming year unless we're forced into one. I think that's a safe thing to say.

Mr. Peterson: We may be obliged to straighten this place out in a hurry.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You may be obliged to? You would probably be obliging us if you did so, because that would immediately put us back in a position of majority.

Mr. Peterson: Oh, we'll see about that. Don't get too cocky.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We don't want you to hurry up. We've grown accustomed to your face and your suits.

The member talked about small business development corporations to some degree too. As to what the SBDCs are doing, as a matter of confidence, we're required, as a government not to reveal certain things, that's part of the rules of the game. In general terms, without getting into particular companies and particular investments, while most of them are still in the organizational phase, obviously, others are choosing and making investments. It's interesting to see they're taking some flyers. I see a couple of them making investments in solar heating manufacturing.

Mr. Peterson: How many investments have there been?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think there are 18 registered.

Mr. Peterson: How many different investments would that be?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can't tell you how many specific investments. I've got the dollars already invested per company. The investments made were $432,000 as of the date this was printed. That's two or three weeks old.

Mr. Peterson: How many companies would that be?

Hon. F. S. Miller: In the range of 10 different investments. The fact that 10 of the companies haven't as yet made any investments would indicate that some of the companies are into more than one thing right now.

Mr. Peterson: That's not very much; this is six months after the fact.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm more than pleased with what's happening. I found that while you and I in this room can assume that because we talk to each other about a program it must be instantly understood, out in the business world people who one assumes would be right up on top of things often aren't.

I have little chats and lunches with executives of corporations and others, such as union members and union leaders.

Mr. Laughren: Stop trying to back-fill.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, I don't need to. I can gladly take you to members of my own family who are members of unions.

Mr. Laughren: Your sister is probably married to one.

Hon. F. S. Miller: As a matter of fact, she is. I have three sisters, two of them were married to union members. I have several nephews who are union members.

Mr. Bradley: This must be somewhere in the Treasury estimates.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There is a voice from the wilderness. I have to tell you, at the same time, I don't have any biases, such as you want me to have, against such things. As your learned Speaker once said to me, with my background, where did I go wrong?

In any case, I would say that we are seeing the kind of success that is at least as good as predicted for SBDCs. Yesterday, when the northwestern Ontario chamber of commerce group came in, they made certain suggestions to us about the application of SBDCs in the north. I was pleased to note some of these investments are obviously going to the north. Does the honourable member want to hear some of the kinds of things—

Mr. Peterson: Yes, give us details.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can't give details of specific companies, but only the kind of things, like specialized pump equipment manufacturing, tool and die manufacturing, electrical parts, mining machinery manufacturing, aerospace components, digital clocks, microwave ovenware manufacturing, electrical parts manufacturing, tools for the automobile industry, solar heating investment, lumber production, clothing production, fertilizer, artificial fire logs, tourist complex—that is one of the biggest ones, $1 million. Again, more aerospace products, fur processing and wineries. Those are the kinds of investments that so far have been made by companies.

As I have said, I was interested about the northwestern Ontario group, because they say they liked the plan and were quite enthused about it, but in the smaller communities of northern Ontario finding enough people to raise a quarter of a million dollars was difficult. I think the honourable member may have mentioned that in his opening comments to me. I think he will recall my saying nothing was sacred in the plan, but we had to start somewhere and we had chosen certain things.

What I did say to the northwestern Ontario group yesterday in response to their point was that I could quite accept this was so and that I would like to take a good hard look at the statute and regulations to see whether there are ways and means of making exceptions for smaller communities in the north. If there are, I would think the honourable members would agree it should be done.

Mr. Peterson: Why not drop the limit to $100,000 or $150,000?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It may be the way we choose to do it, I don't know yet. All I said yesterday—and I think it surprised them and probably surprised me—is that yes, having listened to the arguments, I accept your point for the north.

Mr. Peterson: Do it in the south and the east, too, it doesn't really matter.

Mr. Laughren: You can start in Atikokan.

Mr. Peterson: What about debt versus equity? Is that—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Do you mean in these companies? I have no details, I have only the investments of the small business development corporation, which has to be equity. These are all equity investments shown here.

Mr. Peterson: Has the minister had representations to employ it more for debt going into companies?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, I don't see those. The administration of it is under the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck).

Mr. Peterson: I am just wondering what kind of feedback the minister is getting, whether he should—

Hon. F. S. Miller: I haven't had any criticism on that. I have had to look at a number of applications where one had to decide whether the intent of the act was being met. We had to put one limitation through policy, that the sum total of SBDC interests in any one ESB would be 60 per cent, because we saw some rather neat arrangements being made. We wanted basically to protect the small entrepreneur. We didn't want him moved right out of his company by two SBDCs taking the 98 per cent that theoretically, they could take in the beginning. On a policy basis, we have been sticking to 60 per cent and that seems to be acceptable.

Mr. Peterson: That is the maximum SBDCs can take in any company. It is something we talked about at the time.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, so we did stick it at 60 per cent as a matter of policy, after some specific examples came in where the ESB could be a higher percentage.

Mr. Peterson: Because we are talking informally, I am just as happy as if we were sitting in a committee room chatting, if we can do that.

[11:45]

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have no objection at all.

Mr. Peterson: If the Chairman has no objection, we can just sort of sit and chat.

Mr. Laughren: I feel a little uneasy about that because I would like to have the Treasurer respond.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Let me finish my response; if members feel they need to make an interjection, they have never been prohibited in the past. If it is a worthy interjection, I will be glad to respond.

Mr. Laughren: You will sit in judgement.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. We got into a discussion, as we almost always do, on equalization payments in Canada and Ontario's position on it. That is almost a topic by itself.

Let me try to summarize my feelings about it. I feel the oil issue has unduly complicated the public perception of equalization payments. I will be a bit didactic for a second. You know the reason for them in the beginning. They were started 20 years ago simply to transfer to provinces with low tax yields something like the national average on three basic sources of revenue; succession duties, corporate tax and personal income tax. That gave those provinces a little more revenue so they could carry out certain programs we felt all Canadians were entitled to, which a given province may not be able to afford.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order; the Ministry of Treasury and Economics is far too important a topic for us to be sitting here with only seven members in the House. I don't see a quorum.

Mr. Deputy Chairman called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

Hon. F. S. Miller: For those members who have rushed in from some other place, I will now carry on and I would expect to see them disappear as quickly as they came.

I have a sneaking suspicion, Mr. Chairman, that now that we have brought in this many people there may be more interruptions.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: If the Treasurer will proceed with his reply we will try to keep it a little more formal.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I will return to my discussion on equalization payments, their basic principle and what has happened to them.

We started with those three tax revenues. Let us recognize that we are talking about provincial tax revenues versus personal income of citizens within a province. They are not totally unrelated, one would think, but they can be unrelated particularly if a province chooses not to levy a particular tax, or has a lower rate of levy of a tax.

With those three sources of revenue, perhaps life was reasonably simple. But as we finally expanded the program to include 29, life became a little more complex, because not all provinces have all 29 sources of revenue. Even then, we find some, like Alberta, have great gobs of revenue in one of the accounts and another province, like Ontario, might have very little revenue in a particular account. A province like Prince Edward Island has virtually zilch. I am thinking of, say, resource revenue.

Mr. Peterson: It's a function of size, too.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Sure. It's not just a function of the size though, it's a function of many things. But it's always supposed to be a measure of a province's ability to raise the funds to produce necessary government services. I think that was the fundamental principle. We have amended it so that we only allow for half of the resource revenues. We have amended it to have the formula of gross payout limited so that no more than one third of it is resource revenue. Those two caps will of course restrict what happens in the future.

As I see it, the great weakness of equalization payments has been that they committed the federal government to make disbursements without necessarily giving it a revenue source to cover those obligations. This was particularly emphasized when the oil and gas revenues started to flow in large measure to the wealthier or to the producing provinces. We see then the obligation going from something in the range of $150 million in its first year to something around $3 billion in the next fiscal year. It has gone up, in some ways, at a compounded rate of 15.5 per cent if I recall. Anyway, it has gone up almost 100 per cent per year, if you look at the figures, from $150 million to $3,000 million in 20 years.

If the source of the federal revenues to meet the equalization payment obligations was somehow proportional to the wealth of the provinces, I think it would be reasonably fair. What has happened is the taxing powers of the federal government have not given it access to certain forms of wealth, but have left it with its traditional tax bases. So you see it turning to the alleged 25 to 30 cents a gallon excise tax on gasoline. That has nothing to do with the oil price at all. It is strictly a fiscal measure, aimed at trying to solve the kinds of problems brought about by the great growth in the federal government's responsibility to meet equalization payments out of its legal tax base. That, of course, then brings us into the oil fight, the revenue fight. It is of interest to Ontario in a very direct sense because 43 per cent of all federal revenues come from Ontario. Therefore, 43 per cent of equalization payments come from Ontario. I think you would accept that.

Mr. Peterson: Yes, but it's not as direct a phenomenon as you would have us think.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, but in general terms if the requirements of the federal government go up, unless they find a new way of reallocating their tax moneys within this country we can be expected to pay our share of it. I don't think we have argued that, except to say that no longer reflects the ability of the people or the province to pay. That's where the issue comes in, because the money we pay at the pumps or at the home for gas and for fuel oil—that price is, admittedly, artificially set—flows directly to the producing provinces. It gets split 45-45-10 roughly. The 45 per cent that goes to the provinces, without envy, simply is not available for the federal government, yet it is used in the calculation the federal government has to use to meet its obligation.

Therefore, they make their payments, turn around to their tax bases where they can find them and raise the money. That means that not only do we pay more for the oil at the pump or the home but in turn, we, in Ontario have to pick up 43 per cent of the equalization tab inflated by the oil wealth of the province.

Mr. Peterson: You still get 60 per cent back, so you are a net winner.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We don't get anything back on equalization payments. That leads us to the point you brought up. Why isn't Ontario taking its money on the equalization payments? If you didn't bring it up directly in your opening comments, it's a point you have raised before and your leader certainly has raised.

I would have to say at that point the exact figures for the record, according to our estimates, are that in 1977-78 the federal government would have owed us $109.9 million. In 1978-79, they would have owed us $202.5 million. In 1979-80, they would have owed us $154.4 million. We really can't predict what they would owe us in the next fiscal year until we know the price of oil.

Mr. Peterson: Are you using the present formula or the Bill C-26 formula?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's the present formula, as I recall. For your information, the total equalization payments made by the federal government in those same years in the same order are $2,587.3 million, $2,857.5 million and $3,010.7 million. Ontario was entitled to somewhere between four and seven per cent of the gross payout under the formula, whereas it's contributing some 43 per cent of it.

Obviously, when one starts negotiations, one should not cut off too many alternatives, so if I sound cautious in what I am saying, it is not through unwillingness to try to be specific, but it is in the interests of having a free enough hand to look at propositions that may come up on the federal scene as we discuss this problem.

Ontario's first position was, "Don't raise the price because all you are doing is compounding the problems and causing governments to take actions to support consumers that are not necessary if you don't raise the price." I think all parties have agreed on that.

Assuming the price goes up, then Ontario has said, "We do not believe the equalization formula had the intent nor the design to give us back the moneys we see as being needed to recycle oil revenues, as it presently is designed." Therefore, we are not encouraging that route and, therefore, we haven't taken our money, because we do not believe it was the intent of the original design.

Second, being totally realistic and pragmatic, while Bill C-26 was not passed—and I was wrong on that one day; I quite honestly admit that—the intent to pass it retroactively is there, and I believe it is still there. I am not sure, but I believe that is so. In any case, they are already carrying out calculations on the oil-lease revenues, I am told, on the assumption that they are going to be changed. Ontario had agreed with that in the beginning.

I am only saying that if all negotiations fail and the bill doesn't come in, Ontario may eventually say: "Fine. Having lost on other fronts, this money is now due us."

Let us look, though, at the alternative to that. If a good redistribution of oil revenues isn't worked out in Ontario's interest, then I would think the second position Ontario would have would be to look at equalization payments in a totally new light, a totally new purpose and totally new design. Then one would be saying they are there not only to support governments to make basic individual services, but may also be there to redistribute wealth. This would enable taxes in certain provinces to be lower than they otherwise would and, therefore, consumers would be left with more money in their pockets because oil prices are maintained at a high level. That kind of thinking may be required.

So we are going to be entering a very interesting and complex time as we go through the discussions of the redistribution of oil wealth and the equalization-payment formula.

Mr. Peterson: Can we pursue this later?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, sure.

At one point in your comments you talked about debt-to-equity ratio at Hydro, I believe. I don't have figures at my fingertips, but I thought they were somewhere around the 80 per cent level.

Mr. Peterson: Get George out here.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was going to go through my opening statements without a phalanx of bodyguards and then we will have those people who really know the answers out here.

Interestingly enough, the major way to cut the debt ratio in Hydro is to increase the rates.

Mr. Peterson: Or cut back the borrowing.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Or cut back the borrowing, yes. In fact I would guess that the borrowing this year will not reach its projected levels. The reason for that will be that revenues for Hydro from export sales are a little better than they have been and certain projects have not come on stream as fast as originally predicted.

But I hope you recognize that a fundamental part of the Minister of Energy's long-term proposals is the substitution of oil by other forms of energy, either indigenous to Ontario or renewable. Electricity can fall into both categories. Is it 37 per cent of Ontario's electricity which is currently generated by water? Obviously, there is some potential for expansion. I think that is correct. Let's not argue. I used 30 per cent one day and immediately got corrected by somebody from Hydro who said it was 37 per cent. It's 30 per cent to 37 per cent, the balance is the principal. The balance is either oil fired, coal fired or nuclear.

Ontario has emphasized nuclear power for the simple reason it is low-cost power and dependable. We have, we think, the best system in the world. We have the resources to produce the fuel for reactors within the province and we see a need, as time goes on to—

Mr. Peterson: You have friends in the business.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We all have friends in the business because they're citizens of Ontario. Surely all citizens of Ontario are my friends, your friends, and the NDP's friends.

In any case, of necessity there will be a replacement by electricity of oil in particular, gas to a degree and coal to a degree in so far as we can fuel by other than those fuels. While the load forecasts have been criticized and while no one would attempt to defend whether we should or shouldn't have the 20 per cent excess capacity we have, the fact remains it is going to look very good as time goes on.

When one goes to Quebec and sees them opening up the Baie James project one is able to say right now what the cost of electricity will be in Quebec in the year 1995. I think the member would agree with that. The capital costs are known. There will be some variation in the insignificant parts of electrical generation—that is repair, maintenance and the labour of maintaining the lines. They're not insignificant in total dollars, but perhaps in terms of the cost of power that advantage can look better and better.

While nuclear power doesn't have quite that kind of stability in terms of forward pricing, once the plant is in place a great big chunk of your future forecasting cost is in place. I think you would agree with that. The only variable then, apart from the manpower to run it, will be the future price of uranium. There are a lot of arguments about that. I'm not about to say what it will be, but I suspect since we're finding more and more uranium deposits as time goes on through this country and through the world, there's probably going to be some competition for sales for a while. This may be in the interest of Hydro and others.

The deteriorating debt-to-equity ratio, if it is deteriorating—and I would have to see the figures to say whether it is deteriorating or maintaining a higher level than one would expect to see in a privately-owned operation—has been, in large measure, an attempt to make sure the increases in the cost of hydro to the consumers of Ontario were kept to their absolute minimum level. If one built in an extra two or three per cent in the rate, one could obviously start cutting down, either in the borrowing, which would be the current basis, or some other form of debt reduction.

The member also got into pensions and I have some notes on pensions. I assume you looked at the province's recent paper on pensions, Treasury Study 16. That was put forward as a staff paper for interesting discussion and analysis, by people who have more knowledge of the variables than I pretend to have, because when I start looking at some of the equations and curves I will be the first to tell you, I couldn't be a critic of them.

The basic conclusion of the third part was an interesting one. It says, "A Policy Dilemma"—did the member read that? The basic conclusion of the third part talked about pay-as-you-go or funded pensions. I think that's the issue you tackle most times when you talk in this House.

It says, "A Policy Dilemma: The Conflicting Conclusions Post a Dilemma." The conflicting conclusions were that contribution rates are lower on pay-as-you-go in the early stages and higher in the later stages. The economy appears to do better on a funded pension plan; the total costs are lower on a funded pension plan, but the initial costs are higher to the person making the contributions. You have that dilemma of deciding what is in the immediate and long-term interests of the people involved.

Since our last lengthy discussion on this in my last estimates I have had the benefit of talking to a number of people who are actuaries and in the business. I was rather surprised to find that they're not half as gung-ho to support totally funded pensions as I expected they would be. I guess my first simplistic reaction, in advance of being Treasurer, was that a totally funded pension is the only safe pension. Their answer, in many cases, is that somewhere in between is probably going to be the right mix. I'm now talking not about government people but people who sell pension plans and are in the private business world.

I am going to await the findings of our royal commissioner. The member said I would say that. But in all honesty, I think for a minister to stand up in the middle of a royal commission and pontificate upon the outcome would prejudice the work of that commissioner.

Mr. Peterson: Not if he doesn't know anything about it.

Mr. Laughren: And they know he doesn't know anything about it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Even if he doesn't know anything about it, it's assumed he does.

Mr. Peterson: You assume people take you seriously.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In my case, the analogy the member attempted to draw was totally erroneous.

The fact remains I really respect the need for the royal commissioner to require a certain degree of freedom from prejudgement of her work. I only hope the report comes in as quickly as possible, although I set June 1980 as the most likely date.

Mr. Peterson: What's your opinion of the economic council report that came out this week?

Hon. F. S. Miller: What aspect of it?

Mr. Chairman: Order. There will be ample time to ask further questions.

Mr. Peterson: On contribution rates.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The 9.9 per cent, or whatever it was.

Mr. Peterson: Seven per cent.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's the very kind of thing I think I should not offer a public opinion on because I hope it's the kind of thing I'm going to be hearing from the royal commissioner in due course. We have put out here, without attempting to tell you the answers, the problems and the alternatives.

Mr. Peterson: I know the problems and I've got the alternatives.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's the great advantage of being totally certain.

The fact remains I hope that will be a useful discussion piece within the areas where people pay a good deal of attention to it.

Mr. Peterson: The Treasurer can get his two-handed economists working on that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If the member can find me a one-handed economist, I'd like to meet him.

Mr. Peterson: What about the problem of funding to pay back the CPP over the next 20 years?

Mr. Chairman: Please disregard the interjections or questions.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Chairman, it's not an interjection, it's a discussion.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: When I have my staff beside me, we'll be coming to the specific questions such as the honourable member is now posing.

I will move to the opening statement of the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), representing the NDP. I had a lot more notes on him. I'm not sure I can answer them clearly.

Mr. Peterson: The eight questions.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Eight questions, yes.

I would only make one of my snide political comments that we always have to have a bit of rhetoric in our opening statements. The member for Nickel Belt was talking about the public ownership of resources being the key to the health of the economy.

Mr. Laughren: On a point of personal privilege: If I recall my words correctly, I said the public ownership of the resource industry was the key to unlocking the economic development of Ontario.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think the member is probably quite right. I even have the words "economic development" in my notes.

Mr. Laughren: It's a nice lever.

[12:15]

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member for Nickel Belt wants a healthy private sector. He also said that. So do I. That made me think of my days as Minister of Health when healthy things were all I was interested in. I learned then of an interesting cause of disease.

I read a book by a man called Ivan Illich. The lady behind me introduced me to him once. It was called Iatrogenic Diseases or some such thing. Those are diseases induced by the physician. Those are diseases caused by going to see a professional.

The big difference between you and me is the determination as to how involved the physician should be in the health of the economy. If one has a physician too involved in one's personal health, one starts to suffer from diseases caused by the physician. May I suggest to you the same parallel applies in the economic field. We could have iatrogenic economic disorders. How's that for an economist?

Mr. Laughren: If the patient doesn't look after himself then the physician must.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's true, but that's a big difference between your approach and my approach. I agree completely with that. There is a role for the state. I wish things were as white and black as our theoretical philosophies would make us believe they are. I've come so far towards understanding that there is a need for the role of government that I have the Employment Development Fund doing things. But the real difference is one of degree. It's not a question of absolute differentiation. So I would have to say public ownership of resources would not be the answer to unlock the key to economic development but, rather, private ownership is—with government involvement in the process and profiting from the development of those resources.

I'm going to have more trouble answering the member for Nickel Belt's questions than I had the member for London Centre's. You talked about our manufacturing industry. You noted, I think it was in your speech, the relative decline of the percentage of jobs in the manufacturing sector. I'm not here to quarrel with those percentages. I don't have any counteracting figures. But I would say that's one of the problems with taking one statistic by itself. If 30 per cent of the work force a few years ago was involved in manufacturing, and 24 per cent now and 22 per cent a couple of years ago, whatever the figures were—I'm going by memory—it doesn't necessarily follow that there's a decline in the manufacturing sector. We have been entering an age of greater and greater automation, as you know, and this involves more output per person employed.

Second, that means there are more people employed in nonmanufacturing sectors as the economy improves and we have seen a great growth in the service sector. So the percentage of total jobs in manufacturing has declined, true, but the total number of jobs has increased, true. So we can both look at the factors and say from your point of view it's a failure, and from my point of view it's a success. That doesn't mean we have solved the problems of manufacturing in Ontario. We haven't.

You touched upon GATT and what's going to happen in that. Ontario has consistently said throughout the GATT negotiations that our industries were the most sensitive to the changes. We did have some of the higher protective barriers. Perhaps we have been naive as Canadians in the world market because it wasn't just tariffs that protected industries, it was the policies of governments that protected industries.

We lost the UTDC deal in the States a while ago, I think it was Philadelphia. Just yesterday, somewhere, someplace, I read the kinds of pressures that were brought to bear upon Philadelphia, and Boeing, to make sure Canada didn't get the deal and that a Japanese consortium did. That is the kind of trade-off that some of the foreign countries have been taking.

I must say the aggressiveness, particularly of Japan and Germany in the foreign markets and their protection of the home market—especially in Japan—has made tariffs just one and perhaps not the most important of the many factors that relate to our success in foreign trade.

Even so, we recognize that we will have to work with the federal government to have adjustment aid available. The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) can more appropriately discuss the form of aid that will have to be available.

I also take great pleasure in looking at the jobs created, and where they are created over the last couple of years. Last year, of the 144,000—or whatever it was—jobs created in Ontario, 102 per cent were in the private sector.

Mr. Laughren: Say that again.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I said 102 per cent were in the private sector.

Mr. Laughren: I thought that's what you said.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: That is naturally obvious.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is obvious, because there was a net decline in the public sector.

That compared to an historic average of something closer to 70 per cent private, 30 per cent public, over a number of years. I am told that in 1979, 170,000 jobs are again 100-odd per cent at least, private sector. That can't help but be a healthy sign, because it means all of those are net producers of wealth. You don't have a seven-to-three ratio of dependence upon others for income.

Mr. Laughren: But if London Life hires another 10 insurance salesmen, that's individual wealth, not community wealth.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Wealth is created in many, many ways in the private sector, and London Life is not likely to hire 10 to flog it, unless somebody is making money to buy it.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: That's commission; they're not paying anyone, they're not paying a soul.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The honourable member got onto the conference board and its forecasts of growth. I think he talked about 30,000 jobs being predicted for next year. We haven't come to our predictions for next year yet and we won't until the federal budget is through and we get into our final budgetary process.

I would like to look back at the years 1974 and 1975 and say that while I wouldn't want to use them as a yardstick, we still saw something like 54,000 jobs created in a year where recession followed an American recession. That could quite possibly be a dangerous thing to do this year, so we are not going to make an estimate of next year's jobs. We will see the federal government's budget and then we will have to come forward with our own, after we have a better understanding of the parameters that are going to apply to the Canadian economy.

To get on to the deficit in manufactured goods.

Mr. Laughren: May I put a question, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That is up to the minister. Agreed?

Mr. Laughren: I am wondering if the Treasurer is not going to go into a little bit of detail about the whole redeployment problem as a result of the GATT negotiations, or whether he is saying that is up to the Minister of Industry and Tourism, because I think that is an economic problem for Ontario, not just an Industry and Tourism problem.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I quite agree it is not just an Industry and Tourism problem. The basic actions that are taken are usually just like the pulp and paper things of today. They are usually announced through that ministry and usually argued as part of their issue. I don't want to go further today but to say, "Yes, there is a recognition of the need." There has been a stated recognition throughout the whole process. When we have the economic development conference that is scheduled for the federal government, in Winnipeg in mid-January—January 18, 19, 20—is that it?

Mr. Laughren: Winnipeg in January?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, Winnipeg in January, which is not for the—

Mr. Laughren: Balmy organizers.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In any event, I suspect that kind of issue is going to be high on the agenda of government planning. Certainly it is something Ontario is interested in. As you know, there is going to be a conference, with governments, unions and industries represented. Do you know anything about it?

Mr. Laughren: No.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That was one of the platform planks of the new Progressive Conservative government that there would be a conference something like the one we had in February 1977 in Ontario, the Partnership for Prosperity conference.

The federal government feels, regardless of any provincial interest, there is a need for a national-level conference to discuss the economic future in the longer term and the steps that have to be taken. I hope this kind of issue is going to be high on its list.

Mr. Laughren: Are you going to it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't know.

Mr. Laughren: I would like to go.

Hon. F. S. Miller: They have said there will be 150 people from all across Canada.

Mr. Peterson: It would be 151 if Mr. Laughren could make it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If they prorate from across the provinces, that is 11 divisions into 151. Allowing for the feds to have their share, that gives Prince Edward Island about 13 and Ontario about 13. The fact remains that they will be choosing the delegates, and I assume ministers will be invited. I have heard some of the provinces are not willing to send ministers.

Ontario is willing to send its minister, provided ministers are attending as a general rule. In other words, Ontario is quite happy to go along with the conference, be present at the ministerial level and be observers in it. As I understand it, we wouldn't be anything but observers unless we are asked to partake in a discussion or a working session. It is aimed at getting a handle on some of the kinds of things you were talking about and, of course, many others too.

The deficit in manufactured goods, which I assume also would be discussed at a conference like that, is one of those areas where, while we may differ in solutions, we surely don't disagree in principle. Whether we talk about autos, which are a specific part of it, or whether we talk about mining machinery, also a specific part of it, the whole issue is we do need to see a smaller deficit on manufactured goods. That has to be one of the major objectives of this province.

You and I have argued at times as to whether one achieves it by reducing imports or by increasing exports. I would like to say I don't give a darn which way we do it. The net thing is to work on both of them and come up with an increasingly declining percentage.

The first thing we have to have understood in Canada by our sister provinces is the recognition this is a Canadian problem and requires a degree of Canadian co-operation to solve it. In fact, there should be a Canadian preference exhibited right across this country for products manufactured at home.

Mr. Laughren: It takes chutzpah for you to stand there and talk about procurement policies, given your record.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would say the Ontario record is pretty good.

Mr. Laughren: I will bring up some specific cases.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The fact remains that we haven't always seen, we felt, the same enthusiasm for Canadian procurement in other provinces if the sourcing was within Ontario.

One of the things that encouraged me was mentioned by Mr. Bouey when he was talking about the high interest rates, namely, that one of the reasons for maintaining them high was that even if we let the dollar drop, our export industries couldn't profit because they are already too busy. That is not true, of course, of the auto industry at the moment.

One of the encouraging statistics in front of me is that capital investment in Ontario is running ahead of this year's expectations. When we started the year we said that of the $100 billion that was expected in gross provincial product, about $10 billion would be for capital investment. We are told it's running closer to $14 billion now.

Coming to the auto pact, I would point out that we in Ontario have repeatedly taken the position that Canada has to have its fair share of North American auto production. We have met and supported the Automobile Parts Manufacturers Association several times. We have supported their briefs and presentations to the federal government in that connection. We even had a paper on it in April 1978, called The North American Automotive Industry—An Ontario Perspective. In that we stated that a fair share meant we in effect should see our production growth move in step with our domestic consumer use of cars.

Of course that's the big problem in the last year, as the honourable member knows. Our sales went up about the same amount as the American sales went down. It happened that the products that were the biggest losers were the ones that happened to be assembled here and so we saw very serious implications for us.

The study the feds had awhile back on the auto pact—I think it was done by the gentleman who was one of its negotiators in the beginning—implied that it wasn't wise to reopen the talks right now. I would support that in the sense that there may be more to lose than there is to gain at the present time.

Mr. Laughren: Would you sign a document that it would cost you more than it is costing us now?

Hon. F. S. Miller: We sense that the American Congress right now hasn't been willing to provide many trade concessions. I think the member would agree with that because they are facing a recession and they are facing a deficit in their foreign trade also. Obviously they are starting to protect the home front. We are going to have to do our damndest; and I think through the Employment Development Fund we have implemented some good measures this year to what we call "tilt" some decisions to the Ontario side. It is the only real purpose of that fund to see that it tilts something away from the United States to Canada, or maintain something here like the pulp and paper industry that otherwise would have some stormy weather ahead of it.

Mr. Laughren: You shouldn't have used public money to get our fair share though.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, we shouldn't have to. I am the first to say that. My Premier has told the auto parts manufacturers that in my presence. He has also said it publicly. The fact remains, it's a fool's game being pursued by a number of states that force other states—I use "states" in the generic sense—into the same kind of game. It's like so many shooting wars or price wars. Obviously there are winners, but there are a lot more losers than there are winners.

Ontario would do just as well without any incentives being offered on the other side of the border or here, I am totally satisfied. In other words, if one left the choices to the marketplace without trying to influence them we would do just as well. But, sadly, that was not the state of affairs when we decided to get into the Employment Development Fund. While it offends me, as it offends the honourable member—

Mr. Laughren: Because they don't honour the fair share concept.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am not talking about the auto pact particularly. I am talking in general. I have to live by the way the game is being played right now whilst trying to change the way it's being played right now to what we think it should be.

We have had support for the duty remissions scheme. There has been quite a difference of opinion in some parts on that. I think Volkswagen has been one of the companies to get involved in that. I think some of the Japanese companies are now starting to be involved in it too.

I have talked about the Employment Development Fund assistance to the auto parts industries. As of now, we have provided $4.51 million in grants and $1.5 million in loan guarantees to nine auto parts firms in Ontario. We estimate those grants will create about 2,000 direct jobs and will cause $73 million worth of investment to be made in the industry and would raise our exports by $515 million, in round figures, over the next five years.

Mr. Laughren: What about the tariff reduction in auto parts? Did you dig that out?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can't answer that. Perhaps later on I can get some specific information. The key thing is the auto parts firms which are getting that assistance are spending, on an average, $16 for every dollar Ontario is providing. That contrasts with the Ford deal which was $20 for every dollar our government provided. That's one step we took in that particular area. The member has asked eight questions, and I am going to have trouble with your eight questions, because I don't have answers in the order they were produced.

Mr. Laughren: That's all right.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You were rattling them off so fast I had some trouble—

Mr. Laughren: I made special allowances for you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You usually do.

You talked about government procurement policy to some degree. That's the one I am turning to now, government procurement. That was the next page in the notes anyway. Our Ontario policy has been to give a price preference of 10 per cent in respect of Canadian content of goods and services for government purchases. That's been in effect since 1974. In 1976, it was estimated that 99 per cent of the ministry purchases were from Canadian suppliers and the domestic content of those purchases was between 85 and 90 per cent. We tried very hard to make sure the purchases that were secured outside of Canada were confined to things that were not made domestically.

Mr. Laughren: There were exceptions to that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Certainly, there are some exceptions. The member got on to one specific project in Peel and I think since then you've had an opportunity to talk to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) in the question period, so I will skip that one.

We in Ontario, and I think I mentioned this earlier, are going to keep on pushing for a "buy Canadian" policy. That was basically agreed upon at the first ministers' meeting a year ago I think in April. It has been fairly actively promoted by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism in Ontario, and I think it's starting to have its effect.

Mr. Laughren: Have you figured out a way to label chickens yet?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. One of the things I am intrigued about, talking to some Japanese business people, is if one offers a product for sale in Japan which is not made there and it is lower in price and better in quality, they tell me the Japanese buyer still prefers to buy the Japanese product. Would that we could educate our Canadian consumer to do the same. I wouldn't particularly ask them to pay a premium, but I surely would like to increase the awareness of all of us, of the need to keep buying Canadian-made products.

I sometimes get quite upset when specific things come along. I will tell you one of those stories that happened to me, two little stories. One didn't have success and the other did. These days I burn a little bit of wood at home. A number of us are doing that. I can't afford the oil, so I went out to my woodlot and cut down some trees.

Mr. Laughren: The Indians say they know it is going to be a bad winter because the white man is cutting a lot of wood.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In any event, having tried to start my chainsaw, I brought this wood over to the house and had to split it. Having spent a week in hospital after having tried to split it, I bought a wood splitter.

Mr. Laughren: You spent $2,000 to save yourself $100. Some Treasurer!

Hon. F. S. Miller: You know how it is. Have you ever estimated the true cost of burning wood? I saw the economics of it once, between the OHIP payments, I am being a bit facetious. I bought the wood splitter about a year and a half ago because we were splitting quite a bit at that time. One of our company's projects was actually selling it. We discovered we couldn't buy a Canadian-made wood splitter, and I conscientiously went around asking for a Canadian-made wood splitter.

I can't think of a simpler piece of machinery to make. It has got a hydraulic ram and a stationary wedge and an I-beam underneath it, connected by a couple of hoses to whatever hydraulics you have on your tractor or to a small portable gas engine or electrical engine, depending upon the kind you buy.

Not having found one, I asked the Ministry of Industry and Tourism to tell me if there was a Canadian source for such a thing.

Mr. Peterson: You got the whole bureaucracy working on it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. They responded and said they understood somebody out in BC did make some, but they didn't necessarily market them in eastern Canada. I then wrote to one of the companies in my riding that makes light machinery and said, "Maybe this is something you could build because as the wood industry grows in this province there will be more demand for them."

Mr. Laughren: With two trees being planted for every one cut, there are going to be more trees around too.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's right. There is going to be a great demand. Those are all going to be straight, true and made into lumber and chips.

The sad part of that story—I am just telling it in anecdotal form—is that I haven't seen anybody take any action to build them. The other one was a little happier, and that gets into government procurement.

Mr. Laughren: Just before you leave that one, the dining room could use them for breaking their rolls as well.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The ones they leave on the table where I sit.

We have got government procurement at the municipal level. Maybe this is a level we need to dwell upon too, because they are spending $4 billion at the municipal and educational levels in this province. At least that is our transfer to them. That means about $8 billion.

We have a little company in my riding that makes garbage packers to go on the back of a large truck and pick up the garbage.

Mr. Peterson: Is that your speech writer you are talking about?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. Once they had the garbage track, I needed a garbage packer who was a speech writer. You can sort that one out in a while.

This company made a frantic phone call about a year ago to say it was tendering on a Metro Toronto tender. They were low tender but they weren't being accepted because they were new in the business, even though they had an American design, et cetera, that they had purchased the rights to in Canada.

I entered the foray very late. The orders were already issued and nothing could be done, but I was appalled with that. It was a matter of familiarity with the product that made a municipality say, quite properly, "We like what we are buying and we are not willing to risk buying something made in Canada."

I think that is something we have to be prepared to do. I hope you would agree with me that as Canadian firms come on stream in this country and do make products, either of their own design or under purchased rights, people will have the confidence to try them.

The success story is this: this year with a large number of other packers they tendered on another municipality's deal. Again, they were turned down for exactly the same reasons, but this time we heard about it early enough. As the member for the area, I had that corporation called and said, "What's wrong with buying Canadian?" They gave us the old reasons. We said, "Would you even take the time"—the politicians hadn't heard about it—"to talk to the company and listen to their point of view?"

[12:45]

I don't know for sure but I'm told they decided to try half of their order with the Canadian product and half of their order with the old one.

Consciously, we as politicians all have that responsibility in this Legislature when it comes to procurement on behalf of either our own constituents or the greater constituency of the province. It's interesting sometimes how a little thing such as that can tip the balance in favour of a Canadian supplier.

We do the same thing with the employment development fund. When we talk to a company that is getting a grant from us, one of the basic questions is, "Where are you going to source the materials you're buying?" In a number of cases, the Ministry of Industry and Tourism has acted as a broker saying, "Do you know that there's a Canadian supplier for this product?" We have had some degree of success in bringing the supplier and purchaser together.

Mr. Laughren: Except the big ones.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm happy to see us succeeding to any degree. It starts to move in the right direction because as your companies get healthier, they become better known, their products are better accepted, people are not nervous about the low tender, et cetera.

I think I've talked enough about the merchandise account. The service account was touched upon. One of the reasons we are worrying considerably about balancing the budget, of course, is that we are concerned about the worsening service account of Canada and we are hoping to prevent us, as a government, from borrowing abroad so we can leave more money at home and, therefore, have less interest to pay to foreign countries.

I think the member made some comments about small business through the process. One of the programs I am delighted to see being acted upon very quickly by people in the member's area and my area is this Tourism Redevelopment Incentive Program.

When I was with the Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters Association on Wednesday evening in Sault Ste. Marie, I was astounded to find that few of the operators had, as yet, become aware of it. That was quite different from operators in southern Ontario who appeared to be immediately aware of it. I've now concluded it was because the southern Ontario tourism conference occurred very shortly after the announcement whereas the northern one has just occurred, the Northern Ontario Development Corporation has just had the chance to explain it to the operators present.

I hope the member would accept that as a very positive move to attempt to help at least one sector of the business community and the small business community with some of the high interest that we're facing today. We expect that the only problem we will face is whether there will be enough money to meet the requirements of the industry as it decides to improve its facilities.

I'm a great believer that the tourism industry is about to turn around in Canada and that we are on the edge of seeing a return to fairly healthy long-term-stay tourism. We all have had the best year in our history in Ontario. One year, however, does not make a trend. The fact remains that the year was healthy before the Americans had their gas problems because reservations were made well in advance and before the spectre of gasoline shortages had reared its head in the United States. So, one can't say that Americans suddenly flocked to Canada once they saw that they couldn't travel at home.

I sincerely believe that the era of foreign travel will start to fade, somewhat, that we'll see Canada becoming a better and better destination for Europeans, to some degree, but for Americans and Canadians in particular. Our biggest market still remains our own, right here.

I think what tourism needs, of course, is a reinvigoration because in the 20 years I've been in the tourism business, with great dismay I've been seeing old resorts gradually deteriorate, fail to update, stay in the hands of people who stay in the business 10 years past the point where they want to be, or should be—like me—the prime property ends up as subdivisions and is removed from the tourist industry. That's particularly true of those centres that are close enough to our major metropolitan areas. It's not true of northwestern Ontario or northeastern Ontario once you pass North Bay, I would say; but it certainly is true of the sector south of Lake Nipissing. It's been a very real concern to me.

I think we have an absolutely essential task to maintain that industry. It's employing 413,000 people at peak—admittedly not year-round, admittedly not at high wages. But the fact remains it's an essential ingredient in our economy and has to be supported. That program will help that, I think.

The member talked about the role of the public sector in the economic development of Ontario. Again, we would have some philosophical difference with him on the degree of involvement. Nationalization is obviously not the cure for every ill. I think we both moved a bit. We just emphasized that one of the first roles the public sector has in the economic development of Ontario is the one I mentioned earlier when I was talking about jobs—that is, not to expand itself too fast, so that resources are left for the balance of the economy untaxed.

Mr. Laughren: If the public sector creates wealth it is not absorbing it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. You're not going to get me to disagree with you.

I'm going to be giving very serious thought to the comments the member for Nickel Belt made about mining machinery. I think I have some specific notes on it.

Mr. Peterson: You made them last year.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I may be a little more optimistic than I was. These are the notes my staff gave me. They said that in 1978 the trade deficit on the whole range of machinery was $4 billion in Canada. The interesting thing, though, is that the growth of imports has been less than the growth of exports in the last 10 years.

Mr. Laughren: But the deficit is greater.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Okay. It's the rate of growth we're talking about there, and the fact that Canadian manufacturers are beginning to specialize in export. I've seen evidence of this down in Mississippi, watching them cutting down forests. I was very pleased to see equipment made in North Bay, I think it was.

I'm delighted to see companies like Champion Road Graders, of Goderich competing in a world market, as I understand. I would choose a couple of those companies as evidence that the ability to do it is with us. The question is what range of product can you afford to be involved in and do it well. I think that's the key issue before us, and perhaps to some degree our industries are starting to come to that.

Mr. Laughren: Start in an area where you've got a large domestic demand.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In mining machinery the member for Nickel Belt used a figure that probably was low. The 1978 trade deficit of $616 million for mining machinery was less than the 1976 figure of $646 million. Since 1974, imports have grown at an annual rate of 14.6 per cent; exports have recorded an annual growth of 27 per cent in mining machinery.

The recent trade show in Sudbury we hope should serve to continue to reduce the imports and to encourage rationalization in the mining sector so we can afford to make some of the products here. A lot of the mining machinery that is being imported into Canada is earth-moving and earth-drilling equipment, et cetera, for projects like Syncrude.

Again, digressing from my notes here, I was very happy to see a picture in one trade magazine this week of the largest rear-dump loader ever made in the world. Was it from London? It was made by the GM division. Is it the Euclid division down there? It was a 300-ton unit for the mining industry and, in that case, for export. I quite quickly admit there are many imported components, but the fact remains here is the vital part of the mining industry, on a major scale, being built here and showing the potential for that.

Canadian manufacturers' shipments of mining machinery and equipment, excluding hoists, rose from about $180 million in 1973 to $280 million in 1977. We have certain areas of rock drilling and earth-drilling machinery, et cetera. We hope we will see an improvement.

May I stop at this point?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It would be a good point.

On motion by Hon. F. S. Miller, the committee of supply reported progress.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

ELLIOT LAKE URANIUM MINES

360. Mr. Wildman: Who in the Secretariat for Resources Development has the responsibility for overseeing government programs related to the Elliot Lake expansion? (Tabled November 22, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: During the last two years community expansion in the Elliot Lake area has been monitored on behalf of the cabinet committee on resources development by the deputy ministers' committee on occupational and environmental health as part of its task to co-ordinate provincial representation at the hearings of the Environmental Assessment Board. The deputy ministers' committee is chaired by the Deputy Provincial Secretary for Resources Development and includes the Deputy Ministers of the Environment, Labour, Natural Resources and Health. In assessing the Elliot Lake situation the committee is augmented to include the Deputy Ministers of Housing, Intergovernmental Affairs and Northern Affairs.

The decision of the government with regard to its involvement in the Elliot Lake area is presented in its response to the findings and recommendations of the Environmental Assessment Board regarding community assessment. In that response the Ministry of Northern Affairs is identified as the agency to co-ordinate the preparation of an appropriate course of action for the consideration of the cabinet committee on resources development should problems arise requiring provincial involvement.

361. Mr. Wildman: When will the report be available outlining the amount of money the government will give to Elliot Lake in relation to the uranium mining expansion? Will it be made public? Will there be preliminary estimates? (Tabled November 22, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: A report on the financial impact of expansion in the town of Elliot Lake was commissioned by the town council and prepared by the consulting firm of Giffels Associates Limited. The first report was submitted to council in February, 1979 and updated in May 1979 in the light of further information regarding population growth. The Giffels report gives an estimate of the town's capital requirements for the expansion period and also an estimated flow of income to the town in the form of government grants, taxes and monies from the sale of land and homes.

A copy of the Giffels report is available in the municipal offices.

362. Mr. Wildman: Is the government considering any special funding for the town of Blind River to help them deal with expansion due to the increase in uranium mining in Elliot Lake? (Tabled November 22, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The government has already provided the town of Blind River with special financial assistance to construct a new sewage disposal works. In this regard the Ministry of Northern Affairs contributed $2 million towards the project and the Ministry of the Environment provided technical services for the development, design and construction of the plant at no cost to the town. The new plant has the capacity for 5,150 persons.

It is understood the capital priority now facing the town of Blind River is the need to rehabilitate outdated portions of the sewage collector system. If the collector system was gradually improved it is estimated the town's population could increase from the current 3,200 persons to 4,500 persons by 1984.

In response to a request from the town of Blind River for financial assistance towards the rehabilitation of the sewage collector system, the Ministry of Northern Affairs has encouraged council to have a financial impact study prepared to assess the cost and revenue implications of expansion. The Ministries of Housing and Northern Affairs will each contribute up to $10,000 towards the cost of the study.

363. Mr. Wildman: Is it true that Ontario Hydro must approve expenditures over $100,000 regarding town site development in Elliot Lake? (Tabled November 22, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Welch: Under the terms of the purchase-sales agreements with the Elliot Lake uranium producers, Ontario Hydro has the right to review in advance any proposed orders and contracts, including those related to housing programs, before they are let. This applies to orders in excess of $100,000 for Denison Mines and those in excess of $200,000 for Preston Mines. The parties are obliged to use their best efforts to resolve any questions that may arise from such reviews. However, the final decisions rests with the mining companies provided that the work involved is within the agreed scope of the development projects and good business practices have been utilized.

364. Mr. Wildman: Why is Ontario Hydro delaying approval of company advances to the town of Elliot Lake for sewage treatment facilities? When will the decision be made on the proposal to have the mining companies advance monies for sewage treatment to the town of Elliott Lake? (Tabled November 22, 1979.)

Hon. Mr. Welch: The mining companies, Denison Mines and Preston Mines, have advised Ontario Hydro that it will be necessary for them to provide prepayments to the town of Elliot Lake for serviced lots to be developed in the new number two townsite. This will provide part of the cash flow requirements for the development of the necessary services, including sewage treatment facilities.

Ontario Hydro advised the mining companies in October 1979 that it concurred with their proposal to make the prepayments with the understanding that the companies would formalize with the town the terms and conditions pertaining to the advances. These matters are presently being completed.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY CORRECTIONAL SERVICES DISPUTE

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, in view of the unlawful strike that has now been commenced by employees in correctional and other institutions in this province, I think it important that I review for the members the events that have led to this unlawful action and the efforts the government has made to prevent it.

The members will recall that the question of whether a separate category for salary purposes should be created has been a matter for discussion between the government and the Ontario Public Service Employees Union for some time. Recently the union indicated it would be recommending strike action to its members if government would not accede to the union's demands. Since about November 10, the union has engaged in a concerted effort to procure a strike of the employees to achieve their objectives.

Notwithstanding the government's opposition to the union's proposal, and faced with the obvious concern expressed by the employees with respect to this issue, I offered, on behalf of the government, to submit the matter to final and binding arbitration by an independent third party. I made that commitment on November 28, 1979, in a meeting I had with Mr. Sean O'Flynn and some of his colleagues.

The union took a strike vote among the affected employees on November 29, and the employees voted in favour of a strike.

That same evening, I delivered to Mr. O'Flynn a letter in which I reaffirmed the commitment of the government to resolve the dispute in a peaceful, lawful manner and the commitment of the government to ensure that the law of this province would be obeyed. At the same time, I had delivered to Mr. O'Flynn an agreement, signed by myself on behalf of the government, under which the dispute would be resolved by binding arbitration, and invited the union to sign the agreement or propose modifications to it. I am tabling a copy of the letter to Mr. O'Flynn for the information of the members.

Since my discussion with Mr. O'Flynn on November 28 and his receipt of my letter dated November 29, Mr. O'Flynn has rejected my proposal for resolving the dispute, and he and the union have continued to advocate and counsel unlawful strike action.

In the face of the impending activity on the part of the union, and in view of the obvious public importance of maintaining continuous service in our correctional and other institutions, the government resolved to take every step available by law to prevent the strike, to continue to urge peaceful means of resolving the dispute, and to develop contingency plans to maintain service in the event of unlawful action. Accordingly, on Friday, November 30, the government made application to the Supreme Court of Ontario for an injunction to restrain the union, its officers and representatives from taking action to bring about a strike, and applied to the Ontario Public Service Labour Relations tribunal for a declaration that the strike would be unlawful and for consent to prosecute the union and its officers.

On November 30, the Supreme Court of Ontario granted a temporary injunction until December 5, enjoining the union and its officers from authorizing and supporting strike action. On that date, a further application will be made to extend the injunction indefinitely.

On Saturday, December 1, the tribunal declared that the union had authorized an unlawful strike. The tribunal has fixed Wednesday, December 12 to hear the application for consent to prosecute. I am tabling for the information of the members copies of the injunction and the tribunal's declaration.

In the meantime, I instructed my staff to meet with the union, to pursue with the union the question of seeking a peaceful disposition of the matter and of granting unlawful strike activity. My staff met with the union continuously throughout the weekend, both through a mediator appointed by the tribunal and in direct negotiations, and continued to urge them to agree to a legal method of resolving the dispute and to call off the strike. Finally, in the early hours of this morning, the union left the negotiations and the strike was commenced at approximately five o'clock this morning.

I have also instructed my staff to remain available on a 24-hour basis to meet further with the union and urge the resolution of the dispute by legitimate means and to end the strike. My colleague the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) will be exploring the further legal steps that will be appropriate in order to ensure compliance with the law.

I must stress to the members of this House and to the union the government's abhorrence at the means chosen by the representatives of the public servants of this province to achieve what they apparently perceive as an important objective. Under our system of law, no responsible organization can choose simply to hold the public up to ransom and flout the law if it suits its purpose. Otherwise, any organization could adopt similar means without fear of any sanction and could follow the system prescribed by law only when it suits its purpose.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, December 5, senior law officers of the crown will be asking the Supreme Court of Ontario to continue indefinitely the interim injunction granted November 30 and to expand it to cover all employees in the bargaining unit and any other persons having notice of it.

At the same time I will be asking the Supreme Court of Ontario to commit to jail certain individuals named in the interim injunction for contempt of court as a result of what appear to be flagrant breaches of that injunction since its issuance on November 30.

On December 12, the first date made available by the Ontario Public Service Labour Relations Tribunal, the Civil Service Commission will be seeking the necessary consent of the tribunal to institute proceedings pursuant to section 42 of the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act for breaches of sections 25 and 29 of that act by all persons named in the interim injunction and all employees in the bargaining unit in respect of whom there are reasonable and probable grounds to support such a prosecution.

The Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act provides fines of up to $500 per day for any individual who contravenes the act and fines of up to $5,000 per day for the union. A strike at any time is prohibited by section 25 of the act; similarly, counselling, authorizing or supporting a strike is prohibited by section 29. Also, the Public Service Act provides penalties ranging from suspension without pay to dismissal, depending on the nature of the offence.

ORAL QUESTIONS

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Treasurer. It comes from an article that was in the Toronto Star of Saturday, December 1, 1979. The paragraph in question says, "Meanwhile, Ontario Treasurer Frank Miller says, 'If Ontario doesn't like Ottawa's method of redistributing oil money, the province will declare itself a have-not province and claim $466 million.'"

Since the Treasurer has repeatedly refused our recommendation that he do precisely that, since he and the Premier (Mr. Davis) have both said it would be entirely inappropriate for Ontario to take this equalization money, why has the Treasurer now, just as he did with interest rates, taken one position in the House and another position in front of the press?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I assume the quotation being alluded to, comes from the very lengthy discussion we had Friday morning, during my estimates debates. I have not personally seen the article, but I assume that is the place it came from.

At that time, I was responding to comments from the two critics opposite. I think if one takes a good look at Hansard—

Mrs. Campbell: None on your side.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Well, in fact, on Friday that was about it.

The issue was one of what Ontario would do with oil revenues and equalization payments. I believe it was the Liberal critic who had raised the question in his opening comments in a very sensible way. I explained that the Ontario position—if I can recall the gist of my remarks—had consistently been to try to separate the redistribution of oil revenues from the equalization payments formula. There was no question that the price of oil influenced the amount the federal government had to pay through the equalization formula because of its very nature and construction. However, we pointed out we had asked consistently that be discussed as a separate issue in the interest of the consumers of Canada, not just the Ontario consumers.

I said, looking forward to the future, one would have to start charting courses of action if that success wasn't achieved. If that were the case, if there were not a redistribution of revenues, it might be necessary to try to make the equalization formula assume a totally different role in the future in Canada. I believe all this will be pretty clearly explained by reading Hansard of Friday morning. I went into it at some length.

Mr. S. Smith: Will the Treasurer clarify for the House whether he will go after the $460-million-odd that we are owed under the present formula, apart from any possible renegotiation of an equalization formula for the future, which renegotiation undoubtedly will be based partly on whether some redistribution of funds occurs? Given the fact it looks as though no massive redistribution of funds is going to occur to Ontario, why doesn't the minister, at the very least for the first year, take the $460 million we are already owed and use it for low- and middle-income Ontario customers to cushion the blow of the higher oil prices for this coming year? Why doesn't he do something that simple?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Once upon a time, I used very simple language trying to explain a complex topic—and it was this one—to the Leader of the Opposition. I won't try to do it again. The issue is this: The formula commits the federal government to make payments, but the formula does not provide the federal government with revenue sources to make those payments. Under its traditional and available tax base, 43 per cent of any federal levy comes from Ontario.

We are going to keep fighting for a redistribution of the revenue taken from the consumers of this province to get it back to the consumers of this province, not to the government of this province. It is the consumers who need it. We do not want it extracted 43 per cent out of our consumers' pockets just to profit the Treasury, much as I would like to balance my budget.

Mr. S. Smith: The Treasurer must surely have heard what I said in the first place, and he must surely realize he is raising a red herring here. Does the Treasurer not agree that if the government of Canada were put in a position where it had to come up with those revenues, it might have some greater motivation to force a redistribution from Alberta, which at present it doesn't wish to do? Even if 43 per cent of it comes from us, it means that 57 per cent doesn't, and we would be the net gainers to that extent.

Rather than use it for the Treasury, let's make very clear that was never the suggestion. I said to use it to cushion the blow to middle-income and lower-income consumers. I made that very plain. If he heard the question—if he was listening instead of listening to advice from his right over there—he would know I said he should cushion the blow for these middle-income and low-income Ontarians who would be suffering because of our failure to prevent Joe Clark from raising the price of oil. Take the equalization money. We are entitled to it. Use it to cushion the blow for low-income Ontarians.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In spite of the allusion to the advice from my right, anybody who has had to deal with me in the caucus knows it is very difficult to give me advice from any point right of me.

I don't think the Leader of the Opposition has understood that the federal government intended to have retroactive legislation. With retroactive legislation still on the cards, there are just no odds in playing games until the decision is taken by Ottawa. Just as with any other retroactive legislation, we can go through all the red tape, all the cost of a bureaucracy, but until that decision is taken as to whether or not they are amending the bill as proposed last fall, it is academic to have this discussion.

REED MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Natural Resources: Would the minister like to clarify for the House just what is the status of the memorandum of understanding with Reed Limited, as has been asked by the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds), by myself and by the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid)?

Does the minister agree that, provided an environmental approval is given, Reed Limited and its successor, Great Lakes Forest Products Limited, have been given a licence to cut timber on the 19,000-square-mile area in question, provided, as I have said, environmental approval is given? If he doesn't agree, would he please clarify for this House what his understanding is as opposed to his staff's understanding?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted. I was in Thunder Bay last Wednesday and I was interviewed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and others in connection with that memorandum of understanding. I have a copy of it here. I find I was reported there as saying the proposed sale of Reed Paper's Dryden assets did not include that memorandum of understanding.

I also was quoted as saying, I believe, that I understood the purchaser, Great Lakes Forest Products Limited, was looking into the status of the understanding to see if it was legally part of the sale of the Reed assets to Great Lakes.

To correct that statement, I understand a Great Lakes company official has stated that one of the assets for which Great Lakes is negotiating is that memorandum of understanding.

I want to make it clear that the government has not seen the list of assets for which Great Lakes is negotiating. The subject of negotiations, after all, is a private matter, although anything to do with the memorandum of understanding, if it is acquired by Great Lakes, we will be notified about, because they would want to be sure we felt it might still be valid.

I will be happy to inform this House, when the sale has been completed, if the two parties have agreed that the memorandum be assigned to the assets acquired by Great Lakes. Let me, if I may, because it's germane, relate to the story I saw on the front page of Saturday's 50-cent Toronto Star—I don't normally get it; I get by with the Brockville Recorder and Times on Saturday at home.

Let me just make as a comment about that story that I had been in conversation with Ross Howard, under whose byline it appeared, after him trying to get me and me trying to get him for about two weeks. I would have to say it was really a story or a masterpiece of misunderstanding. What has been confused is the intent of the memorandum of understanding, which is hardly a secret agreement. It was tabled in this House on October 26, 1976, when the then Minister of Natural Resources made a statement about it. It defines a great many things; I won't attempt to read it all, but what I do want to say is that that memorandum of understanding does not sell or lease any tract of crown land to anybody. What it does is set out the conditions that must be met before the company—at that time, Reed Paper—would be issued a timber licence by the government on any part of the 19,000-square-mile area which is referred to in here as annex A.

In our opinion, that memorandum of understanding is assignable. It is assignable without the crown's consent. The acquisition of that memorandum of understanding by Great Lakes Forest Products, if consummated, does not give it the rights to the 19,000-square-mile tract of forest. Any company legally holding that memorandum of understanding would have certain rights and obligations under the agreement. Briefly, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, the company is responsible for obtaining proper environmental approval, undertaking feasibility studies and developing forest management plans according to proper and approved procedures.

On the other hand, the Ministry of Natural Resources is responsible for providing all the basic information regarding the tract. This includes the forest industry and forest stand operational cruise data—which, I may say, is complete—and the water, wildlife, recreational and other resource-based information as well. In addition, the Ministry of Natural Resources must prepare a land-use plan for the area using that information. This land-use plan will outline the land-use decisions that will determine whether an area is to be used for recreation, for trapping, for timber harvesting or whether it is to be used at all in a resource extraction sense, if it is found to be too sensitive to withstand such an impact.

In brief, the memorandum of understanding commits the government and the company to a series of mutually agreed upon steps, in a public—and I repeat, public—planning process that will provide the best economic and social benefits to the area.

Interjections.

Mr. Makarchuk: Having made it crystal clear, you now wish to conclude.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am sorry there are so many honourable members who aren't interested in this and who obviously haven't read the memorandum of understanding. I am very surprised at the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk), an ex-newspaperman—not dumbfounded but surprised.

The licensing of crown timber in the tract is predicated on the company deeming forest operations are feasible, on the one hand, and their following the processes outlined in the agreement.

Finally, we have not been advised by Reed Limited of any wish to terminate the agreement; nor has there been, to date, any cause for the crown to do so.

Mr. S. Smith: I take it, Mr. Speaker, you would like me to ask a brief supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: I thought it was a pretty comprehensive answer.

Mr. S. Smith: It was indeed. It may not have been comprehensible but it was comprehensive.

There are two major issues in question: whether that tract of land should be developed at all; and whether it should be developed by building a new pulpwood facility, as Reed was originally thinking of doing, or simply allowing Great Lakes to cut part of that for use in its proposed new mill in Dryden.

Given that it is a possibility they might want to cut some of that forest just to supply the mill in Dryden and not build any new facility, would the minister not agree that the three matters, upon which he says the company's plans are contingent before it could go ahead, really come down to only one—that the plans and the feasibility study are something to be done by the company to please itself—and that the only one the government has any approval power over is the environmental assessment?

Would the minister not agree, therefore, that the only thing standing in the way of Great Lakes being able to cut some of that timber for its Dryden mill is the environmental approval which the government has the final say over? If he does agree, what will he be doing to make sure that approval is not given?

Hon. Mr. Auld: May I read from the memorandum of understanding which perhaps the Leader of the Opposition has not read recently. On page six, clause (b) reads: "In the event that the company satisfactorily performs all its obligations under paragraphs two and four"—which are back at the beginning, where one might expect them—"subject to the Crown Timber Act, agrees to grant to the company a licence in respect to the tract having a period of 21 years commencing from the first day of April following the acceptance by the crown of the management and operating plans"—that includes where the plant goes and all that sort of thing, as I am advised—"and the feasibility report referred to in paragraph four, that will enable the company to cut a sufficient volume of conifers for processing in the manufactories referred to under paragraph three."

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am astonished by what the minister has to say. There clearly has been a change in government policy from the discussions this minister had with Great Lakes earlier when they asked for 5,000 square miles of the 19,000-square-mile tract to be committed to the Dryden mill and were turned down by the minister.

Can the minister not explain why it is that, over the course of the early summer, a request from Great Lakes was turned down and the minister was therefore actively negotiating for the future of the 19,000 square miles? It was at a time, on the second round, when there were active and intense negotiations over the limitation of Great Lakes's liability for mercury pollution and there were apparently no such discussions over whether or not Great Lakes would take control of the 19,000 square miles.

Why was there such deliberate neglect of this major issue, and why has the government apparently turned a blind eye to the future of the largest single unexploited tract of forest in northwestern Ontario?

[2:30]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Let me repeat what I read in the House a few weeks ago, if I may, Mr. Speaker, from my letter of November 5 to the Great Lakes president and chief executive officer, Mr. Charles Carter, who had written me—and I will read that letter, too, if the member wants—on November 2, the Friday before, about certain things I refer to here. My letter was on the Monday before the Treasurer's (Mr. F. S. Miller) statement. That was hand-delivered and stated:

"I have your letter of November 2 regarding your company's plans and aspirations vis-à-vis Reed Limited. This is indeed an exciting concept which, if carried through, could add substantially to the social and economic improvement of northwestern Ontario.

"As you appreciate from our early discussions, the difference between the projected needs for the facilities mentioned"—and I might interject here we are now talking about the Reed operations in Dryden, the existing kraft mill and the fine paper mill—"totalling 720,000 cunits and the fibre available on presently licensed land"—which may relate perhaps to part of the question the Leader of the Opposition asked a moment ago—"plus anticipated purchases totalling 575,000 cunits, cannot be provided except from the Reed expansion area.

"Several considerations related to the role and mandate of the Ministry of Natural Resources will have to be weighed. One of these relates to both the rights and obligations vested in the memorandum of understanding existing between Reed Limited and my ministry. Although the forest resources inventory and the operations survey have been completed, the land-use plan for the West Patricia area has not been completed and is not scheduled for completion until April 1981. It is on the basis of this plan that land-use conflicts will have to be resolved.

"Another concern is the mandate vested by cabinet in the Fahlgren commission on development north of 50 degrees north latitude. Finally, and by no means of least importance, we would want to consult with the people of the affected areas, including the native people. The environmental concerns I mention only in passing since these lie primarily within the mandate of my colleague, the Minister of the Environment.

"I should be glad to be in touch with you again as soon as we have had an adequate opportunity to examine these various considerations further."

I think that spells out pretty clearly there have been no commitments made to Great Lakes other than the financial commitments indicated by the Treasurer in his statement, of which I have a copy. I will be delighted to read that too.

Mr. Cassidy: I would like to pursue this matter with the Ministry of Natural Resources. I would like to ask him is it then his position now that Great Lakes Paper has first refusal on the 19,000-square-mile West Patricia tract provided it meets the various undertakings and conditions that were contained in that memorandum of understanding or, if not, what is the precise position? Can he give us a brief and succinct answer, rather than leading us all over the map?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I dislike speculating. Almost every time I do, I get myself into difficulties one way or another. Assuming that when Reed completes negotiations with Great Lakes it sells the memorandum of understanding or it is included in the assets, if that memorandum passes into the hands of Great Lakes, then the obligation which Reed had as far as that area is concerned will flow to Great Lakes and Great Lakes will be in exactly the same position as Reed was prior to the sale. That is not to say that that whole 19,000 square miles—let me break my rule and let me speculate that half of the 19,000 square miles is found to be suitable for forest production; then certainly an obligation of the government will be to look at the plans that are put forward after the environmental impact study has indicated the kind of processes proposed for use and the location of them.

It seems to me that one of the obligations of the government will be to deal with that first. I would be surprised if there weren't other woodlands available for others; but again, perhaps there isn't anything available for anybody.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the enormous public reaction to the government's secret wheeling and dealing, which led to the initial agreement on the West Patricia district with Reed Paper about four years ago, can the minister explain why the government should repeat the process almost precisely all over again, in wheeling and dealing, or in watching while wheeling and dealing was taking place between Reed and Great Lakes Paper, to the point where he now admits that Great Lakes has taken on the obligations and the rights of that memorandum of understanding? Why did the government not step in, in dealing with this particular question, and bring it back to the status quo ante, and why the Fahlgren commission was not even informed over whether Reed Paper, Great Lakes Paper or the ministry now has ultimate responsibility for the future disposition of the 19,000 square mile West Patricia tract?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any great secret wheeling and dealing that's been going on as far as Reed Paper is concerned for the last couple of years, other than the inquiries which have been received from other people in the business who were interested in acquiring the Reed operation in Dryden.

Certainly there has been no secret that this government was very anxious to see a viable paper industry of one kind or another continue in Dryden. There have been statements made by the Minister of Natural Resources, the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), the Premier (Mr. Davis), the Treasurer, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) and the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) about the necessity, as far as the economy of the northwest is concerned, in seeing that a viable operation be continued in Dryden.

As to the day-to-day inquiries in the business world, I don't suppose they all call the Financial Post whenever they're thinking of an acquisition or a sale. But as far as this government is concerned, it has been available for discussions with anybody in the wood industry who has shown concern.

Mr. Speaker: I think that answer is quite adequate.

Mr. Cassidy: Final supplementary: In order to remove the cloud which hangs over the future of the West Patricia tract, will the government exercise its right to terminate the memorandum of understanding after January 1, 1980, and wipe the slate clean, allow the various hearings of the Fahlgren commission and the forest plan due in April 1981 actually to come to pass, and then deal fairly and forthrightly with the decisions about where that timber should go, preferably by ensuring that the timber in the West Patricia is exploited under public ownership to make sure it goes into those areas where it can be most profitably used to create jobs in northwestern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I thought for a minute, Mr. Speaker, I had a half-minute answer. I have here a legal opinion from our solicitor—excuse me, that isn't the right one.

Mr. Breithaupt: Do you have another opinion?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Not the right opinion but I have the right subject. In essence, I am advised that the memorandum of understanding will not terminate on January 1, 1980, because of a number of steps. Reed made the first step required. Under the old legislation, or lack of it, Reed made an environmental impact study within the 60 days required. That study was not acceptable to the Ministry of the Environment which asked for further information. This has not been forthcoming for some other reasons, and the Ministry of Natural Resources has not carried out the inventory expected.

In other words, I am informed at the moment that there is no legal reason for us to terminate that memorandum of understanding as of January 1.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES DISPUTE

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet, relating to the efforts by the ministry to resolve the current strike of the jail guards across the province, and also related to our hope that the ministry would spend as much effort in trying to avoid or to resolve this strike as are the minister and his colleague, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), spending in trying to stamp down on the workers and on the union leaders involved.

In an effort to resolve this dispute and have the jail guards return to their jobs with dignity, would the ministry consider giving a separate vote on ratification of their contract to the jail guards, or would the ministry consider asking Justice Barry Shapiro, the judge who spent a year and a half investigating the Don Jail and who reported last year, to act as an arbitrator to come back within one or two months and report on the specific question as to whether or not there should be a separate category within which the jail guards would bargain?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The matter raised by the honourable member has not been considered. It is one which, having been advanced by the leader of the third party, the people from my ministry and those of union management might want to discuss during their negotiations.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Could the minister then acquaint the Legislature with what steps the government now intends to take to resolve the strike, apart from the efforts it is making to force the guards back to work and to put their leadership in jail, which are bound to have a harmful effect on labour-management relations within the prison service for a very long time to come? What steps is the minister taking in order to try to find a satisfactory resolution, after having been so inflexible over a period of five years that the guards have felt they have no other choice than to take a vote to strike, and then to act illegally and go on strike?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I think it is very clear in the statement I made today that there has been a lot of discussion, both through a mediator and through the parties themselves over the weekend, to resolve this matter. As I said, we stand ready at any time to discuss again with union management the impasse we are in at the present time.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: In his discussions during the weekend, did the minister pursue the idea of attempting to get from the union an undertaking they would not seek within the next four or five years a further category for negotiating purposes, and in that way have some sort of trade-off that could avoid the unfortunate situation that exists at the present time? If he has not, would the minister consider that proposal in his newest negotiations with the union, whenever they commence?

Hon. Mr. McCague: That is a matter that was advanced prior to the discussions on the weekend. On the one hand, there seems to be favour for doing that; on the other hand, there is a good deal of reluctance. It is very doubtful union management or government could commit each other to something they would not do over a five-year period.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the minister in his statement today urged the union to follow the system prescribed by law with respect to this particular dispute. Could he tell the Legislature just what the system prescribed by law is when it comes to the union's getting a separate bargaining category for the jail guards, since this is the only issue, and it is a simple issue, which is in dispute?

When the union presented two bargaining teams at the negotiations, they were effectively not recognized. The union doesn't have the right to have a separate vote for the jail guards, and it does not have the right to take the matter of a separate bargaining category to arbitration under the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act. Given all those facts, will the minister say what is the system prescribed by law for them to raise this matter, since they have been trying to raise it for five years and have been unable to find any means at all of getting meaningful bargaining or any flexibility from this ministry? That's why we have a strike right now.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I don't understand how the leader of the third party can say that. We very clearly offered to take this matter to a third party for arbitration.

Mr. Cassidy: You took five years to get to that point.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I think that was very fair. That matter is still on the table.

RAPE CRISIS CENTRES

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Justice. As a result of his meeting last week with representatives of the rape crisis centre, he knows that 12 of the 15 rape crisis centres in the province are in severe danger of closing within the next six months due to a lack of funding. He knows as well that these volunteer centres already receive community funding which just can't meet program expenses. Can he give the reasons why his government still refuses to grant funding to these rape crisis centres?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, last week I met with individuals representing the coalition of rape crisis centres across Ontario and at that time we discussed the problems involving funding. They made me aware of the crunch they will have in the new year relative to funding. We agreed to render an answer on it in due course.

At that time, it was the first I had been fully apprised of the details of the matter. They appreciated that and they made their presentation. We will be rendering an observation in due course.

I may say that the amount of money requested amounts to fully one third of the budget of the Justice policy secretariat.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister can indicate what he means by "due course." In arriving at his answer, would he also report to this House whether it is still a policy of St. Joseph's Hospital and the Queensway Hospital in Toronto to refuse medical examinations for rape victims? When checking with his colleague, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), would he ascertain if there are other hospitals in the province which also refuse to perform examinations as a matter of administrative practice?

Hon. Mr. Walker: In respect of the last two questions, I will look into those, as requested, and consult with the appropriate people. With respect to the matter of funding, we've indicated that an answer will be rendered in time for the conference of the coalition scheduled for January 18, 1980.

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, would the minister now give us at least a simple assurance that this government will continue to fund these centres, to see that they do not go out of operation, whether the money comes from his ministry, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Community and Social Services, or wherever?

Hon. Mr. Walker: No, Mr. Speaker. That's precisely what we're debating over the next while.

AIRCRAFT CONTRACT

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism dealing with the federal fighter airplane contract, in view of his very strange response on Friday in which he seemed to reverse his position about what benefits will flow to Ontario.

Has the minister been in touch with Jacques DesRoches, the president of the Air Industries Association of Canada, to find out what he meant when he told the Globe and Mail on the weekend. "From what we have seen, nothing is firm and much of what we are being offered we would be getting anyway"?

I want to tell the minister that Mr. DesRoches told my leader this morning that he's still not satisfied that the commitments are firm, and I would like to ask the minister how he feels about that situation now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I can only report again to the House that the federal government has assured us continually and up to date that when the final decision is made, those kinds of commitments that have been talked about and referred to will be firm commitments, of the scale and magnitude we've been discussing.

There really isn't anything to add to that. I would say to the honourable member that he is perhaps being lured in by the heavy advertising campaign that is being conducted by the two competitors, in an attempt by each of those competitors to prove that the commitments and offset offers by their respective opponents don't quite measure up to what they were said to be.

I can only repeat that notwithstanding that intense competition through the media for that important project, we have up-to-date firm commitments from the federal government that the commitments talked about, offered and understood by us to be there, will in fact be firm commitments.

Mr. Laughren: I wonder if the minister is being sucked in by his federal colleagues.

Could the minister tell us if he got hold of a copy of the confidential document over this past weekend? Does he understand that in that document it's made quite clear Canada will not gain the capability to do the maintenance on those planes, or to apply the technology to other high technology projects in the future? Is the minister really confident that Ontario industries are going to receive adequate benefits of this new technology when these contracts are finally negotiated?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't think anything will be served by my repeating the commitments we've obtained from the federal government. May I say we do not have a copy of the confidential document. We understand it is being held by the federal government in view of the very technical and important nature of some of the defence aspects that are contained in that confidential document.

If the honourable member has a copy of that confidential document he might be kind enough to send it over to me. If he doesn't have a copy of that confidential document—and I know he doesn't—then I presume it's the same source of information that provided his leader with the names of the two foreign competitors for the purchase of Eldorado Nuclear. He knew them so well a month ago but still has failed to send them over to me. I guess it is the same "deep throat" that is sending that information to him.

OPP SERVICES

Mr. G. Taylor: I have a question of the Solicitor General. Last Friday there appeared in the local newspaper in Barrie a statement by Superintendent Burkett of the Ontario Provincial Police detachment. In it he stated he was fighting 1980 crime with a detachment equipped for 1972. He added that the personnel there were overworked and tired, and that he was in need of more OPP officers.

Would the Solicitor General be seeking more personnel for this area so the people of the area, and those visiting the area, could be well served by the Ontario Provincial Police rather than putting up with a 1972 staff quotient?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I can't be specific about the OPP services in that part of the province, but I certainly share the superintendent's concern generally in relation to the OPP. As a matter of fact, the member was kind enough a moment ago to send me a copy of the clipping, which I passed on to the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller).

HYDRO NUCLEAR PLANT PLANS

Mr. Riddell: The Minister of Energy (Mr. Welch) was in for a brief moment but in the event he is listening outside I'll put the question to the Premier knowing that he's always interested in Ontario Hydro's plans and progress.

I am referring to a letter written by Landawn Shopping Centres Limited located in Toronto. One paragraph of the letter reads: "I am sure you are aware that the Ontario government will soon be starting construction on the Bayfield nuclear power plant which is located 15 miles from Exeter. The Bruce nuclear plant helped spur housing in both Port Elgin and Kincardine to unbelievable proportions—to the point that Zehr's put supermarkets in both Port Elgin and Kincardine. Both stores are doing exceptionally well. The Bruce nuclear plant employs 8,000 people, and the Bayfield plant will have approximately the same number of people.

"The population of Exeter is approximately 4,000 people with"—

Mr. Speaker: "Is the Premier aware . . ."
